After D's death his widow got herself substituted in his place and in execution of the decree took possession of the property and subsequently a deed was executed between herself and the two other brothers P and R in terms that the property belonged to the three brothers and she as the widow of the eldest was entitled to two annas and the remaining 14 annas were divided between her and the two brothers in equal shares as also the mesne profits. The* durputni was thereafter sold in execution of a money-decree and ultimately passed into the hands of one A. On 21st May 1907 the two brothers P and R by a conveyance assigned their share of the costs and mesne profits under the decree obtained by D to M, a benamdar of A, and on the 10th June 1907 D's widow by another conveyance assigned her share of the mesne profits and costs to A. On 22nd February 1909 A applied for execution of the decree and the application was admitted by the Subordinate Judge but under orders of the District Judge in appeal the application was returned for amendment on 4th March 1911 and amended on the same day. On appeal the High Court directed that this application presented by A should be treated as an application under Or. 20, r. 12 and remanded the case whereupon the amended application was placed on the record to be dealt with under Or. 20, r. 12 and A was substituted on the record in place of the original Plaintiff:

Held—That the application should be treated as having been made on the date on which it was originally presented and that date being within 3 years of the dates of the conveyances assigning mesne profits and costs to A the application was not barred even if Art. 181 of the Limitation Act was applicable.

That even if the application was considered as having been made on the date on which it was amended the right of the assignee to apply for substitution in a pending suit is a right which accrues from day to day and is therefore not barred by limitation.

That an application in a pending suit for ascertainment of mesne profits is not barred by the three years' rule of limitation contained in Art. 181 corresponding to Art. 178 of the old Limitation Act. The law has not been changed by the new Limitation Act or the new Code of Civil Procedure.

That even if P and R were considered as assignees from D's widow the position was that A was an assignee from D's widow who was a party to the suit with respec to one-third of the property and an assignee from P and R who in their turn were assignees from D's widow with respect to two thirds, and Or. 22, r. 10 was applicable to an application made by a person who has not obtained an assignment directly from a party to the suit but who has obtained an assignment derivatively from a party to the suit.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 29th of April 1912 against an order of Babu M. M. Dutt, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Bankura, dated the 20th of March 1912.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Umakali Mukherjee, Mohini Mohun Chatterjee and Peary Mohun Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Babus Harendra Narayan Mitra, Hirendra Nath Ganguly and Biraj Mohun Majumdar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Appeal arises out of an application by the Respondent, Ashutosh Ray, for ascertainment of mesne profits after being substituted in the place of the original Plaintiff in a suit for possession and mesne profits. The facts are these:—The Appellants who are the descendants of one Raghunath Panja are the putnidars of Mehal Lot Arjunbari. It appears that the durputni interest in the said Lot was purchased by three brothers, Dhon Krista, Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa, in the name of Defendant No. 1.

(2) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 420: s. c. 12 C. W. N. 393 (1908).

Raghunath sued the Defendant No. 1 for rent of the durputni and in execution purchased it himself. Dhon Krista alone thereupon brought a suit on the 25th October 1895, for recovery of possession of the durputni and for mesne profits. It was decreed by the Court of first instance on the 23rd November 1896. On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit. But on second appeal the High Court remanded the case and on remand the District Judge affirmed the decree of the lower Court on the 3rd January 1902. The Appellants thereupon preferred an appeal to the High Court which was dismissed on the 25th May 1904. Then the Appellants preferred an appeal to the Privy Council which was also dismissed on the 15th May 1907. Shortly after the decree made by the District Judge after remand, Dhon Krista having died, his widow Prosanno Moyee got herself substituted in his place and in execution of the decree took possession of the property on the 12th February 1902. After the decree was passed by the High Court a deed (mimansa-patra) was executed between Dhon Krista's widow Prasanno Moyee and his two brothers Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa in which it was stated that the property belonged to the three brothers, but that Dhon Krista being the eldest she was entitled to get two annas to which her husband was entitled as the jesthansa (eldest brother's share) and the remaining 14 annas were divided between her and the two brothers in equal shares as also the mesne profits. In the meantime the durputni was sold in execution of a money-decree. One Mrigendra Nath Mandal purchased 10 as. as being the shares of Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa on the 4th March 1907, and one Haradhan Chatterjee, on the 25th April 1907, purchased 6 annas as Prasanno Moyee's interest. Mrigendra Mandal sold the interest purchased by him to Haradhan, who in his turn executed a conveyance in favour of Ashutosh in respect of the entire property for a sum of Rs. 14,999, so that Ashutosh claims to be entitled to the entire property. On the 21st May 1907, Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa by a conveyance assigned 10 as. share of the costs and mesne profits under the decree obtained by Dhon Krista to Mrigendra Mandal, a benamdar of Ashutosh Ray, for Rs. 4,400, and Prasanno Moyee by another conveyance, dated the 10th June 1907, assigned her share of the mesne profits and costs to Ashutosh Ray for Rs. 4,480. On the 12th February 1909, Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa executed another deed by which the 10 annas share mentioned in the conveyance of the 21st May 1907, was corrected into 10 as. 13 gundas and odd.

On the 22nd February 1909, Ashutosh applied for execution of the decree. The application was admitted by the Subordinate Judge on the 23rd June 1910, but on appeal the Judge sent back the case for a finding whether the application was according to law. On the 28th January 1911, the Subordinate Judge found that the application was not in accordance with law, and accordingly returned his finding to the Appellate Court. On the 22nd February 1911, the Appellate Court sent back the record to the first Court directing the application to be returned to the applicant for amendment. On the 4th March 1911, it was returned for amendment and it was amended on the same date.

On appeal to the High Court it was held that the application was not an application for execution of a decree but was one in a pending suit in order that the final decree for mesne profits may be made therein, and that in fact the application was one under r. 12, Or. XX of the Code. Consequently what the assignee of the Plaintiff ought to have done was to get himself substituted in the suit itself and he ought to have invited the Court to assess mesne profits as directed in the preliminary decree of the 3rd January 1902. It was brought to the notice of the High Court that the decree-holder had carried out the order of the Court and amended the petition which he had originally presented. The High Court then said as follows:—"In order to validate the proceedings it is necessary that the matter should go back to the Court of the first instance, that the application presented by the Respondent should be treated as an application under r. 12, Or. XX of the Code, and that on the basis thereof mesne profits should be assessed by the Court as directed in the original decree of the 3rd January 1902. As the application has been made by an alleged assignee of the original Plaintiff, it would be open to the Court to consider whether the application can be entertained at his instance." On the 15th July 1911, the Subordinate Judge made the following order:—"In accordance with the order of the High Court, dated the 2nd June 1911, the amended application for ascertainment of mesne profits in execution case No. 45 of 1909, is placed on the record of this case to be dealt with under Or. XX, r. 12." Notice was issued to the Defendants to show cause why the applicant should not be substituted on the record in the place of the original Plaintiff and why further proceedings in the case should not go on at his instance. Objections were taken by the Appellants but they were overruled by the Subordinate Judge and they have appealed to this Court, and the following contentions have been raised on their behalf.

First, that the application for substitution by Ashutosh Ray not having been made within three years from the dates of the conveyances, namely, the 21st May and 19th June 1907, it was barred by Art. 181 of the Limitation Act: secondly, that Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa, two of the assignors, not having got themselves substituted in the suit, Ashutosh cannot be substituted in the suit: thirdly, that a claim for mesne profits cannot be transferred: and, fourthly, that Ashutosh Ray was not the real purchaser and having regard to all the circumstances of the case, leave ought not to be granted to him to carry on the proceedings for ascertainment of mesne profits.

As regards the first contention it appears that the Court below treated the original application for execution which was filed on the 22nd February 1909 (which was subsequently amended on the 4th March 1911) as the date of the application made in the suit and that date being within 3 years of the date of the conveyances, namely, 21st May 1907 and 19th June 1907, the Court below held that the application was not barred even if Art. 181 was applicable to the case. The order of the High Court does not expressly state, whether the date on which the application was originally presented or the date on which it was amended, should be treated as the date of an application under Or. XX, r. 12 of the Code But if the application for execution of the decree was to be treated as an application for ascertainment of mesne profits under the order of the High Court, we do not see any reason why it should not be treated as an application for such purpose when it was originally presented on the 22nd February 1909. The original application also contained the prayers for substitution and for assessment of mesne profits. Under the circumstances we think that application should be treated as having been made on the date it was originally presented, i.e., on the 22nd February 1909, and that date being within 3 years of the dates of the conveyances, the application is not barred even if Art. 181 of the Limitation Act is applicable. But even if the application in the suit be considered as having been made on the 4th March 1911, on which date the application was amended, we think that the right of the assignee to apply for substitution in a pending suit is a right which accrues from day to day, and is therefore not barred by limitation. So far as an application in a pending suit for ascertainment of mesne profits is concerned, it is not barred by three years' limitation contained in Art. 181, corresponding to Art. 178 of the old Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The Full Bench decision in the case of Puran Chand v. Rai Radha Kishen (1) is conclusive upon the point, and we do not think that the law has been changed by the new Limitation Act or the new Code of Civil Procedure.

The next contention on behalf of the Appellant is that assuming that an application by the assignee for substitution can be made more than 3 years after the date of assignment, such an application cannot be made when the assignor is not himself a party to the suit. In the present case, two of the assignors, namely, Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa were never parties to the suit. Their elder brother Dhon Krista alone was the Plaintiff and on his death his widow Prasanno Moyee was substituted in his place. It is contended, therefore, that the Respondent Ashutosh Ray cannot be substituted when his assignors Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa were not parties to the suit. It appears however that Lot Arjunbari was a joint property of the three brothers, Dhone Krista, Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa: and Dhone Krista being the eldest member of the family brought the suit, and he therefore may be taken to have represented the other two brothers also. The mimansa-patra executed by Prasanno Moyee, Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa shows that the property belonged to the three brothers and it appears that the Defendants also admitted the fact in their plaint in Rent Suit No. 7 of 1907. Even if Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa are considered as assignees from Prasanno Moyee, the position is that Ashutosh is an assignee from Prasanno Moyee who is a party to the suit with respect to one-third and an assignee from Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa who, in their turn, are assignees from Prasanno Moyee with respect to two-thirds. We do not think that Or. XXII, r. 10 is inapplicable to an application made by a person who has not obtained an assignment directly from a party to the suit but who has obtained an assignment derivatively from a party to the suit.

The third question is whether a claim for mesne profits can be transferred. A right to sue for damages cannot be transferred: but in the present case the claim for mesne profits had already merged in a judgment before the assignment. The right under the judgment was, therefore, assignable, although the original cause of action was not. The amount of mesne profits had not been ascertained but the judgment declared the Plaintiff entitled to mesne profits, and it only remained to be completed by ascertaining the amount of the mesne profits. We are, therefore, of opinion that the right to the mesne profits under the decree was assignable.

The last question is whether Ashutosh Roy is a real purchaser or merely benamdar for the assignors, and whether the assignment was a bonâ fide one and for consideration.

The kobala executed by Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa purported to be for a consideration of Rs. 4,400 and that by Prasanno Moyee for Rs. 4,486; Rs. 900 is said to have been paid in cash to Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa and Rs. 1,303 to Prasanno Moyee and the balance was to be paid to certain creditors mentioned in the kobalas after accurate information of success of the case in the Privy Council was received.

As regards the payment of Rs. 1,303 to Prasanno Moyee there is an endorsement in the kobala by the Registrar that the said sum was paid in his presence to her and the receipt thereof was acknowledged by her. Then there is a registered Ekrar by Prasanno Moyee in which it is stated that a portion of the debts assigned over had been paid by the assignee, but that the other creditors having claimed more than the amount assigned for the payment of their debts, the balance in the hand of the assignee, namely, Rs. 1,373-9 was received by her. As for the consideration of the kobala by Pran Krista and Ram Kalpa, they admit in their deposition that they received Rs. 900 in cash on the date of the kobala and Rs. 1,166 subsequently, and the balance is said to have been paid to their creditors. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment has pointed out that the money said to have been paid by Ashutosh to the creditors exceeds the amount which he undertook to pay. That certainly is suspicious: Ashutosh admittedly has account books and they have not been produced. The assignors were indebted at the time. Ashutosh was the son-in-law of Ram Kalpa. Some only of the debts were mentioned in the kobala and a few of them are said to have been paid and the balance of the consideration money is said to have been returned to the assignors on the ground that the creditors refused to accept payment. This story of return of a large portion of the consideration money has not been believed by the lower Court.

It was stated in the kobala by Prasanno Moyee that the assignee was to pay the creditors after accurate information of the success in the Privy Council was received. The amount of mesne profits claimed by Ashutosh is about 2 lacs of rupees and a portion of Lot Arjunbari together with the claim for mesne profits and costs of the case up to the High Court and the costs which might be awarded by the Privy Council together with the arrears of rents due from the tenants of Lot Arjunbari and share of crops were purchased by Ashutosh for Rs. 8,800 odd. But the mesne profits have not yet been assessed. The assignors appear to have been in straitened circumstances and the amount claimed by Ashutosh (viz. 2 lacs of rupees) probably is a grossly exaggerated one, having regard to the fact that the property itself of which the mesne profits are claimed was valued at Rs. 1,436 only. It is true Pran Krista states that at the time of the sale they estimated the wasilat at a lac or a lac and a half rupees. But it appears to have been a mere guess and not an estimate upon any basis, the difference between the two figures being fifty thousand rupees. However that may be, we have to see whether we can refuse to give effect to the assignment.

If the transaction is considered as benami, there is nothing in law to prevent a benamdar from applying to the Court for ascertainment of mesne profits.

As there are not sufficient materials on the record to show the extent of the entire debts of the assignors, and how far they are secured, we are unable to say whether the assignments were in fraud of creditors. Having regard to the fact that at least a part of the consideration is proved to have been paid and that the assignors admit receipt at any rate of a part of the consideration we do not think that the Appellants can challenge the assignment on the ground that the whole of the consideration was not paid to the assignors by Ashutosh. That is a matter between the assignors and the assignee, and so far as the inadequacy of the consideration goes, that is also a question between the assignors and the assignee (see Bhagwat Dayal v. Debi Dayal (2), and the assignors have put in a petition to give effect to the assignment.

Under these circumstances we are unable to hold that effect should not be given to the assignment or that his application for substitution should be refused.

The Appeal is accordingly dismissed We make no order as to costs.

Let the records be sent down to the lower Court without delay, if there is no objection.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

High Court Long Vacation and other Holidays.

The Council of Judges in England have agreed to the curtailment of the Long Vacation to two months or ten weeks, as it may annually be fixed at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor. But the Judges have imposed a condition that the number of the Judges of the King's Bench Division should be maintained at eighteen. This proposal is evidently directed against the Judges being overtaxed with work by reason of the curtailment of the Long Vacation. We have noticed in a previous issue that the holidays observed in the Calcutta High Court are altogether about six weeks less in the aggregate than in the High Court of Judicature in England. Even after the length of the Long Vacation is curtailed in England, the High Court in England will enjoy much longer holidays than we do here, by reason of the Christmas, Easter and Whitsuntide vacations being much longer in duration than the corresponding vacations here.

With regard to the Long Vacation as observed in the Calcutta High Court we have only one suggestion to offer. If the vacation commences every year on the second Friday or, in other words, about the middle of September, as is provided for in the Rules and Orders on the Original Side of the High Court (see Hechle's R. & O., p. 131), and the Court reopens in the third week of November, junior members of the Bar, Vakils, Attorneys and their clerks, who have to remain on duty till the commencement of the executive Poojah holidays, will get more real respite from work. Business becomes slack after the Dashera and it is only after the Durga Poojah that the classes referred to can avail themselves of the Long Vacation. In this connection we may also mention that a holiday for at least one day should be observed on account of the Ratha Jatra, which in Bengal and Orissa is as important and popular a festival as Durga Poojah and the Dole Jatra which is certainly of very ancient origin.

Saturday Sittings.

We have always been opposed to Saturday sittings. We are glad to observe that the legal journals in England are also of the same opinion. In fact it is being said that the Saturday sittings are merely observed in form and hardly any important business or progress is made on that day. We have always objected to Saturday sittings on the ground of costs being incurred by parties without any corresponding progress being made at such sittings. The Judges and the members of the Bar also avail themselves of an off-day in the week for writing judgments or reading the papers. But in exceptional cases such as pending criminal trials or matters of urgency a departure from the rule is certainly commendable.

Contempt of Court.

We have always been of opinion that the English law of contempt has to be accepted in this country with considerable qualifications. In England even civil cases are tried in the King's Bench and the Probate and Divorce Divisions before a jury. Comments therefore on pending cases which are likely to prejudice a party in the eyes of a jury come under the category of contempt of Court. But when a case or an appeal is being heard before a Judge or bench of Judges, they cannot be supposed to pay any heed to any matter or comment published in the newspaper press since they are supposed not to take notice of any matter outside the record or not disclosed at the trial The contingency of prejudicing the trial in the Amrita Bazar case (17 C. W. N. 1253), therefore, seemed to us to be too remote and the decision of the Calcutta High Court in that case, although it proceeded on other grounds as well, seemed to us to be unexceptionable on this ground. An article in the English Law Journal of the 7th February last commenting on the recent committal of the Managing Director of a Society paper for comments in connection with a pending divorce proceeding, takes a very sensible view of the law relating to contempt. We have taken the liberty of reproducing the article in another column especially as the view expressed there is in substantial agreement with the view often expressed by us in these columns.

The South African deportation is continuing to engage the attention of the legal profession in England and the following extract from the English Law Journal fore-shadows some litigation in its connection at which some interesting questions of constitutional and civil law are likely to come up before the English Law Courts for decision.

The South African Government is cheerfully engaged in raising as many as possible of the yet undecided points in constitutional law, and to the jurist many fascinating problems arise out of its latest action. The deportation of ten Labour leaders, without trial under martial law or under the ordinary law of the country, actually carried out by decree of the Executive while a judge had cognizance of this proposed illegal step is certainly a very grave infringement both of constitutional law and of the respect due to civil Courts. But, so far as the South African Government is directly concerned, no doubt a local Act of Indemnity passed by the Union Parliament at the Cape will relieve them of all liability. But how stands it with the owners and master of the good ship Umgeni, which took the exiles on board and is carrying them on a journey to London? This acceptance of the agitators on board against their will is an assault and false imprisonment; as such it is both a tort and a crime. The Umgeni is a vessel of the Natal Line and flies the English flag; in other words, she is British territory and, as was decided in Davidson v. Hill, only a few years ago (1901), the English Courts have jurisdiction to try all torts committed on board such a ship. If, then, the master and his owners are sued in England, have they any answer? A local Act of Indemnity cannot protect the master except so far as his illegal actions took place in a South African port or within the territorial waters—i.e., three miles off the South African shores; for on the high seas the Union Parliament has no jurisdiction. But the false imprisonment is a continuing tort; it is not completed with the first act of assault, but with the final act of detention preceding release. Hence a tort has been committed on the high seas, and so is outside any Act of Indemnity of the Cape Legislature. Again, can the master of the ship plead duress—that his hand was forced by the South African Government? Duress is a question of fact, and, according to the Times, there is reason to believe that the ship was specially chartered to the Cape Government by its Natal agents for this service—in which case any plea of duress is beside the question. But even in the absence of such an agreement, and even if the master acted under pressure, such conduct as is suggested on the part of the South African Executive seems scarcely 'duress' sufficient to excuse a tort or a crime. The whole situation promises a series of interesting problems in practical jurisprudence for the edification of our Courts.

HINDU LAW V. HINDU SOCIETY.

We have frequently had occasion to complain of the rigidity imparted to Hindu law by the manner in which many of its rules have been interpreted and enforced by Anglo-Indian law Courts, since the establishment of British rule in India. The distinction between rules of law proper and directions of merely ritualistic significance was until recently not clearly apprehended, and some rules of the latter description hardened into rules of law before the Courts became accustomed to distinguishing rules which are merely "recommendatory" from those which are "mandatory." Nowhere in Hindu law has this process operated to greater prejudice to the Hindu community than in the law relating to intermarriage amongst castes. Although ancient Indian history is replete with instances of such intermarriages and although the only Mahomedan dynasty which endured in India for any considerable period owed its strength chiefly to its intermarriage with Hindu royal houses, these instances have failed to impress themselves as precedents in Anglo-Indian Jurisprudence, and no Anglo Indian Court has had the boldness, in the absence of special customs, to recognise the legality of intermarriages between Hindus and Mahomedans or even between members of the principal Hindu castes. Marriages amongst sub castes have been recognised only with reluctance. Thus it has come to pass that at the very moment when western education working on individuals within the castes is making for further expansion and tending to snap the bonds of orthodoxy, the decisions of the law Courts have had the opposite tendency of tightening these very bonds from outside.

The position thus created is an untenable one and Hindu society has only been paving its way to annihilation by waging a war against time and tide. It would not even so much as suffer those who may marry outside their own caste call themselves Hindus. It may socially outcaste them but what social, legal or moral right has it to deny to such couples their just right of being called husband and wife? It is contrary to all rational principles of morality, law and justice that when persons, between whom no question of consanguinity or prohibited degree can possibly arise, become wedded even by the most solemn and sacred rites of matrimony, they should be condemned to a life of concubinage and their children branded with the ignominy of illegitimacy, because they are supposed to offend against some fanciful rules of Hindu social system which in the past were more respected in their breach than in their observance. Let those who wish to make out that the modern Hindu law is something unchangeable like the law of the ancient Medes and Persians persevere in their own suicidal isolation. But what right have they to put those who happen to differ from them outside the pale of civil law and deny them even the most elementary and fundamental civil rights? Had our forefathers been as short-sighted as the wiseacres of to-day, the dissenting Hindu sects, such as the Vaisnabas in Bengal or the Sikhs in the Punjab, would have long before this been lost to the Hindu community, and that would have obliterated the glory of Hinduism from the face of the earth.

But though the blind and unreasoned orthodoxy of modern Hindu society may die hard and deliberately discard from it the vitalizing forces of nature and its moral laws, yet it is powerless to beat back the world-force which invests it on all sides and sooner or later, (and the sooner the better), it will have to make truce with the latter, by the recognition of its dissenting members' civil rights, for its very existence. There is enough of internal evidence to show that it is already powerless to resist the forces operating more or less slowly but surely within society itself.

Bhaiya Sher Bahadur v. Bhaiya Ganga Bukhsh, the Privy Council case recently reported in our columns (ante, p. 401), is an instance in point. There a Hindu of position and influence, a Raja of Chhatri caste who had a son born to him of a Mahomedan mistress, formed a resolution to get him admitted into society as a Hindu and as the first step towards accomplishment of the scheme, arranged that the infant "got his suck from Hindu women." The boy was given a Hindu name (Jang Bahadur Singh) and brought up in all respects as a Hindu and when only 15 years of age solemnly married according to Hindu rites to a lady belonging to a very high caste Chhatri family. The son too appeared to have wholeheartedly followed up the father's efforts by making a parade of his Hindu predilections. He ostentatiously wore the tilak on his forehead, and regularly participated in the numerous rites and ceremonies of the Hindu religion. He wore the sacred thread and even "kept a Hindu cook to cook his food." But inspite of all this, he yielded to the weakness of his Hindu father, by himself keeping a Mahomedan mistress by whom he had several illegitimate issues.

By his Chhatri wife he had a son, and it is noteworthy that when the lady died he performed her obsequies according to Hindu ceremonies. He married again and this time too a Chhatri wife by whom he had a daughter. The Raja in whose lifetime all these children were born, made a testamentary disposition of certain properties for the maintenance of Jang Bahadur (whom he described in the document as "born of an unmarried mahal") and his "aulad"—an expression which, the Courts in India and the Privy Council agreed, meant "legitimate issue." Therefore the question arose whether Jang Bahadur's son Gunga Bukhsh by the Chhatri wife was legitimate and as such entitled to the legacy on his father's death or whether Gunga Bukhsh was only entitled to share equally with Jang Bahadur's other children by his Mahomedan mistress.

The Subordinate Judge, himself a Hindu, boldly grappled with the question, but the difficulties he had to face might well have made a less courageous heart than his quail. The marriage being in form a Hindu marriage, the two parties to it, according to the rules laid down by the Courts, had to be found to be Hindus, and not merely Hindus but Hindus belonging to the same caste. Was Jang Bahadur a Hindu when he married? The Subordinate Judge held, no doubt, upon the authority of the researches embodied in the works of Sir Alfred Lyall, Sir George Campbell, Sir Monier Williams, Col. Todd of Rajasthan fame and other writers (direct judicial authority being wanting) that "Hindu society is a vast hospitable mansion which has opened its doors to all comers." Having regard to this and to the laxity in matrimonial alliances amongst the Chhatris in particular, he found that Jang Bahadur had by treatment and user, so to speak, succeeded in becoming a Hindu. But he had still to get over the principle laid down by Mr. Justice Banerjee in his book on Marriage and Stridhan that Hindu law has obligatory force only on those who are Hindus by birth as well as by religion. Jang Bahadur though he was suckled by Hindu foster mothers was not born a Hindu. In fact according to Mahomedan law he was ushered into the world as a Mahomedan.

One other difficulty which apparently faced the Subordinate Judge was that of assigning Jang Bahadur to some caste. But this he disposed of by stating on the authority of Col. Todd and other historians that even the proudest of the Kshatriya princes of the Udaipur family, the oldest of all the royal families in the world, needed a Christian princess to revitalize its blue Aryan blood. Who amongst the cultured Hindus of to-day would seriously dispute the Scythian origin of Rajputs and the intermixture at any rate of non-Hindu and even Mahomedan blood amongst them? The Kathiwar princes descended from Mahomedan mothers to this day are regarded as Chhatris by caste and freely intermarry in Rajput or Chhattri families. The learned Subordinate Judge was in such view thoroughly justified in discarding scholastic refinements and viewing facts boldly in the light of "justice, equity and good conscience." In the result he very properly held that the marriages of Jang Bahadur with his Chhatri wives were legal Hindu marriages and that the law of his choice, the Hindu Law, applied and the son of this marriage succeeded to his properties according to so much of the Hindu law as was applicable to the case. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge thus marks an advance over that of Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim who decided in a Madras case that a reconvert from Christianity to Hinduism became a Sudra and that her marriage with a Hindu Sudra was valid.

It is to be regretted that both the Judicial Commissioner's Court and the Privy Council found it unnecessary to record any definite decision in this connection. They held that by his Will, the Raja meant to designate as beneficiary that one of the issues of Jang Bahadur whom he wished to be considered as his legitimate issue. It is satisfactory to find however that their Lordships' inclination was distinctly in favour of holding with the Sub-Judge that a person not born a Hindu may become a Hindu and may validly contract a marriage according to Hindu rites with a person born a Hindu. On this point their Lordships observed: "Sir Robert Finlay insists that the law for many centuries has been that a Hindu must be born not made, and he cited several authorities in support of that proposition. On the other hand, the treatises referred to by the Subordinate Judge appear to tend in an opposite direction and the facts of this case show that on this matter of marriage the rules both of Hinduism and of caste were not in this instance at all events, strictly applied." Referring to the evidence of several Hindu witnesses who deposed that they would not eat with Jang Bahadur, or take betel leaves from him or recognise him as a member of that caste or of the Hindu religion—and to the argument that the Subordinate Judge had not paid sufficient attention to this evidence, their Lordships observed that from the mere fact that the Subordinate Judge had commented on this evidence at great length, it was unreasonable to conclude that he had not fully considered it. Taken with the facts found in the case their Lordships' view, though inconclusive, is yet strongly in favour of the Subordinate Judge's view that Jang Bahadur's marriage with a Chhatri lady was a valid marriage and the issue of the marriage was a legitimate one as would appear from the following extract from their Lordships' judgment:—

"No doubt the Maharaja did not attend the ceremony himself. He allowed certain priests to perform for him those ceremonies properly performable on such occasions by a father, but the marriage cannot but be regarded as a somewhat bold attempt to force, as far as possible, the son's entrance into the ranks of a high (twice-born) caste, and it might well be that the father, as the Subordinate Judge thought, may have absented himself from the ceremony from motives of prudence. On the other hand it is difficult to believe that all the parties concerned, Sheo Dial with his own sons and his daughters to get married, the Maharajah with his position and distinction, the priests with their duties to their religion and office, and all those who assisted at the ceremony with their notions of what was due to their creed, would have promoted, or taken part in an elaborate public function if they knew that it could at best create only a relation of permanent concubinage, without hope or prospect of elevation into a worthier and more respected state."

Their Lordships' opinion on the legitimacy of the issue of this marriage was also, reading their Lordships' judgment between the lines, distinctly in favour of the view advanced by the learned Subordinate Judge. If Ganga Bukhsh had been named by the testator or if there was anything definite in the Will to point to him and to no one else, we would have been disposed to regard this decision as being based on a mere construction of a Will. But their Lordships say that the only indication given as to who was to succeed Jang Bahadur as proprietor had to be ascertained by the expression "on whom the right may devolve." The estate could not possibly devolve except on a legitimate issue. The use of the expression "aulad" also meant as much. So the only answer to Sir Robert Finlay's argument was to point to somebody who in the contemplation of the Hindu law would be legitimate. The intention of the testator could not make one, in the eye of the law, legitimate if he was not so in fact. But their Lordships held that as a matter of fact "the testator must have had in his mind some law or rule which would apply to fix the succession. What law could this high caste Hindu possibly have had in mind for such purpose other than the Hindu law? That law, however, in the matter of succession to property, takes no account, in the three higher classes, of illegitimate descendants." Thus in fact their Lordships' decision amounts to declaring Gunga Bukhsh as legitimate, and we have no hesitation in endorsing it as a very just and proper decision.

It should be observed in conclusion that Ganga Bukhsh, the son of Jang Bahadur, and his step-sister by Jang Bahadur's second Chhatri wife had, long before the case came before the Courts, been accepted as good Chhatris and had without objection married into respectable Chhatri families. Their status as lawfully born Chhatri Hindus had been established in fact however it may be open to question from the point of view of what is supposed to be strict law. And the case of Ganga Bukhsh is not singular in this respect. Cases of this kind only illustrate with greater force the modern theory of jurisprudence that the "law as it is should always give way, as it does give way in every progressive society, to law as it should be."

What we have always maintained with regard to cases of this nature is that if parties purport to marry in Hindu form and intend that the issues should be treated as legitimate and that in the matter of bequest or succession they should be governed by rules of Hindu law, the Court should hold, as it has in this case, that they are so governed. Hindu society may or may not admit them within its sacrosanct precincts and the members of that society may or may not intermarry or interdine with such dissenting members but it can advance no valid reason for puttiug them outside the pale of civil law. We also believe it to be consonant with the principle of toleration, which has been characteristic of Hindu society at all times, not to deny them the title of Hindus although it may keep them at arm's length in the matter of social privileges for a time and that too only until they have formed a class by themselves or been admitted by any of the recognised classes as belonging to it. But the denial of such social amenities by a section of the society would certainly be no justifiable ground for withholding from them the most elementary and fundamental civil rights to which they are entitled as citizens.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Great uncertainty has long prevailed as to the precise limits of the offence known as contempt of Court when committed by the publication in the press of matter affecting the trial of a pending action. It is generally agreed that the publication of comments which tend to prejudice the fair trial of any action is a serious contempt, but three points remain in great doubt. First, as to what trials the principle extends. Criminal trials, of course, are protected; so are civil trials by jury whether in the King's Bench or the Probate Division of the High Court, but how far comment is forbidden upon pending litigation in Chancery or before a judge, unassisted by a jury, in other Divisions, is still not a settled point. On an application last Tuesday in the case of Leslie-Melville v. Leslie-Melville, Platt and Fitzwilliam, a pending divorce trial, Mr. Justice Horridge (sitting as an additional judge of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division) applied this principle to a cause entered in the special jury list of the Divorce Court. Secondly, to what extent is the publication of collateral matter about a party to a pending action, without direct reference to the subject matter of the litigation, a contempt? In the case in question a society newspaper published a 'smart paragraph' about a peer well known to be the co-respondent in the pending divorce suit, and gave a picturesque account of his career certainly calculated to impress any juryman who happened to read the article with an unfavourable view of that nobleman's moral standard. Mr. Justice Horridge held that such an article, being undoubtedly calculated to prejudice the fair trial of the case, amounted to a serious interference with the course of justice, and was a contempt. Again, it is well settled that in cases of this kind there must be a serious, and not merely a technical, interference with justice before the Court will intervene and treat such interference as a contempt (per Lord Justice Collins in Hunt v. Clarke, 58 L. J., Q. B. 490). The liberty of the Press would be unduly fettered if frivolous applications were encouraged in merely nominal contempts. But it is not always easy to say what is a serious interference with the course of justice. In the present case the co-respondent held a high station in society, so that comments upon his pending case would naturally be widely read by the public at large, including possible jurymen. And Mr. Justice Horridge, taking a most serious view of the contempt, committed the director of the paper, whom he regarded as personally responsible for the article, to prison sine die, until he should satisfy the Court that he had purged his contempt.—The (English) Law Journal.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Gray v. Marie Correllie. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES SWINFEN EADY AND PHILLIMORE. 20th November 1913.

Infringement of a copyright—Great proportion of similarities not due to chance coincidences—Combination of ordinary materials may be original.

This was an appeal from an order of Sargant, J. The Appellant was the composer of a play named "The People's King" which the Respondent contended was an infringement of her novel "Temporal Power," and the Court below held that it was and granted an injunction. The Appellant challenged that finding and urged that a number of his incidents were really original. The appeal was dismissed. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said :—

The learned Judge (Sargant, J.) in a clear and exhaustive judgment, had dealt with six incidents which were to be found in the sketch and also in "Temporal Power," and said that not only were they to be found in both works, but that there were most remarkable similarities or identities of language between the two documents. After going through these matters in detail the learned Judge had said that there was nothing very striking or original in either the novel or the sketch.

"But the combination of these ordinary materials may nevertheless be original, and when such a combination has arrived at a certain degree of complexity it becomes practically impossible that it should have been arrived at independently by a second individual. . . . In my judgment the similarities and coincidences in this case are such as, when taken in combination, to be entirely inexplicable as the result of mere chance coincidence."

He accepted that passage as an unanswerable statement of the position in the present case, and he thought that they must approach this case on the footing that the Defendant Gray had the book "Temporal Power" either under his eyes or in his memory when he wrote his sketch. No doubt it was still open to the Defendant to say that he had not infringed the copyright, because he had only taken from the book something which was not the subject of copyright; but when it appeared that not merely one, two, or three stock incidents had been used, but a combination of stock incidents, every one of which had been taken from the Plaintiff's book, it would be narrowing the law beyond what was reasonable to say that the Plaintiff was not entitled to be protected.

Submit was found that a series of incidents in combination had been taken from the Plaintiff's book his Lordship thought she might obtain an injunction, even though not one sentence used in the sketch was similar to one used in the book. The result of the new Act was to give protection not merely to the form of the words in a novel but to the situations contained in it. He did not, however, accept the view that all the situations taken were stock situations. He thought that some of them were very original indeed, but it was not necessary to go into that. The mere fact that in a sketch of six scenes there were five scenes which were also in the Plaintiff's book and were not found in any other book was quite enough to justify a decision that the case came within sec. 1 of the Act.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Dobson v. Horsley and another. Before MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY. 6th December 1913.

Landlords' liability for injury caused by letting defective premises.

The Plaintiff's father rented a room on the ground floor. There were some railings outside which were defective owing to gaps. The Plaintiff fell down through a gap and was injured. The jury found that the railings were dangerous at the time of letting but there was no finding that the landlord was given notice to repair them. The learned Judge dismissed the claim. He said—It had been distinctly established by Cavalier v. Pope, 1906, A. C. 428, that in cases where there was a letting between people without any obligation to repair, an action could not be brought in respect of damages accruing to persons owing to the improper condition of the premises except by those who were parties to the agreement. That was established beyond the possibility of doubt. It had been argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that there was an exception to this rule, and that Cavalier v. Pope (supra), did not apply where there was some part of the premises which was kept under the control of the landlord. and in such cases there was an obligation on the part of the landlord for the benefit of all the tenants in the house that he should keep that portion of the premises in good repair and there being that implied obligation, he was answerable as in the present case for damages happening to people because he had not fulfilled it. The authority relied on in support of that proposition was Miller v. Hancock, (1893) 2 Q. B. 177. After considering the decision in Hugget v. Miers, 24 T. L. R. 582, and the observations by ord Atkinson in Cavalier v. Pope (supra), he had come to the conclusion that he ought to decide n favour of the Defendants.

PROBATE AND MATRIMONIAL COURT.

–Cleland v. Cleland and McLeod. Before MR. USTICE BARGRAVE DEANE. 5th December 1913

Case when the Court ought to exercise a discretion in favour of an erring wife seeking divorce.

This was a wife's petition for divorce on the round of very gross misconduct. The husband eplied by charging the wife with adultery. The Court found both parties guilty of adultery. But he learned Judge nevertheless exercised his discretion in favour of the wife and pronounced a ecree nisi for divorce. His Lordship said—I m of opinion, after carefully considering the hole of the facts, and especially the wife's evience, that I am justified in giving her the relief nd pronouncing a decree. I do it on this ground, hich I think is the only sound material ground n which discretion can be exercised; although is quite true that my discretion is unfettered, ut yet still the Judge has to go into the evidence mewhat carefully to arrive at the material rounds in each case on which he exercises that iscretion. There can be no fixed rule; it must every case depend upon its facts. In this case am satisfied that but for the husband's gross isconduct the wife probably would not have llen. She was subjected to such conduct on s part that I believe her sense of duty was eakened, and she was rendered absolutely miserle and reckless. At that time she knew the Respondent; he deeply sympathized with her, d probably through that sympathy the trouble me which ended in her fall. I think the whole it is due to the husband's misconduct.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

E LORD CHANCELLOR. D DUNEDIN. D PARKER. D SUMNER. 1914. 5, February.	MOHUNT KUMARANAND GIRI GOSWAMI v. SRI NATH PARBAT and others.

Privy Council—Dismissal of appeal for non-protion—Restoration, application for.

his was an applicatian for restoration of an al and for permission to prosecute it in forma pauperis. The Petitioner sued as a pauper for possession of an estate alleging himself to be the disciple of a deceased Mohunt. The Court of first instance rejected his claim. He applied to the High Court of Calcutta for permission to appeal in forma pauperis under sec. 592, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. The Court permitted him on condition of his depositing security for the Respondents' costs. Subsequeutly on the Petitioner's application for review the Court rescinded the order altogether and ruled that it was not a case in which the Court would permit him to appeal in forma pauperis. The Petitioner thereupon asked for a certificate to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the said orders, and the same was granted to him. After the arrival of the record the appeal was dismissed for non-prosecution.

Mr. Lowndes (with him Mr. J. M. Parikh) submitted that the Petitioner, who was a pauper, could not be called upon to furnish security and that the conditional permission and its subsequent withdrawal were bad.

Their Lordships, without hearing Counsel (Mr. Bhugwandin Dube) for the Respondents, rejected the petition.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD AND SHARFUDDIN, JJ. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF CHANDRA KUMAR DAS AND ANOTHER, 2nd Party, Petitioners. 23rd February 1914.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145—Excess land shewn in Commissioner's map not covered by proceeding—Land outside proceedings not affected—Further identification necessary—Directions by High Court—Omission to make tenants in possession parties to proceeding, effect of—Tenants, possession not affected.

On the report of the Sub-Inspector of Kalia in Jessore, dated the 21st March 1913, proceedings under sec. 145 were drawn up by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail making one Jahara Debya as 1st party and the Petitioner as 2nd party. The subject of dispute as stated in the Police report was "for the possession of Jaleswari Beel in Kismat Bagberia as alleged by 1st party and Tapsidanga Beel in Kismat Uthali as alleged by second party." The 1st party held lands called Beel Jaleswari and the 2nd party held lands called Tapsidanga. The lands of both parties lay side by side being on the west and east respectively.

In the proceeding the boundaris of the disputed land were given and its area was stated to be about 3 khadas. The 1st party stated in her written statement that she had been all along in possession of the land covered by the proceeding by virtue of a Civil Court decree passed about 50 years ago. By that decree it appeared that the right of the predecessor in interest of the 1st party to 3 khadas of land in Mouzah Tapsidanga was declared and it was ordered to have the Thak map of Mouzah Tapsidanga (which showed the above 3 khadas of land to be included in that mouzah) corrected which however was not done.

The second party stated in their written statement that the boundaries given by the 1st party of the lands in dispute as mentioned in the proceeding were incorrect.

A Pleader Commissioner was deputed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to hold a local investigation and by a reference to the report and map submitted by him it appeared that the Commissioner had shewn the disputed land to be more than 9 khadas much in excess of the area of the land covered by the proceeding which was stated to be only 3 khadas. The Commissioner measured the lands in dispute by reference to the boundaries of Mouzah Tapsidanga according to the statement contained in the thak.

Both parties stated in their written statements that they possessed their lands through their tenants who were actually in occupation of the lands and the 2nd party further stated that the tenants not having been made parties the proceedings could not go on.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 23rd December 1913 passed an order declaring possession in favour of the 1st party. What was stated in that order in respect to the lands in dispute was simply "concerning certain lands in dispute covered by the proceedings."

Against the above order the 2nd party moved the High Court. It was contended inter alia that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acted without jurisdiction in making the order in respect to lands in excess of those referred to in his proceedings and in not making the tenants in actual occupation parties to the proceeding. The Petitioners prayed for the issue of a Rule why an order should not be passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to demarcate the land of about 3 khadas covered by the procceding, therby excluding the excess lands not covered by the proceeding.

'Their Lordships passed the following order:—

"The findings of the Magistrate appear to us not to be open to revision But we would point out say with reference to a report of the Pleader Com- unprotected." to which our attention has been drawn Subdiv. was found cannot affect any land outside the gs, and that if the lands which in the proceedings were stated to be about 3 khadas have now been measured as 9 khadas it would be necessary to further identify the lands in the proceedings. The breach of the peace is clearly shewn. The tenants in possession are not in any way affected and there is a clear finding as to possession as between two zemindars which is all that is necessary.

"The application is rejected."

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE AND D. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2669 OF 1911. HAJI HEYAT BAKSH, Appellant v. MUSAMMAT LACHMANIA AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 6th February. Judgment 17th February 1914.

Way, right of, whether of public or appertaining to a certain section of the public—Special damage when to be proved.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by 1[illegible] persons owning houses and property in a certain mahalla for a declaration that a certain way was a public (literally, common) way for the egress and ingress of the people of the mahalla for the removal of certain obstructions placed by Defendant No. 1 in collusion and concert with the other Defendants and for an order upon them to repair a bridge at one end of the way. Along with the plaint was filed an application under Or. 1, r. 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and an order was duly made and notice served.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit holding that no public way had been made out and that in any case, no special damage had been shown as incurred by the Plaintiffs.

There were two appeals against that decision one by Defendant No. 4 and another by the Plaintiff, and both the appeals were decreed.

The Defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Held, that the question whether the disputed way was one in which the rights belonged [illegible] certain portion of the public or one existing for the benefit of all the subjects of the Crown, was a question of fact that should be decided on evidence. If the road came under the former description, no special damage need be proved; and if under the latter, then the Court should find whether special damage alleged in the plaint was proved or not.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

LORD SHAW. LORD MOULTON. MR. AMEER ALI. 1913, Heard, 4 & 8, December. Judgment, 8, December.	T. S. NATCHEAPPA CHETTY and others, Appellants, v. THE IRRAWADDY FLOTILLA COMPANY, LIMITED, Respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 137—Document of title, "mate's receipt" for goods shipped by inland steamer, if negotiable—Bill of lading—Assignment in usual form—Notice to shipowner of assignment—Rule and practice of shipowner intended for his own protection, "mate's receipt" if—Contract implied—Endorsee of "mate's receipt" if may sue shipowner for damages for delivering goods to shipper without taking "mate's receipt"—Tort—Breach of duty.

A trader who was being financed by the Plaintiffs (a firm of money-lenders) shipped a consignment of paddy by a steamer belonging to the Defendants who were a company of inland waters carriers, getting from the latter's agent a signed receipt described in the document itself as a "mate's receipt" and being in the following form: "Received from A the undermentioned quantity of paddy to be forwarded by steamer X., with liberty to tranship to other vessels." The document bore a note that risks of certain descriptions were to be borne by the shipper. Amongst the rules issued by the company in the course of their business was one which provided that "mate's receipts must be given up before discharge is allowed to commence, or in the event of mate's receipt not having come to hand the company's usual guarantee must be signed." The company made over the consignment at the port of delivery to the shipper without taking the mate's receipt, which the shipper had in fact previously endorsed and delivered to the Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs sued the company for damages, claiming title in the goods under the endorsed "mate's receipt" and also for tort. Before the Judicial Committee Plaintiffs' counsel admitted that the document was not a bill of lading and negotiable as such and that it would not negotiable if it was only a "mate's receipt:"

Held—That it was not a document of title of any other description within the meaning of sec. 137 of the Transfer of Property Act, but a simple ordinary receipt for goods. The rights of the shipper in the goods would have to be assigned in the usual form and the assignment must be accompanied by notice to the shipowner charging him with the fact of assignment and making him responsible to the assignee instead of to the original shipper.

That the company's rule requiring production of the "mate's receipt" before delivery merely set forth a mode of business by which the company sought to protect themselves against their customers and which it was open to them to follow or not in any case, and it did not impose upon them an obligation not to deliver the goods except on production of the "mate's receipt" or otherwise unless a guarantee could be obtained.

That having regard to the facts found in the case, viz., that the general course of business was open to exception at the will of the traders, the question whether the public at large were apprised that they too were protected by the manner of negotiating the "mate's receipts" did not arise.

That the Plaintiffs' action as based on any contract embodied in the document or implied from any course of business failed, as also their action on an alleged tort as the evidence in the case did not point to any failure of duty on the part of the company.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment delivered by Fox, Chief Judge and Twomey, Judge of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, who reversed the judgment of the Additional District Judge of Henzada.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment and from that of the Chief Court which was as follows :—

"The Plaintiffs advanced monies to the first Defendant on promissory notes and under an agreement by which the money was to be employed in purchasing paddy which was to be stored in a godown at Dounggyi under the control of the Plaintiffs. The agreement contemplated that the paddy might be taken to Rangoon for sale, and in such case it was stipluated that a receipt should be given to the Plaintiffs for what should be taken and that on the arrival of it at Rangoon money for it should be paid to the Plaintiffs and then the receipt should be delivered up to the first Defendant.

"The first Defendant's agent at Dounggy induced the Plaintiffs' agent to allow the paddy to be shipped to Rangoon in boats of the second Defendant Company in the name of the first Defendant as shipper. Eleven boat loads in all were sent. In respect of eight boat loads the first Defendant paid monies to the Plaintiffs' nominee in Rangoon. In respect of the cargoes of the last three boats, the first Defendant's agent endorsed and delivered to the Plaintiffs what purport to be Mates' Receipts for the cargo loaded. The first Defendant sold the cargoes to a firm of millers, obtained delivery of the paddy from the second Defendant Company without producing to it the so-called Mates' Receipts its agent had given for the paddy, and delivered it to the millers, but paid nothing to the Plaintiffs out of what he received for the paddy.

"At the time when the suit was instituted the first Defendant owed the Plaintiffs over Rs. 21,000 in respect of their advances.

"The Plaintiffs sued him for the debt and sued the second Defendant Company for damages to the amount of the debt. The ground on which the Plaintiffs sought to make the Company liable was that its agents had delivered the paddy to the first Defendant without production by him of the so-called Mates' Receipts, and that this was in breach of a representation which the Company made to the public by a printed Rate Circular or Notice, and by its usual course of business, that delivery of cargo carried by its boats would only be made to persons holding Mates' Receipts for the cargo. The Company has been held liable and it appeals.

"These Mates' Receipts are sometimes referred to as bills-of-lading.

"This they clearly are not. A Bill of Lading is a mercantile document in use in connection with carriage of goods in a sea-going vessel. The learned Judge overlooked the fact that the definition of the term in Lickbarrow v. Mason (1), which he referred to, states that it refers to a document regarding carriage by sea. Nothing further need be said about bills-of-lading in connection with the case.

"The so-called Mates' Receipts are in a form of which the following, which is the one given for one of the cargoes in question in the suit, is an example.

N. B—All risks of navigation, loading and unloading goods, destruction or damage by fire, robbery, weather, wreck of boat, separation of flat from steamer or any other cause of whatever nature or kind soever to be borne by the shipper. Freight payable before delivery.

"It is obvious that the document is not a Mate's Receipt. Such a document also is a document used in connection with shipment of goods by sea-going vessels, and is given by a Mate, that is to say, an officer on a sea-going vessel. To no document given by an officer of an inland waters carrier could the term and the incidents of Mates' Receipts as known to mercantile law be properly applied. The object of the attempt to apply such law to the receipts in question was apparently to endeavour to get a decision that they are negotiable instruments. The rule by which negotiability of a document is determined is clearly laid down in the notes to Miller v. Race (2), and it is that where an instrument is by the custom of trade transferable like cash by delivery, and is capable of being sued on by the person holding it pro tempore, it is entitled to the name of a negotiable instrument, and the property in it passes to a bonâ fide transferee for value. The Company's receipt cannot be held to fulfil these conditions. Questions as to the Plaintiffs' right to the paddy however scarcely arise in the case. They held the paddy in their possession, and had a lien over it previous to their agent allowing the first Defendant's agent to ship it in the first Defendant's name. They had an equitable right to it as between them and the first Defendant subsequently.

"The substantial question is whether the Defendant Company came under any legal obligation or duty towards them for breach of which the Company is liable in damages. The Company made no contract with them and if it is liable, it must be liable for a tort. The tort alleged is that it held out to the public that he did not give delivery of cargo shipped by its boats unless Mates' Receipts were delivered up, and relying on this representation the Plaintiffs agreed to part with their property.

"The actual representation in the Rate Circular or notice issued by the Company was:—

"'Flats, barges, and boats will be moored at Mills in accordance with instructions received from holders of mates' receipts which must previously have been presented at Rangoon Office for verification. Mates' Receipts must, however, be given up before discharge is allowed to commence, or in the event of Mate's Receipts not having come to hand, the Company's usual guarantee must be signed.'" bond), in the form in which Exhibit 7 is. The Rate Circular gives notice of the terms on which the Company is prepared to carry goods for any member of the public, that is to say, of the terms on which it is prepared to contract with any person who may wish to send paddy by its boats. If a person sends paddy by one of its boats without any special contract and relying on the terms stated in the Circular, the Company would undoubtedly be bound by the terms.

"The guarantee referred to is an idemnity bond (wrongly termed a guarantee

(2) 1 Sm. L. C. 447; reported 1 Burr. 452 (1758)

"But the circular does not state, and it is unreasonable that any member of the public should believe that the Company bound itself to carry only on such terms, and that by issuing such Circular it relinquishes all right to relax the terms in any way it pleases in any individual case.

"The words as to Mates' Receipts are obviously entered as a precaution for the Company's own protection, and to ensure that the paddy should be delivered to or to the nominee of the person with whom they contracted to carry it.

"The words themselves indicate the possibility of the Company delivering without production of the receipt. No member of the public who had not contracted with the Company could reasonably believe that it would not under any circumstances deliver to the person with whom it had contracted to carry without production of the receipt. The Circular and its wording, in my opinion, did not put the Company under any legal obligation or duty to any one except the persons with whom it contracted. Consequently the Plaintiffs had no right of action against it.

"It was argued that the Company's agent at Henzada knew that the paddy was under lien to the Plaintiffs, and his letter Exhibit 8 was strongly relied on as showing this. Whether he knew it or not, he received the paddy as the property of the first Defendant, and contracted to carry it as his paddy and for him. The Plaintiffs' agent allowed this to be done, and the Company was bound to carry for the first Defendant and to deliver to him or as he should direct. Even if the Plaintiffs had given notice of their claim to the paddy, the so-called Mate's Receipt not being a negotiable instrument, the Company would not have been bound to deliver to them."

Mr. Roskill, K. C., and Mr. J. W. McCarthy for the Appellants submitted that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the so-called mate's receipt was not negotiable. Reference was made to sec. 137, Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The Appellants had an equitable charge on the cargoes to secure the amounts advanced thereon. In any case in view of the terms of the circular issued by the Company and on which the public acted the Respondents were under an obligation of not delivering the cargoes except upon production of the mate's receipts. They delivered the cargoes inspite of their circular and of the knowledge of the fact that the Appellants had advanced moneys to Chowdhry on the security of the cargoes.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Eddis, Counsel for the Respondents, were not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGEMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—The Respondents in this case are the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, and their vessels ply in the inland waters of Burma. The Appellants, who were the original Plaintiffs in the suit, are money-lenders, and they carry on their business in Henzada, and in other places, in Lower Burma. On the 13th, 20th, and 23rd October 1906, there having been eight other shipments in similar terms, there were the three shipments of paddy which are in dispute in this case. They were sent by ship from Henzada to Rangoon.

The document which accompanied their transmission is in each case similar in terms to the one which is now to be quoted. It is dated 12th October 1906, and it is headed as follows:—"Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, Limited." It is denominated plainly in the document as a "Mate's receipt." The document then proceeds in these terms:—"Received from O. Rahman" (who in this Judgment is called, for brevity, "Chowdhry"), "the undermentioned quantity of paddy to be forwarded per cargo boat 128 in tow of steamer," and then the denomination is given, and then follows this expression "with liberty to tranship to other vessel. Number of baskets 5,000--five thousand baskets paddy, more or less." That document is signed "Alex. Wingate, Agent." He was, in point of fact, the ship's agent acting at Henzada for the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, the Respondents in this Appeal. Chowdhry was, as the document bears, the shipper. It appears to be the fact that in this year 1906 the Appellants had advanced monies to Chowdhry for the purchase of the paddy so shipped.

It might be a question under what legal category this document fell. It is manifest that the parties to it were not at all assured in their own minds as to what that category was, because although the document was headed "Mate's receipt" there were appended to it certain terms which were more suitable to bills of lading. The document says:—"N. B. All risk of navigation, loading and unloading goods, destruction or damage by fire, robbery, weather, wreck of boat, separation of flat from steamer, or any other cause of whatever nature or kind soever to be borne by the shipper. Freight payable before delivery."

It is in these circumstances that their Lordships have before them two Judgments of the Courts of Lower Burma. The present Appeal is from a Decree of the Chief Court, dated the 22nd November 1910, and that reversed a Decree of the District Court of Henzada, dated the 17th December 1908. They have no difficulty in pronouncing that in their opinion the Judgment of the Chief Court of Lower Burma is a correct judgment, and that the Appeal fails.

Two points upon this Appeal have been carefully argued by Mr. Roskill. With reference, in the first place, to the document itself, it is pleaded as a document of title. It is admitted, however, in argument, that it is not a bill of lading, and therefore not eo nomine a negotiable instrument.

In the second place, it is admitted that if, as it denominates itself, it is a Mate's receipt, then also it must fall under the category of documents which are not negotiable.

But Mr. McCarthy supplemented the argument by saying that notwithstanding that it could not claim negotiability as a bill of lading, and notwithstanding that if it were a mere "Mate's receipt," it would be non-negotiable, yet this document falls under sec. 137, the concluding section, of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, Act IV. The language which is there adopted is:—"And any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorising, or purporting to authorise, either by endorsement, or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented."

Their Lordships are of opinion that this document was not a negotiable document in the sense of this section of the Statute. It was not a document of title. There was no authority by law to give to an assignee by transfer of that document any right as against the shipowner except upon the usual form of an assignment as between the shipper and his assignee. That usual form must be accompanied by notice to the shipowner which charges him with the fact of the assignment, and makes him responsible to the assignee instead of the original shipper. There is great difficulty in cases of this kind, in avoiding being misled by terminology. Each of the categories attempted has failed. The document is not a bill of lading, not a Mate's receipt, and not a statutory negotiable instrument. The simple fact remains that this is a document which charges the Respondents with receipt of certain goods from Chowdhry, under a bargain to convey them by ship to Rangoon for a stipulated freight and on certain conditions, and the duty arising from it was to deliver the goods to Chowdhry, or to his nominee at Rangoon. In complete compliance with that duty the goods so placed in the possession of the shipowner for carriage were duly delivered.

In these circumstances their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the Judgment reached in the Court appealed from is correct. It is a simple ordinary receipt for goods. Why should these goods not be delivered to the person who is said to have handed them to the shipowner? Assuming the "Mate's receipt," as it is called, to have been lost, was the owner of the goods, who then handed them to the shipowner, not to be entitled, because the receipt had disappeared, to possession of his own goods from the carrier whose freight he was willing to pay?

Their Lordships are of opinion that that simple statement of the point shews that there is no legal foundation for the position that this was a document of title, and that the goods passed upon the transfer of it.

The second point which was taken by Mr. Roskill is, that whatever be the name under which this document might be classed, the Respondents themselves are charged with a duty and have come under an obligation to deliver to no one except upon the Mate's receipt. The argument is an astute one, and it is founded upon the circular, dated 1st January 1907, which their Lordships presume is a sample of what was usually issued in the course of the Respondents' business. That circular is headed :—"Rates for paddy in bulk by the Company's barges and cargo boats in Rangoon," and it contains these two clauses: "That the barges and boats will be moored at mills in accordance with instructions received from holders of Mate's receipts, which must previously have been presented at Rangoon office for verification." In terms the circumstances do not demand any application of that rule.

But the next rule is said to be square with the situation in the present case. The clause is: "Mate's receipts must, however, be given up before discharge is allowed to commence, or in the event of Mate's receipts not having come to hand, the Company's usual guarantee must be signed." In the opinion of their Lordships the sentences now qouted from the circular of the Respondent Company merely set forth a mode in which in conducting their own business, the Respondent Company would protect themselves in the course of their trade. But they cannot be founded upon by other parties as forming any part of an obligation to them restrictive of their freedom or methods of action in conducting their own affairs. As against customers they afford protection to the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, and they give an intimation or warning that they shall not part with the goods unless Mate's receipts are given up, or otherwise unless a guarantee be obtained. But this protection of themselves they could freely give up if satisfied of the identity and solvency of the owner or nominee of the owner who demanded the goods at the port of delivery. And it is wholly jus tertii for any person in the position of the Appellants (who are money-lenders who had made certain trading advances to Chowdhry and make claims against him for the paddy) to plead that that clause of the shipowners' circular constitutes an obligation upon which they as outside parties are entitled to found.

Failing these clauses as constituting a contract with the Appellants, the next argument presented was that there was a course of business on the part of the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company which showed that they did protect themselves, and apprised the public at large that they, the public, were also protected by the manner of negotiating the Mate's receipts. Their Lordships are of opinion that this point in the abstract does not fall to be determined, because upon the facts it entirely fails. The judgment of the Judge who framed these issues is a merely apparent affirmative or negative, in fact, a most indefinite answer, to the two issues which he has himself written out. "Was it," says the seventh issue, "the usual course of business of the second "Defendant not to recognise any person as entitled to the paddy shipped without his giving up the Mate's receipts, and not to discharge the paddy without the production of such Mate's receipts?" It follows on the judgment of the learned Judge that this might have been what he describes as a general course of business which is open to exception at the will of the traders themselves. In such circumstances the question of fact really does not arise.

Their Lordships therefore think that the point as to any contract in this case fails. There is no document constituting such a contract, and there was no course of business from which a contract could be inferred. And accordingly the learned Counsel for the Appellants puts his case upon tort. It is difficult to figure it; but the thing upon which tort was founded was some failure of duty. The failure of duty apparently was this: that the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company had suspicions raised in their minds, or might have had suspicions raised in their minds, as to the expediency of parting with these goods unless on production of the Mate's receipt to Chowdhry, who himself handed them over to them, because some financiers like the Appellants might have claims upon them. Their Lordships are surprised to find what is put forward as in any respect a communication upon which the Appellants are entitled to found. Wingate, the shipowners' agent, gave evidence, and his evidence, instead of being to the effect cited, is of a completely different character. It is necessary, however, to see what Wingate says upon the subject. Wingate does admit that it was known, at a certain stage of the proceedings, to him, that Chowdhry was having advances for the purchase of the paddy which was being shipped, and that the Chetty from whom advances had been given might have had certain rights. Then Wingate in his evidence proceeds thus:—"I refused to give him the Mate's receipt in first Defendant's name until I got the sanction of the Chetty. He then brought the Chetty to my office. The Chetty then agreed to have the Mate's receipt in first Defendant's name. I did so accordingly. They told me that the differences had been settled."

In these circumstances their Lordships think it unnecessary to pursue this point further, because, so far as evidence stands, instead of the shipping Company being charged with the knowledge that there was any danger on account of rights possessed by the Chetty, in this case it turns out upon the evidence that those rights had been the subject of negotiation and settlement, and that the settlement having been achieved the goods were forwarded in the name of Chowdhry himself. This being so, there was no duty left in the circumstances except of course to deliver to Chowdhry, or to his order, and this was done. The failure of duty pleaded completely disappears, the Respondents having fulfilled all the duties resting upon them, either by contract, or under the Common Law.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be dismissed, and the Respondents are entitled to costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1989 OF 1910.

RICHARDSON, J.
NEWBOULD, J.
Heard, 23 & 24, April.
Judgment, 15, May.

AMBIKA CHARAN GUHA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
TARINI CHARAN CHANDA and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 22, Art. 106—Partnership, suit for accounts of—Necessary parties—Representative of deceased partner, addition of one after period of limitation—Whole suit if barred.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for the accounts of a partnership making parties thereto his other partners and one only of the two sons of a deceased partner who died after the partnership business came to an end but before the suit was instituted. On objection being taken the other son of the deceased partner was brought on the record after the expiration of the period of limitation:

Held—That inasmuch as all the partners or their representatives were necessary parties and inasmuch as under sec. 22 of the Limitation Act the suit must as regards the added Defendant be deemed to have been instituted when he was made a party the whole suit was barred by limitation.

That in a partnership suit the partners must be made parties or the suit will fail.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 29th of July 1911 against a decree of

AMBIKA CHARAN GUHA v. TARINI CHARAN CHANDA.

Babu S. K. Nag, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Pabna and Bogra, dated the 11th of April 1911, affirming a decree of Babu Ashutosh Mitra, 1st Munsif of Pabna, dated the 2nd of September 1910.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for the adjustment of the accounts of a partnership karbar on a declaration that the said karbar was closed and for winding up the same by ascertaining the assets and the liabilities thereof. The Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 4 and one Chandra Nath, father of the Defendants Nos. 3 and 5, were the partners of the firm. Chandra Nath died before the institution of the suit leaving him surviving two sons, namely, the Defendant No. 3 and the Defendant No. 5. Defendant No. 3 only was made a party to the suit as representing the estate of his deceased father and in the written statement the objection was taken that the suit was untenable on the ground of want of parties inasmuch as both the sons of Chandra Nath were not made parties to the suit. Defendant No. 5, a minor, was afterwards added as party to the suit more than 3 years after the termination of the partnership business. Both the Courts below dismissed the Plaintiff's suit as being barred by limitation.

Babu Girija Prasunno Roy Chowdhury for the Appellant.

Babu Krishna Kamal Maitra for the Respondents.

The Plaintiff brought this suit for the accounts of a partnership of which he and the Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 were members, and for other incidental reliefs. The remaining partner died after the partnership business came to an end but before the suit was brought. It appears that he left two sons, the Defendant No. 3 and the Defendant No. 5. Of these two sons only the Defendant No. 3 was originally impleaded. Objection was taken in the written statement (filed on the 9th August 1909) that the deceased partner was not properly represented. The Plaintiff seems to have been very dilatory and the Defendant No. 5 was not brought on the record till the 29th June 1910. At that date the period of limitation prescribed for such a suit as this had expired. The Courts below have held that inasmuch as all the partners or their representatives were necessary parties and inasmuch as under sec. 22 of the Limitation Act, the suit must, as regards the Defendant No. 5, be deemed to have been instituted when he was made a party, the whole suit is barred by limitation. The short question which arises is whether this view of the matter is correct.

We are disposed to agree that in a partnership suit the partners must be made parties or the suit will fail [Ramdoyal v. Junmejoy (1), Srinath v. Hari Charan (2)]. On behalf of the Plaintiff, who is the Appellant before us, reference was made at the bar to Rule 9 of Order I of the Civil Procedure Code. That Rule however, properly understood, does not do away with the necessity for bringing a necessary party on the record [Jogendra v. Secretary of State (3)]. If a necessary party is not on the record the proper course is to apply to have him joined. If he is not brought on the record at all, or if when he is brought on the record the suit as against him is barred by limitation, the suit will be dismissed.

AMBIKA CHARAN GUHA v. TARINI CHARAN CHANDA.

It was argued that the deceased partner or his estate was represented, if imperfectly by the Defendant No. 3, that the Defendant No. 5 was brought on the record merely to complete the representation and that in such a case sec. 22 of the Limitation Act would not operate to bar the suit. Reference was made to the case of Peary Mohun v. Narendra Nath (4). In that case all the living descendants of the original testator were on the record from the commencement. The question arose which of them should be considered shebait of the debutter estate to which the suit related. That question was determined after the plaint had been amended and the suit proceeded against the Defendant who was found to be shebait. It was held that what was done did not amount to the addition of a new Defendant.

We are of opinion with the learned Subordinate Judge that the case is distinguishable from the present case on the facts. The Plaintiff here ought to have impleaded all the legal representatives of the deceased Defendant. He connot plead ignorance of the existence of the Defendant No. 5. In the absence of that Defendant the estate of the deceased partner was not fully represented.

The Courts below appear to us to have taken a correct view of the law and this Appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES Nos. 2089 & 2589 TO 2591 OF 1911.

RICHARDSON, J. NEWBOULD, J. 1913, Heard, 28, April. Judgment, 2, July.

BERHAMDUT MISSER and others, Defendants, Appellants,

v.

RAMJI RAM, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 105, 106, 158—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181—Record-of-rights, alteration by Revenue officer more than two months after final publication—Civil suit by proprietor to assess fair and equitable rent, if maintainable—Limitation—Correctness of Revenue officer's decision if can be challenged in civil suit—Record-of-rights if can be referred to to ascertain rent of contiguous land.

In a proceeding under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the Revenue officer directed that certain lands entered in the record-of-rights as held rent-free be recorded as liable to payment of rent. This order was made more than two months after the date of the certificate of final publication of the record. The Plaintiff, the proprietor, thereupon instituted a suit in the Civil Court for the assessment of fair rent, it being too late for him to apply under sec. 105 of the Act:

Held—That the suit was maintainable, if not under the general law, as a suit in the nature of a declaratory suit, then as an application under sec. 158.

That sec. 109 did not stand in the way of the suit, no proceeding having been taken under sec. 105 for the fixation of a fair and equitable rent.

The cause of action in the suit arose after the decree under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed.

Quære :— Whether Art. 131 read with

sec. 23 or Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applied.

Held—That applications under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not governed by Art. 181 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

That it was not open to the Defendants to contest in the civil suit the correctness of the decision of the Revenue officer and to raise again the question of their liability to pay rent.

That the lower Appellate Court was not wrong in law in referring to the record-of-rights for the purpose of ascertaining the rents payable in respect of lands in the vicinity similar to those in suit.

The scheme of secs. 105, 106, etc., of the Bengal Tenancy Act seems to be that matters brought at once or within a strictly limited time before the Revenue officer are to be dealt with by him while matters not so brought before the Revenue officer are left to the ordinary law and the Civil Courts.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 7th of September 1911 against the decree of T. S. Macpherson, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Patna, dated the 25th of March 1911, modifying the decree on Babu Kali Kumar Sarkar, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that District, dated the 31st of August 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra and Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak for Babu Chander Sekhar Prosad Singh for the Appellants.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Luchmi Narain Singh for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

These four second appeals arise out of four suits brought by the same Plaintiffs for the assessment of fair rent upon lands held by the Defendants in the different suits. It appears that the lands appertain to an estate in respect of which a record-of-rights was made under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The record was finally published in September 1903, these lands being entered therein as brahmatter lands held rent-free. The entries were contested by the late proprietor in proceedings taken by him under sec. 106 of the Act. The proceedings terminated on the 29th April 1904 when the Revenue Officer directed "that the lands of Defendants be recorded as liable to payment of rent." From that decision no appeal was preferred. It was then too late for the proprietor to apply under sec. 105 for the settlement of fair rents because more than two months had elapsed from the date of the certificate of final publication of the record. He accordingly, on the 13th of June 1908, instituted these suits in the ordinary Civil Court and on his death his place was taken by the present Plaintiffs who have been duly appointed Receivers of his estate. The Subordinate Judge before whom the suits first came and the Additional District Judge before whom they came in appeal have concurred in holding that the Plaintiffs are entitled to have a fair rent assessed and they have accordingly determined the rent payable. Various objections with which we have to deal have been taken to the suit and to the conclusion arrived at.

As to the suit it was said that it was not maintainable and that a record-of-rights having been prepared the only remedy of the late proprietor was to apply under sec. 105 of the Tenancy Act.

As to that argument it has to be observed in the first place that, at the period in question, before sec. 105A was introduced into the Act, issues which might be raised in proceedings taken under sec. 106 could not be raised in proceedings under sec. 105. The scope of the latter section was, strictly speaking, limited to the question of fair and equitable rent [Pandab v. Ananda (1)]. It is true that the late proprietor might have instituted proceedings under sec. 105 and sec. 106 at the same time, and then applied for the postponement of the proceedings under sec. 105 until the termination of the proceedings under sec. 106. But he did not take that course. He proceeded only under sec. 106, and the question is whether the Plaintiffs are now debarred from having fair rents determined for lands which in the proceedings under sec. 106 were declared liable to be assessed with rent.

As it seems to us, sec. 109 of the Act does not stand in the way of these suits. As pointed out in the case to which we have already referred, sec. 109 merely prohibits suits regarding matters which are or already have been the subject of proceedings under sec. 105 or sec. 106. Here no proceedings have been taken under sec. 105 for the fixation of a fair and equitable rent. It may be added that proceedings under secs. 105 and 106 have to be commenced within two months of the date of the certificate of final publication of the record-of-rights, and that under cl. (b) of sec. 111, Civil Courts are debarred until three months after final publication from entertaining any suit or application for the alteration of the rent or the determination of the status of any tenant in the area to which the record-of-rights applies. There is a similar provision in sec. 111B. The scheme seems to be that matters brought at once (or within a strictly limited time) before the Revenue Officer are to be dealt with by him while matters not so brought before the Revenue Officer are left to the ordinary law and the Civil Courts. It may, however, be that Revenue Officers have powers under secs. 105 and 106 which are not possessed by the Civil Courts. That brings us to the next point.

It is clear that under sec. 105 a Revenue Officer has power to fix a fair and equitable rent. Has a Civil Court power to entertain such suits as the present?

It was said with much force that these suits cannot be regarded as suits for enhancement of rent under sec 30, because no rent has hitherto been paid and there is nothing to enhance. They are certainly not suits under sec. 52 for alteration of rent on alteration of area. It was further argued that sec. 157 does not apply because these suits are not suits for the ejectment of trespassers. As to sec. 158, reference was made to the case of Debendra v. Bhupendra (2), which was decided by a Full Bench. It was observed in that case that "the object of this section is to enable the Court to ascertain what are the existing arrangements between a landlord and his tenant and not to enable the Court in effect to make a new contract for parties between whom no contract was in existence at and before the date of the application." The facts, however, with reference to which that observation was made were very different from the facts of the present case. It appears that the suit was brought or the application made merely under colour of sec. 158, the real object being to have the lease set aside under which the tenant came into possession. That accounts for the remark that the Court was being asked to make a new contract for the parties. The case turned on an express contract, which, it was held, could not be set aside under sec. 158. But the relationship of landlord and tenant under the Bengal Tenancy Act is or may be governed not only by contract but by status. In essence the difference may be merely the difference between a contract made by the parties for themselves and a contract made by the law for them. But the existence of rights by way of status is important, because it disposes of the argument that there is nothing here on which the law can operate. Here the question is mainly one of status. The Defendants possess a status which entitles them to occupy the land and the Plaintiffs a status which entitles them to a fair and equitable rent. What is a fair and equitable rent in circumstances such as the present seems to us to be a question which it is open to the Courts to determine under sec. 158. It was said that cl. (b) of the section admits only of the determination of the rent payable by the tenant at the time the application under the section is made, and that when these suits were instituted no rent was payable. The answer to that argument is that the rent payable when these suits were brought was a fair and equitable rent, that is, a rent capable of being ascertained by evidence.

(2) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 182 (1891).

BERHAMDUT MISSER v. RAMJI RAM.

In our opinion these suits are maintainable, if not under the general law, as suits in the nature of declaratory suits, then as applications under sec. 158.

We may add that before the Bengal Tenancy Act, suits of this kind were known as suits for kabuliyats. An instance will be found in the case of Ramnidhee v. Parbutty (3). That such suits are now brought without any question being raised will appear from the case of Harihar Pande v. Karamat Hossain (4). The opening words of the judgment delivered in that case describe the suit as one "for assessment of rent and for recovery of such rent for a certain period."

It was somewhat faintly suggested that if these suits were maintainable either as applications under sec. 158 or under the general law they were barred by limitation. We cannot accept the suggestion. For the purposes of the contention we have already rejected—that the suits are not maintainable—and for the purposes of applying the law of limitation, it must be assumed that the decision pronounced in the proceedings under sec. 106 was correct. The decrees declared the late proprietor to be entitled to have fair rents assessed. The effect as against him of any previous refusal of the Defendants to pay rent was cured by the decrees. The Defendants cannot go behind the decrees to find a starting point for limitation. If inspite of the decrees they still refuse to pay rent, their occupation of the land, coupled with the denial of their liability to pay rent, may perhaps be regarded as a kind of trespass or continuing wrong within the meaning of sec. 23 of the Limitation Act. Or possibly, the right to have rent assessed is a periodically recurring right which may be exercised, whenever necessary, subject to the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 131, Jotindra v. Chandra (5). But it is unnecessary to decide whether sec. 23 or Art. 131 applies, because the causes of action must be taken to have arisen after the decrees were passed, and even if the article applicable is Art. 120, the suits are not barred as they were instituted in 1908. It is hardly necessary to add, as regards applications under sec. 158 that they are not governed by Art. 181, Tiluck v. Parsotein (6), Hatem v. Abdul (7).

Under the old law, it may be mentioned, a suit for a pattah kabuliyat might be instituted at any time during the tenancy (Act X of 1859, sec. 31 : Act VIII B. C. of 1869, sec. 28).

It was next contended that the lower Courts were wrong in holding that it was not open to the Defendants to raise again in these suits the question of their liability to rent. Reference was made to the case of Gokul v. Pudmanand (8). That case came before the Privy Council and though the appeal failed on the merits and their Lordships expressly refrained from deciding the point, they indicated something more than a doubt whether the decision of the Revenue Officer on a question as to the status of a tenant could be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the landlord and the tenant in the Civil Court. But the observations made were made with reference to the Tenancy Act as it stood before it was amended by Act III (B. C.) of 1898. The latter Act gives to the decision of the Revenue Officer in proceedings under secs. 105 and 106 the force and effect of the decree of a Civil Court and declares that subject to the provisions of secs. 108 and 109A the decision "shall be final." It may be inaccurate to say that the question of the liability of the Defendants in these suits to pay rent is res judicata, if the term is used with reference to the provisions of sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. But inasmuch as the decision of the Revenue Officer is made final by sec. 107 of the Tenancy Act as that section now stands, the result is much the same in whatever way it may be expressed, cf. Nabin Chandra v. Moharaja Radha Kishore (9). It is not open to the Defendants to contest the correctness of the decision of the Revenue Officer. The contention therefore fails.

On the only question which remains we are of opinion that the lower Appellate Court committed no error of law in referring to the record-of-rights for the purpose of ascertaining the rents payable in respect of lands in the vicinity similar to those held by the Defendants and in using the facts thus ascertained as a guide to the rents which the Defendants should pay.

For the reasons we have indicated the Appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 246 OF 1913.

CARNDUFF, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1913,
15, December.

SHEIKH JAHARUDDI,
Appellant,
v.
HARI CHARAN PODDER,
Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXXIX, r. 2, sec. 24—(Act XIV of 1882), sec 493—Temporary injunction by Munsif—Suit transferred to the file of District Judge after injunction by Munsif—Breach of injunction after transfer—Jurisdiction of District Judge to punish for contempt—Bengal Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887).

In case of breach or disobedience of a temporary injunction, the Court which actually granted the injunction may punish the contempt under Or. XXXIX, r. 2 (3).

There is nothing in sec. 24 of the Civil Procedure Code or in Chap. IV of the Bengal Civil Courts Act authorising, either expressly or by necessary implication, a Court to which the suit may be transferred but which did not grant the injunction, to exercise the special jurisdiction under Or. XXXIX, r. 2 (3).

This was an Appeal preferred on the 26th of May 1913 against an order of Mr. M. Smither, District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 20th of May 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of the District Judge, the material portion of which is as follows :—

"Jaharuddi was Defendant in a case in the Court of the 1st Munsif regarding certain land and an injunction was passed against him not to erect any buildings on the land. These facts are admitted. After the issue of injunction, the case was transferred to this Court. After the case was transferred, a masonry room and a wall were erected on the land. The Plaintiffs contend that they were erected by Jaharuddi in defiance and breach of the injunction. Jaharuddi contends that he had sold the land to one Krishna Kumar and that the latter had erected the room. A question of law has been raised, as to whether under Or. XXXIX, r. 2 (3) this Court has any jurisdiction, or only the Court of 1st Munsif who issued injunction. The breach of injunction was committed, if at all, after the transfer of the case to this Court. I think the transfer of the case brings with it jurisdiction to dispose of the case, jurisdiction to deal with a breach of an injunction found in the case, at any rate, if the breach does not occur till after the transfer.

"As to the facts it is clear that the alleged conveyance to Krishna Kumar was a mere paper transaction, resorted to in order to defeat this injunction. . . .

"It was Jaharuddi's son Dukhi and not the vendee who applied to the Municipality for permission to erect the building. Jaharuddi and his son have been living in it ever since. The vendee does not even know whether the construction of the room is by mats or bamboos. On the evidence of several witnesses, it is apparent that the building was erected at night, in great haste. . .

"On the evidence, Jaharuddi attended and assisted in the construction of the building and wall. I am satisfied that he did so and committed a breach of the injunction, intentionally. Under Or. XXXIX, r. 2 (3) I order the property of Jaharuddi to be attached and also order him to be retained in the civil prison for 6 months unless in the meantime he gets an order from the Court directing his release, which he will get at any time that he satisfies the Court that he has removed the room and wall."

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose for the Appellant.—In this case the Munsif who granted the injunction could alone have punished for the contempt. The District Judge to whom the case was transferred after the issue of injunction has no jurisdiction to punish for contempt. Refers to the language of Or. XXXIX, r. 2 (3), the section is clear. Refers to the corresponding section of the old Code, sec. 493 of Act XIV of 1882. It might have been argued under the old Code that the Court of the District Judge who had seisin of the case, could punish for contempt; but the wording has now been changed and it is clear that such Court has no jurisdiction to punish.

It is a penal provision and ought to be strictly construed.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Brajendra Kumar Chukrabutty for the Respondent.—I submit that the District Judge had seisin of the whole case and could punish for contempt. Otherwise it would be anomalous. The Court which had seisin over the whole case and better acquainted with the facts cannot punish for contempt and the parties will have to appear before the original Court for this purpose alone. I submit that could never have been the intention of the Legislature. Moreover under sec. 24 of the Civil Procedure Code and Chap. IV of Bengal Civil Courts Act when a suit is transferred to another Court this latter Court is invested with all the powers of the original Court and as such has jurisdiction to punish for contempt.

[CARNDUFF, J.—You could have argued that under the old Code but the words of the present Code are clear. It is a penal legislation and ought to be construed strictly.]

CARNDUFF, J.—This is an Appeal against an order made by the District Judge of Dacca under Or. XXXIX, r. 2, sub-r. (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the attachment of the Appellant's property and his imprisonment for six months as the penalty for his having disobeyed a temporary injunction issued in a suit brought against him.

The order for the temporary injunction was passed by the Munsif of Dacca, and, after it had been passed, the suit was, for some reason or other, transferred to the file of the District Judge. The disobedience complained of admittedly occurred after the transfer.

The first point taken on behalf of the Appellant is that the District Judge's order was without jurisdiction, and I am of opinion that the objection must prevail.

R. 2, sub-r. (1) gives a Court power to issue a temporary injunction at any time after the commencement of a suit and sub-r. (3) then enacts that, in case of disobedience or breach, "the Court granting an injunction" may punish the contempt. These words, which are much more explicit than those used in the third paragraph of the corresponding sec. 493 of the Code of 1882, seem to me to be perfectly clear and unequivocal, and I can find nothing either in sec. 24 of the present Code, which provides for the transfer or withdrawal of cases by a District Judge, or in Chap. IV of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, which contains some further provisions on the same subject, to authorise, expressly or by necessary implication, the District Judge, who had not granted this injunction, to exercise the special jurisdiction conferred on the Court that granted it, merely because the suit in which it had been granted, had been transferred to his file.

On this ground alone, the Appeal must, I think, succeed: but I would make no order as to costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3164 OF 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1912,
9, May.

NABADIPENDRA MUKERJEE, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
MADHU SUDAN MONDAL and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Pleadings—Variance between Plaintiff's allegation and proof, when ground for dismissal of suit—True rule—Its object—Suit for recovery of possession—Mode of ouster and time thereof, allegation as to, if material.

Where an order having been passed in favour of the Defendants under sec. 335 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 the decree-holder (now Plaintiff) sued for recovery of possession upon declaration of his title, alleging that the order itself deprived him of possession, but the Courts below dismissed the suit without trial on the merits, on the ground that the order under sec. 335, C. P. C., had not that effect :

Held—That the suit should have been tried on the merits, as the particular mode in which or the point of time at which the ouster of the Plaintiff took place was not so material that a variance between pleading and proof on such matters would alone be considered a sufficient ground for dismissing the suit.

The determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case made thereby. It does not follow from this that every variance between pleading and proof is material and justifies a dismissal of the claim.

The rule that the allegations and the proof must correspond is intended to serve a double purpose, viz., first, to apprise the Defendant distinctly and specifically of the case he is called upon to answer, so that he may properly make his defence and may not be taken by surprise ; and, secondly, to preserve an accurate record of the cause of action as a protection against a second proceeding founded upon the same allegations.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 17th of December 1909 against the decree of Mr. S. B. Choudhury, District Judge of Zillah Birbhum, dated the 8th of September 1909, affirming the decree of Babu Hriday Nath Majumdar, Munsif at Rampurhat, dated the 7th of January 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Krishna Prosad Sarbadhikari for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Ramani Mohan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

This is an Appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The Plaintiff alleges title by purchase at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree. He further states that when he took delivery of possession through Court, he was opposed by the Defendants, which led to a proceeding under sec. 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. The Plaintiff interprets the decision in this proceeding as adverse to him and asserts that he lost possession thereby ; he, therefore, claims to recover possession from the Defendants. The Defendants resist the claim on the merits, put the Plaintiff to the proof of his title, and allege that their possession was sustained by virtue of the proceedings under sec. 335 mentioned in the plaint. The Defendants also take the stereotyped objection usually wholly frivolous, that there was no cause of action as against them. The Court of first instance proceeded to dismiss the suit without trial on the merits, because in its opinion the effect of the order under sec. 335, C. P. C., was not to dispossess the Plaintiff. Upon appeal, the District Judge has affirmed that order of dismissal. The statement of the history of the case will illustrate how grave injustice may be done to a litigant when the Courts are astute to favour frivolous objections on the part of the defence.

The parties are agreed that the effect of the order in the proceeding under sec. 335, C. P. C., is to deprive the Plaintiff of possession of the disputed property and to secure possession to the Defendants. The question, therefore, whether the order had that effect, does not require examination. But even if it be assumed that the order under sec. 335 had not the effect attributed to it by the Plaintiff, it is clear that the suit cannot be dismissed on that ground. The suit is for declaration of title and for recovery of possession of immoveable property. It is wholly immaterial in what precise manner or on what exact date the dispossession took place. No doubt, as stated by Lord Westbury in Ashen Chunder v. Shama Churn (1), the determination in a cause should be proceeded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case made thereby. It does not follow, however, that every variance between pleading and proof is material and justifies a dismissal of the claim: such an extreme view was not tolerated in England even when rules of pleading were in the highest degree technical and artificial. Purcell v. Macnamara (2), Wickes v. Gordon (3). The rule that the allegations and the proof must correspond is intended to serve a double purpose, namely, first, to apprise the Defendant, distinctly and specifically, of the case he is called upon to answer, so that he may properly make his defence and may not be taken by surprise; and secondly, to preserve an accurate record of the cause of action as a protection against a second proceeding founded upon the same allegations. Tested in the light of these principles, the objection of the Defendant proves wholly unsubstantial. The particular mode in which the ouster of the Plaintiff took place, or the specific point of time when it happened, is really not material. The Plaintiff has to prove his title first; if he does so, he has further to prove his possession within twelve years prior to the suit; on what precise date, within this twelve years, he lost possession, is not a matter of consequence: at any rate, it cannot take the Defendants by surprise, because he at any rate knows when he dispossessed the Plaintiff. From every possible point of view, the objection of the Defendant thus proves groundless and cannot be sustained.

The result is that the Appeal is allowed, the decrees of the Courts below discharged, and the case remanded to the Court of first instance in order that the suit may be tried on the merits. The Plaintiff is entitled to costs in this Court and the Court of Appeal below as also hearing, fees in the Court of first instance. As the objection was of a manifestly frivolous character, we assess the hearing-fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 760 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 1 and 2, May. Judgment, 2, May.

TEK LAL SINGH and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. SRIPATI CHOWDHURI, Plaintiff, Respondent.

The Indian Registration Act (XV of 1877), sec. 17 (b)—Award, private, if compulsorily registrable—Deed of partition and award, distinction between.

The word 'award' in cl (b) of sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act is not restricted to awards filed in Court and a private award is not compulsorily registrable. But a document which purports to be an award may amount to something more than an award; if the parties to the reference affix their signatures to the award in token of their acceptance of the decision of the arbitrators the award may thereupon become a deed of partition and may as such become compulsorily registrable.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 29th of March 1911 against the decree of D. H. Kingsford, Esq., District Judge of Chotanagpore, dated the 23rd of December 1910, affirming the decree of Babu Ashutosh Pal, Munsif of Giridih, dated the 29th of April 1910.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Baranashibasi Mookerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Hira Prosad Chatterjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the Defendants in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The subject-matter of the litigation originally formed part of joint property held by the Plaintiff and his brother, the father of the Defendants. At the trial, the Plaintiff produced an unregistered private award which, he contended, conclusively established that the joint properties had been divided and that the disputed land had been allotted to his share. The Courts below have acted upon this award and founded their decision thereon, though it had not been previously enforced in Court, Bhajahari v. Behary Lal (1). On the present appeal, it has been argued that the unregistered award was not admissible in evidence, because it was in essence a deed of partition and as such was compulsorily registrable under sec. 17 (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1877. It has also been contended that there is no evidence to show that two of the Defendants ever agreed to the arbitration.

In so far as the first of these points is concerned, reliance has been placed by the Appellants upon the case of Upendra Nath v. Umesh (2) to show that a partition deed is compulsorily registrable, if it affects title to the property of more than the statutory value. This has not been disputed by the Respondent. It has been argued, however, on their behalf that the instrument now before us, is an award and not a deed of partition, and that as an award, it is not compulsorily registrable as pointed out in Golab Singh v. Mohor Singh (3). The determination of this question depends upon the construction of cl. (b) of sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, which lays down that decrees and orders of Court and awards are not compulsorily registrable. On behalf of the Appellants, it has been argued that the collocation of the words of this clause indicates that its application is restricted to awards filed in Court. This contention is not supported by the language used by the Legislature and is opposed to the decision of this Court in the case of Tarakant v. Raj Kishore (4). If the term 'Award' was intended to be restricted in cl. (1) to awards which have been filed in Court, the provision for exclusion of awards would be needless, because if a proceeding has been taken in Court to enforce an award, such proceeding would terminate in a decree or order in which the award itself would be merged; consequently, a provision to the effect that decrees and orders of Courts are not compulsorily registrable would completely cover the case in point. We are consequently not prepared to accept the interpretation put upon cl. (1) of sec. 17 by the learned Vakil for the Appellant. We are fortified in this view by an examination of the language of cl. (b) of sub sec. 2 of sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act of 1908. That clause now provides that any decree or order of a Court and any award is not compulsorily registrable; so that whatever doubt might have been possible as to the true meaning of the provision contained in the statute of 1887, that doubt has now been removed by the Legislature. We hold accordingly that the award in this case was not compulsorily registrable. We may add, however, that a document which purports to be an award may amount to something more than an award; if the parties to the reference affix their signatures to the award in token of their acceptance of the decision of the arbitrators, the award may thereupon become a deed of partition, and may as such become compulsorily registrable. The distinction between an award and a deed of partition to which we have just adverted, was explained by Mr. Justice West in the case of Amarsi v. Dayal (5), and it was recognised in the cases of Ratan Chand v. Sitaram (6) and Azmiat Singh v. Kulwant (7). See also Bhagat Ram v. Paras Ram (8). The first contention of the Appellant must consequently be overruled.

(2) 12 C. L. J. 25 (1910).

(3) 7 P. L. R. 532.

As regards the second point, we are of opinion that it is entirely unsubstantial. It does not appear from the proceedings in the Court below that any attempt was made by the second and the third Defendants to repudiate the award on the ground that the arbitrators had not been duly authorised by them to effect the partition. On the other hand, they made common case with their eldest brother who was the head of their branch of the family, and we observe that the present appeal has been jointly preferred by all the three brothers. Under these circumstances, they cannot be allowed to raise a question of fact which was not really in controversy in the primary Court, though it may be conceded that the point was sought to be raised before the Judicial Commissioner.

The result is that the decree of the Court of Appeal below is confirmed and this Appeal dismissed; but there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2979 OF 1910.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.
WALMSLEY, J.
Heard, 4, April.
Judgment, 11, April.

KAILASH CHUNDRA ADHIKARI, Defendant No. 3, Appellant,
v.
KARUNA NATH CHOWDHRY, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Hindu Law—Dayabhaga School—Succession—Doctrine of spiritual benefit—Paternal great-grandfather's son's daughter's son and maternal uncle, who is preferable.

Under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, the paternal great-grandfather's son's daughter's son of a deceased Hindu is preferable to his mother's brother as heir, even though the latter is specifically mentioned in the Dayabhaga as an heir and the former is not, and his precise position in the category of heirs is not laid down in the case of GURU GOBIND v. ANANDA LAL (1).

BRAJA LAL v. JIBAN KRISHNA (4) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 5th of September 1910 against a decree of Babu Bepin Behary Dey, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 2nd of June 1910, confirming a decree of Babu Rai Mohan Kormokar, Munsif of that place, dated the 1st of September 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendra Nath Bagchi for the Appellant.

Babu Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The main question involved in this Appeal is whether a paternal great-grandfather's son's daughter's son (i.e., a granduncle's daughter's son), or a mother's brother (i.e., a maternal uncle) is the preferable heir according to the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law. The Plaintiff brought a suit for rent of certain property which he claimed to have inherited from one Sarat Chandra, the last male owner, on the death of his mother Kunjamoni, as his granduncle's daughter's son The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the tenants) raised the objection that he was not entitled to the rent on the ground that the Defendant No. 3 was the heir of Sarat Chandra. The Defendant No. 3 thereupon was added as a party to the suit and he pleaded that he as the maternal uncle of Sarat Chandra was his heir in preference to the Plaintiff. The Courts below have held that the Plaintiff is he preferential heir and have decreed the suit for rent in his favour. The Defendant No. 3 has appealed to this Court.

According to the doctrine of spiritual benefit the Plaintiff is the preferential heir, being competent to offer funeral cakes to the paternal great-grandfather of the last male owner in which he participates, whereas the Defendant is competent to offer such cakes to his maternal ancestors only, and the first kind of cakes are of superior religious efficacy in comparison to the second. The view that the principle of spiritual benefit governs the law of inheritance in the Dayabhaga was authoritatively laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Guru Gobind v. Ananda Lal (1), and again by another Full Bench in the case of Digumbar Ray v. Moti Lal (2). It has been contended on behalf of the Appellant that the principle of spiritual benefit is no test of heirship, at any rate, not the sole test, and that the doctrine has been misunderstood by Mitter, J., in the Full Bench case of Guru Gobind v. Ananda Lal (1), and reliance has been placed on certain observations made by Shastri Golap Chandra Sarkar in his work on Hindu Law, 4th Ed., p. 323. An attempt was made in a recent case, Kedar Nath v. Amrita Lal (3), to induce the Court to have the matter reconsidered by the Full Court on the ground that the Full Bench took an erroneous view of the fundamental principles which underlie the Dayabhaga and consequently arrived at incorrect conclusions, but it was unsuccessful. The learned Judges (Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ.) expressed the opinion that had the matter been res integra the view put forward by the Appellant would deserve consideration, but that on well-established principles the matter should not be re-opened, the law on the subject having been authoritatively laid down by two successive Full Benches, once in 1870 and again in 1883, and previous attempts to re-open the matter having never been successful. We agree with the opinion expressed in that case, and must treat the law as settled by the Full Bench decisions.

It is contended, however, that the precise position of the paternal uncle's daughter's son in the category of heirs was not determined in the case of Guru Gobind v. Ananda Lal (1) and that the fact that the mother's brother is expressly named as an heir in the Dayabhaga and the great-grandfather's son's daughter's son is not mentioned, goes to show that the former is entitled to succeed in preference to the the latter. It is further contended that the funeral cake offered by the granduncle's daughter's son although offered to a paternal ancestor of the deceased, coming as it does through a maternal line, is not preferable to that given by the Defendants. It is true the oblations offered by the Plaintiff to the great-grandfather of the deceased come through a maternal line, but oblations offered to a paternal ancestor of the deceased in which he participates, although coming through a maternal line, are of superior efficacy to those offered to maternal ancestors of the deceased.

The argument based upon the ground that the maternal uncle is expressly mentioned and the granduncle's daughter's son is not mentioned in the Dayabhaga has no force. As pointed out by D. N. Mitter, J., in the Full Bench case "every one who has gone through the Dayabhaga must have perceived that the specific enumeration of each individual heir was not the object which the author had in view. It is perfectly true that a few of the heirs have been mentioned by name here and there: but the great majority of them have been left to be determined by the application of the principle of spiritual benefit. Thus, of the numerous relations who are entitled to come in as sapindas by virtue of their right to offer oblations to the maternal ancestors of the deceased proprietor, the maternal uncle is the only one who has been mentioned by name. Then, again, among the sakulyas or kinsmen connected by divided oblations, the grandson's grandson is the only person who has been specifically enumerated: and of the samanodakas, or kinsmen connected by libations of water, not one even has been so enumerated. In the face of all these facts, it is impossible to contend that the mere absence of specific enumeration is any ground whatever for excluding one single individual who is really competent to fulfil the conditions of heirship laid down in the Dayabhaga itself."

No doubt the precise position of the paternal uncle's daughter's son in the category of heirs was not laid down in that case but in the subsequent case of Braja Lal v. Jiban Krishna (4), the precise position of the father's brother's daughter's son in the line of heirs was considered and it was held that there could be no doubt that he comes before the sapinda relations in the maternal line. The learned Judges in that case (Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J.) observed as follows :—"This will be seen from the Dayabhaga, Chap. XI, s. vi, paras. 13 and 20, in the former of which the author indicates the reason for the succession of maternal kinsmen and for the preference of sapindas in the paternal over those in the maternal line, according to the doctrine of spiritual benefit. That reason is shortly this. The wealth of a deceased person, who can no longer have temporal enjoyment, should devolve on those who can confer spiritual benefit on him. Now the sapindas in the paternal line offer oblations to the paternal ancestors which the deceased was bound to offer, and in which he participates, and the sapindas in the maternal line offer oblations to the maternal ancestors, which the deceased was bound to offer, but in which he does not participate ; so that, while they both confer spiritual benefit on the deceased the former benefit him doubly by enabling him to participate in the oblations offered by them and by discharging a duty that was incumbent on him of offering libations to certain ancestors, and the latter benefit him only in one way, namely, by offering certain oblations which he was bound to offer ; and therefore while both are entitled to inherit his estate, the latter succeed only on failure of the former. After showing that his doctrine is in conformity with the texts of Manu, the author of the Dayabhaga states his conclusion in para. 20."

The granduncle's daughter's son would on the same principles succeed in preference to the maternal uncle. Dayabhaga, Ch. XI, sec. 6, verse 9, says :—"The succession of the grandfather and great-grandfather's lineal descendants including the daughter's sons, must be understood in a similar manner according to the proximity of the funeral offering ;" and verse 12 says "on failure of any lineal descendants of the paternal great-grandfather down to the daughter's son who might present oblations in which the deceased would participate," the property devolves on the maternal kindred. And in the Dayakrama Sangraha, Ch. I, sec. x, verse 13, it is stated "(In default of paternal great-grandfather's son) the succession devolves on the paternal grandfather's brother's daughter's son, who presents an oblation in which the deceased owner participates, namely, to the owner's paternal great-grandfather [i.e., his maternal great-grandfather]."

We are accordingly of opinion that the Courts below are right in holding that the Plaintiff is the preferable heir.

It was next contended that the Court of Appeal below ought to have come to a finding whether the ⅓rd share of one Nilmony (Plaintiff's mother) constituted the stridhan of Kunjamoni, the mother of Sarat Chandra, because if it was her stridhan, it passed to her brother Defendant No. 3. But the question was not raised in the lower Appellate Court. It is said that it is a pure question of law, but the decision of it depends upon questions of fact. For instance, it will have to be found whether the possession of Kunjamoni was adverse to Nilmony, a cosharer, and if so, whether Nilmony died within 12 years of the suit, in which case the Plaintiff being the reversioner, will not be bound by any adverse possession by Kunjamoni against Nilmony. The Defendant No. 3 cannot complain that no findings were arrived at on these points, as he did not raise the question at all in the lower Appellate Court, and we cannot allow him to raise the point now. The Appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Judgment, 24, April.	Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sch. I, Arts. 61, 99, 120—Contribution suit—Limitation when begins to run—Date of payment.

One R. B. deposited a certain sum of money in a Bank owned by R and his two brothers S and G. R. B. brought a suit and obtained a decree for the money deposited against R and the representatives of his brothers S and G. On Appeal the High Court exempted G's representatives from liability under the decree in so far as they inherited the share of the family property from G. R. B. executed his decree against R and advertised some properties exclusively belonging to R for sale. On the 8th December 1900 one Raja S as the purchaser of certain mehals belonging to R and his son (the Plaintiff) paid in the decretal amount and the execution case was finally struck off. R put in an application stating that the petition filed by the decree-holder stating satisfaction of the decree was without his knowledge and that the negotiations between Raja S and himself regarding the sale of the properties had not been concluded. Raja S sued R for specific performance of the contract to sell and ultimately the High Court held that he could not get a decree for specific performance but was only entitled to get back the money advanced with interest from the 8th December 1900. On 11th January 1906, Raja S in execution of this decree sold certain properties belonging to the Plaintiff, the sale being confirmed on 21st June 1906, when Raja S obtained payment. On 3rd February 1908 the Plaintiff instituted a suit for contribution against the legal representatives of R's brother S.

Held—That it was doubtful whether Arts. 61 and 99, Sch. I of the Limitation Act were applicable to the present case and under Art. 120 the period of limitation was six years from the time when the right to sue accrued.

The date of payment by Raja S was not the date of payment by R within the meaning of Art. 99 of the Limitation Act. The Plaintiff's right to sue accrued when the decree obtained by Raja S was satisfied by sale of Plaintiff's property and the suit being brought within two years from the date of that payment was not barred by limitation.

These were Appeals preferred on the

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These two Appeals arise out of a suit for contribution and the facts which gave rise to the litigation are these :—One Ram Bhatta deposited a certain sum of money in a Bank owned by the Plaintiff's father Ram Lal and his two brothers Sudhist Lal and Gopal Lal. As Ram Bhatta did not get his money, he brought a suit and obtained a decree for the sum deposited by him against Ram Lal, one Janki Koer representing the estate of Sudhist Lal and the representatives of Gopal Lal. This decree was passed on the 30th August 1898. On appeal, the High Court exempted Gopal Lal's branch, namely, Jagannath and Baijnath, in so far as they inherited the share of the family property from Gopal Lal, from liability under the decree. This decree of the High Court was passed on the 4th August 1904. In the meantime, Ram Bhatta having executed his decree against Ram Lal advertised certain properties belonging exclusively to Ram Lal for sale. Thereupon one Raja Shib Chandra Banerjee paid in the decretal amount due to the decree-holder Ram Bhatta on the 8th December 1900 and a petition was put in by the latter in the executing Court to the effect that the decretal amount Rs. 7,263-5 had been realised by him on that date through Raja Shib Chandra Banerjee, the purchaser of certain mehals belonging to the judgment-debtor Ram Lal and his son. The Court thereupon ordered that the case be finally disposed of. On the very same day, however, Ram Lal put in an application before the Court stating that the petition filed on behalf of the decree-holder was without his knowledge and that in fact the negotiations between the Raja and the Petitioner regarding the sale of the Petitioner's properties had not been concluded and that, on the contrary, the Petitioner had concluded negotiations as regards the sale of his properties with another person who had advanced a certain sum of money and had brought it to Court for payment to the decree-holder. The Court, thereupon, made an order to the effect that, as the execution case has already been disposed of, no orders were necessary to be passed on the application of the judgment-debtor Then began litigation between Raja Shib Chandra Banerjee and Ram Lal . The former sued the latter for specific performance of a contract to sell certain properties. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance but, on appeal, the High Court held that the Raja could not get a decree for specific performance but was only entitled to get back the money advanced, namely, Rs. 7,263-5 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 8th December 1900 up to the date of realisation. In execution of this decree, Raja Shib Chandra sold certain properties belonging to the Plaintiff on the 11th January 1906 and the sale was confirmed on the 21st June 1906, on which date Raja Shib Chandra obtained payment of Rs. 9,518. The present suit was instituted on the 3rd February 1908 by the Plaintiff for contribution against his co-sharers, the legal representatives of Sudhist Lal.

The defence was mainly based on the plea of limitation; but the Court below overruled it and gave a decree to the Plaintiff in a modified form against the three sets of Defendants and the Defendants have preferred these two appeals to this Court.

It has been contended on behalf of the Appellant, first, that the cause of action for this suit arose on the 8th December 1900 when the joint decree obtained by Ram Bhatta was paid off, that three years having passed from that date, this suit is barred by limitation; and that the realisation of Raja Shib Chandra's decree by sale of the Plaintiff's property did not give the Plaintiff any cause of action against the Defendants; and, secondly, that no interest ought to have been allowed: at any rate, the interest allowed is excessive.

The Court below has held that Art. 99 of the first schedule of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable to the present case. That article runs as follows:—"For contribution by a party who has paid the whole or more than his share of the amount due under a joint decree or by a sharer in a joint estate who has paid the whole or more than his share of the amount of revenue due from himself and his co-sharers, the period of limitation is three years from the date of the payment in excess of the Plaintiff's own share." It is argued that the payment of the amount due under the joint decree was the payment made on the 8th December 1900 by Raja Shib Chandra Banerjee and that, although the payment was not made by the Plaintiff's father it must be taken as if it was made by him through Raja Shib Chandra, having regard to the fact, as found by the High Court, that he had had the benefit of it. But the payment by the Raja was not made under any contract with the Plaintiff's father nor at his request, and, when the payment was made, the Plaintiff's father at once repudiated it by a petition presented to the Court. The payment by the Raja could not give the Plaintiff's father (Ram Lal) any right to sue his co-sharers unless and until he was compelled to pay the money to the Raja. If the Raja did not sue Ram Lal for the money, the latter would have had no right to sue his co-sharers for contribution. Any suit by Ram Lal before he paid the money to the Raja might have been met by the plea that there was no payment by him, much less any payment in excess of his share which alone would have given him a right of suit for contribution. We think therefore that the date of payment by Raja Shib Chandra was not the date of payment by Ram Lal within the meaning of Art. 99. If that article applies, the date on which Raja Shib Chandra's decree was realised by sale of Ram Lal's property should be treated as the date of payment in excess of Ram Lal's share within the meaning of Art. 99. It is very doubtful, however, whether Art. 99 applies to the present case, because the amount due under the joint decree was not paid in the first instance by Ram Lal and it has been doubted in this Court whether money realised by sale of Plaintiff's property in execution of a joint decree against the Plaintiff and his co-sharers is money paid within the meaning of this article, see Fockeruddin Mahomed v. Mahima Chandra (1), though in the Madras High Court it has been held that the word "paid" in Arts. 99 and 61 would include payments derived out of the sale proceeds of the property of the person seeking contribution [see Raja of Vizianagram v. Raja Satrucharlu (2)].

(1) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 529 (1878).

JANKI KOER v. DOMI LAL.

Next, we have to see if the suit is barred under Art. 61. That article prescribes a period of three years for a suit for money payable to Plaintiff for money paid for the Defendant, from the date when the money is paid. It has been contended on behalf of the Appellant that the article merely says 'money paid for the Defendants" not that it should be paid by the 'Plaintiff' and that, therefore, the date on which Raja Shib Chandra paid the money must be taken as the date on which the money was paid. But we are of opinion that the article contemplates a payment by the Plaintiff and not by a third person and, as we have already said, the payment by the Raja would not have given Ram Lal any right to sue his co-sharers, so long as he had not to pay the Raja. If the article applies, we think the date on which the Raja's decree was realised by sale of Ram Lal's property should be treated as the date when the money was paid within the meaning of Art. 61. But, as we have already pointed out, it has been doubted whether the word 'paid' includes realisation of money by sale of Plaintiff's property.

The circumstances of the case are peculiar. The decree under which Ram Lal and his co-sharers were jointly liable was paid off by a third party Raja Shib Chandra without any request on the part of Ram Lal. Ram Lal, however, was held liable to pay the amount so paid by the Raja on the ground that he was benefited by the payment. But the payment did not benefit Ram Lal alone. The payment benefited his co-sharers as much as it benefited Ram Lal. Under the circumstances, when the amount paid by the Raja was realised from Ram Lal alone by the sale of his properties, he was equitably entitled to obtain from his co-sharers their proportionate share of the original debt which had in this manner been discharged.

If the Plaintiff has the right to recover the money, as we think he has, and if the claim does not fall under Art. 99 or Art. 61, the case must come under Art. 120. As the Privy Council pointed out in the case of Reasat Ali v. Hosin Banu (3), Art. 120 would apply unless it is clear that the suit is under some other article. Under Art. 120, a suit can be brought within six years from the time when the right to sue accrues. We think the Plaintiff's right to sue accrued when Raja Shib Chandra's decree was satisfied by sale of Plaintiff's property and the suit was brought within two years from the date of that payment. We are accordingly of opinion that the suit is not barred by limitation.

The next question is as regards the interest. The Court below has awarded interest at the rate of 12 per cent.: but no reasons have been assigned why the Plaintiff should get interest at a higher rate than that allowed in the suit of Raja Shib Chandra. We also think that the Plaintiff ought not to get any costs of the suit brought by Raja Shib Chandra and that the liability of the Defendants ought to be determined upon the basis of the amount decreed in the suit of Ram Bhatta together with interest at six per cent. per annum up to the date of the decree in this case.

The result therefore is that the Plaintiff will get a decree for 6½ annas share of Rs. 7,263-5 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 8th December 1900 up to this date. On the total amount thus decreed, interest at the ordinary rate of six per cent. will run up to realisation. The Defendants, 1st, 2nd and 3rd parties respectively, will contribute according to their share.

Under the circumstances of the case, each party is to bear his own costs in both the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 363—Kidnapping—Indian Divorce Act (III of 1869)—Decree nisi by District Judge for dissolution of marriage—Direction to deliver up child to husband—Removal of child from husband's custody before confirmation of decree by High Court, if offence.

Where on an application by the husband for divorce the District Judge made a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage and also directed the Petitioner (the wife) to deliver up to the husband the son born of the marriage and subsequent to the decree the husband without the assistance of the Court obtained the custody of the son but before the confirmation of the decree by the High Court under sec. 17 of the Indian Divorce Act the Petitioner removed the boy from the father's custody and was charged under sec. 363, I. P. C.:

Held—That the order for custody which was made, not being intended to be an ad interim order which it is open to a District Judge to make at any time while a case is pending, was an order nisi without legal effect until confirmed by the High Court, and the Petitioner committed no offence under sec. 363, I. P. C., in removing the boy from the father's custody.

This was a Rule granted on the 25th of November 1913 against the proceedings taken in connection with a charge under sec. 363, I. P. C., pending in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Dinapur.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioner, Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Barthwick, was arrested on the 8th October 1913, in execution of a warrant issued by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Dinapur, the charge against her being that she had kidnapped her child from the lawful guardianship of the father, Mr. Herbert Charles Barthwick. It appears that the parties were married in 1905. Eight years later Mr. Barthwick filed a petition for divorce in the Court of the District Judge, Patna, on the ground of adultery and obtained a decree nisi on the 18th August 1913. In that decree it was directed that Mrs. Barthwick do deliver up to Mr. Barthwick the son born of the marriage. Subsequent to the decree Mr. Barthwick without the assistance of the Court obtained custody of the boy. On the 10th October 1913, the present Petitioner, Mrs. Barthwick, removed the child from Mr. Barthwick's house. Mr. Barthwick informed the Police and after enquiry the present case was instituted upon a police-report charging the Petitioner, Mrs. Barthwick, under sec. 363 of the Indian Penal Code, with the offence of kidnapping the child from the lawful guardianship of Mr. Barthwick.

The decree nisi for divorce, dated the 18th August 1913, was sent by the District Judge to the High Court for confirmation. The decree has not yet been confirmed by the High Court and in fact the minimum period prescribed by sec. 17 of the Indian Divorce Act has not yet expired. The parties are therefore still man and wife [Warter v. Warter (1)].

The case against the Petitioner however is that her act of removing the child from Mr. Barthwick's custody in October amounted to an offence by reason of the order of the District Judge in August to the effect that Mrs. Barthwick should have the custody of the child. The question for decision is whether this order by the District Judge was of immediate effect or whether it was merely an order nisi subject to confirmation by the High Court and is therefore not yet in force. The material portion of the District Judge's judgment is as follows :—"The following decree is accordingly made (a) that the marriage be dissolved, (b) that the Respondent Anne Barthwick do deliver up to the Petitioner the son born of the marriage . . . (c) that the co-Respondent do pay the Petitioner Rs. 3,000 as the costs of this suit. It is ordered that the above decree be forwarded under sec. 17 of Act III of 1869 to the High Court for confirmation." The order for custody of the child formed part of the decree and we interpret the decree to mean that the order was not to be of effect until confirmed by the High Court. There has been no such confirmation.

We observe that Mr. Barthwick's petition for divorce contained no prayer for the custody of the child or any notice that application for custody would be made. The divorce proceedings were ex parte. It does not even appear that the custody of the child was asked for at the hearing. Now, according to the practice in England if the custody of a child is not prayed for in the petition, it is necessary to file a separate petition for that purpose which must be filed and served in the same way as an ordinary petition. A similar practice prevails in this Court [Ledlie v. Ledlie (2)]. Mrs. Barthwick was never served with any notice informing her that application for custody of the child would be made, and she had no opportunity of showing cause why such an order should not be made. We cannot think that the District Judge can have intended to make such an order absolute without notice to her. This confirms us in our view that the order for custody of the child was not intended to be an order absolute.

Where the custody of the children is asked for at the hearing of a petition for divorce, the order for such custody forms part of the decree nisi (Brown and Powles on Divorce, 7th Ed., p. 413), and is not absolute until confirmed. No doubt it is open to a District Judge to make an ad interim order for custody at any time while a case is pending, but no application for an ad interim order was made in the present case and we are satisfied that the order that was made was not contended to be an ad interim order. It was an order nisi without legal effect until confirmed by the High Court. It has not been so confirmed.

This being so, Mrs. Barthwick committed no offence punishable under the Penal Code when she removed the boy from Mr. Barthwick's custody. The Rule is made absolute. We direct that the proceedings against the Petitioner be stayed.

Rule made absolute.

Bengal Excise Act (V, B. C., of 1909), sec. 2, cls. 6, 7, 14, 15, secs. 46, 48—Elements necessary for conviction under sec. 48—"Denatured," definition of—"Manufacture," definition of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 410, if controlled by secs. 75, 81, of the Excise Act—Sec. 233, Cr. P. C.—Misjoinder of charges—Same transaction—Applicability of sec. 233 to summons cases.

Where the accused was charged with having in his possession perfumed spirit made with denatured spirit rendered fit for human consumption, with having manufactured and sold such spirit from time to time, with having attempted to render fit for human consumption denatured spirit and keeping in possession and holding the same and was convicted by a Presidency Magistrate under secs 46, 48 of the Bengal Excise Act:

Held—That to support a conviction under sec. 48 two elements must be established, namely, first, that the spirit is denatured spirit and, secondly, that the accused has attempted to render such spirit fit for human consumption.

The fact that the Act whilst providing for the punishment of an attempt to render fit for human consumption denatured spirit does not provide any punishment for a successful attempt, suggests that the definition of "denatured" as given in cl. (6) of sec. 2 contemplates such a process as will defy any chemical treatment.

That as it was not shown that the total quantity of denatured spirit in the possession of the accused exceeded one imperial gallon the accused was not proved to possess excisable article in contravention of the Act or of a rule made under the Act.

That the term "manufacture" as defined in cl. 15 of sec. 2 includes every process whether natural or artificial by which any excisable article is produced or prepared as also every process for the rectification, flavouring, blending or colouring of liquor. The essence of "manufacture" consequently is that it is a process and the mere dilution of denatured spirit with water is not a process for the manufacture of an excisable article.

That secs. 75 and 81 of the Excise Act only applied to proceedings before a Collector and did not stand in the way of the order of the Magistrate convicting the accused from being challenged by way of appeal under sec. 410, Cr. P. C.

That the acts imputed to the accused could not be held to constitute the same transaction and the trial was vitiated by misjoinder of charges in contravention of sec. 233, Cr. P. C. The fact that the trial took place as in a summons case did not exclude the application of sec. 233, Cr. P. C.

Quære—Whether spirit diluted with water is excisable article or intoxicating liquor within the meaning of cls. 7 and 14 of sec. 2.

U. N. BISWAS v. KING-EMPEROR.

This was an Appeal presented on 22nd of April 1913 from a sentence of Mr. Nanda Lal Bagchi, Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 25th of March 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment

Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Mr. Bagram for the Crown.

The Appellant Biswas has been convicted, by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, of offences under secs. 46 and 48 of the Bengal Excise Act, 1909, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 210 under the latter section ; no separate sentence has been passed under the former section. The circumstances antecedent to the prosecution, as established by the evidence, may be briefly narrated.

On the 12th October 1912, the Deputy Inspector of Excise at Calcutta, upon information received, searched the premises of the accused and found 32 boxes each containing 6 bottles and an isolated bottle of Eau-de-Cologne and also 23 long-shaped Eau-de-Cologne phials all containing similar liquid. On examination the contents were found to be perfumed denatured spirit. The Deputy Inspector also found two boxes of labels similar to those affixed to the phials. The accused was thereupon prosecuted and charged with possessing, without license, 193 bottles and 23 long-shaped phials containing perfumed spirit made with denatured spirit which had been rendered fit for human consumption ; he was also charged with having manufactured and sold such spirit from time to time, with attempting to render denatured spirit fit for human consumption, with having in his possession such spirit, and with bottling such spirit for the purpose of sale. The accused repudiated all these charges, and asserted that the liquid contained in the bottles and phials was intended to be used as a furniture-wash and not as liquor to be consumed. The prosecution has resulted in the conviction of the accused as already stated.

On the present appeal, the propriety of the conviction has been assailed on the ground that the elements necessary to constitute an offence under secs. 46 and 48 have not been established on the evidence. We shall examine separately the arguments in relation to the two sections named, and as the sentence has been passed only on the basis of the conviction under sec. 48, we shall first consider the scope and effect of that section in relation to the facts elicited at the trial.

Sec. 48, in so far as it is sought to be made applicable to the case before us, provides that if any person attempts to render fit for human consumption any spirit which has been denatured, he shall be liable to be punished in the prescribed manner. To support a conviction under sec. 48 two elements must consequently be established, namely, first, that the spirit is denatured spirit, and, secondly, that the accused has attempted to render such spirit fit for human consumption. Now, cl. (6) of sec. 2 defines the term "denatured" to mean "effectually and permanently rendered unfit for human consumption." A very serious difficulty is raised by this definition. The words "unfit for human consumption" may perhaps be paraphrased as "liable to be injurious to health, but what is mean by the words "effectually and permanently?" The Legislature cannot have intended to mean by "dena ured spirit" such as would remain unfit for human consumption inspite of dilution with water, as even the most poisonous substances can be rendered not only harmless, but in some cases beneficial by sufficient dilution. Then, is the definition intended to meet the case of spirit so treated that no chemical process which does not substantially increase the bulk of the liquor, can render it fit for human consumption, or, did the Legislature contemplate some process which in the absence of some chemical treatment would render it effectually and permanently unfi for consumption; in other words, did the Legislature contemplate some denaturing process which would be proof against any process intended to alter the nature of the spirit, or only a process which would be permanently effective in the absence of some chemical treatment or proc ss of filtration? On the one hand, it is difficult to imagine a denaturing process which would preserve its effect in the face of every possible chemical treatment of the liquor; on the other hand, it is singular that while the Act provides for the punishment of an attempt to render fit for consumption denatured spirit, it does not provide any punishment for a successful attempt, or, in other words, the completed act; and the absence of such a provision suggests that the definition of "denatured" contemplates such a process as will defy any chemical treatment. If that be the meaning, it is clear that in the present case the spirit was not denatured, for the witness Jinks speaks of the liquid as having been "so manipulated that it no longer possesses the characteristics of denatured spirit," and the Magistrate finds that the accused not only attempted to render the spirit fit for human sumption but actually succeeded in his attempt. If the other meaning be the correct one, it is sufficient to state that there is no evidence on the side of the prosecution or admission by the accused that the spirit was in fact ever denatured. Consequently the conviction under sec. 48 of the Bengal Excise Act cannot be supported.

As regards the conviction under sec. 46, reliance has been placed only upon cls. (a) and (d). These clauses, in so far as they have any possible application to the facts of the present case, render a person liable to the prescribed punishment, if, in contravention of the Act or of any rule, notification or order made, issued or given under the Act, he manufactures, possesses or sells any excisable article or bottles any liquor for purposes of sale. Before we examine the scope and effect of these provisions it is necessary to premise that under the rules made by the Excise authorities, every person is entitled to keep in his possession without a license or a pass, one imperial gallon of what is technically called denatured spirit. Let it be assumed for the purposes of argument—and for that purpose alone—that of the liquid contained in the bottles and phials found on the premises of the accused, there was a quantity of such spirit as would be excisable article within the meaning of that term as defined in cl. (7) of sec. 2 of the Bengal Excise Act. It is plain that the accused has not been proved to possess excisable article in contravention of the Act or of a rule made under the Act; for it has not been shown that the total quantity of "denatured spirit" in his possession exceeded one imperial gallon. It is equally plain that the accused has not been proved to have sold an excisable article, because no evidence has been adduced to prove any Prison Reform in India.

The resolution which Mr. Rayaningar moved in the Supreme Legislative Council on the subject of prison reform was a very important one, and we are pleased to find that it has been accepted by the Government. The mover and his supporters made out a strong case for the appointment of a commission of enquiry into the administration of jails in this country and there does not seem to be any great difference between official and non-official views on the subject.

If the object of punishment is primarily the prevention of crime the question of reforming the convict and bringing him back to the life of an honest citizen can legitimately claim precedence to many other minor matters and the solution of the problem is an ultimate gain to the State and to society at large. It must be admitted that Government has all along been alive to the importance of jail reform but much remains to be done in order to arrive at a practical solution of the whole question which involves sociological problems connected with jail administration. Local Governments have been from time to time adopting measures to remedy grievances known to exist in jails but it is necessary and desirable that reformation should go on uniformly throughout the country instead of there being isolated experiments here and there and the work properly falls within the province of the Government of India. One important matter, as pointed out by the mover, should always be borne in mind. No doubt the system of jail administration prevailing in European countries affords a good model, but "the reforms whether partially carried out or only suggested by the various public bodies in the West, have, before adoption in India, to be carefully scrutinised in the light of local conditions."

The well-reasoned reply of the Hon'ble the Home Member who has got considerable experience in matters connected with the jails in this country lays down the line of action which under the circumstances of the case is necessary to be taken by Government. In the course of his speech in Council, he said: "Nothing has struck me so forcibly as the fact that our penal system is still far too rigid and makes no sufficient attempts to differentiate between crimes committed in the heat of passion and cold calculating crimes implying a vicious and degenerate nature. The compartments into which criminals are kept are still far too few. The diagnosis is too rough and ready and treatment too uniform. We have to devise separate treatment for the confirmed criminal and the hardened miscreant and the seemingly hopeless degenerate, and separate treatment for the criminal who though he offended against the laws in a moment of passion or sudden temptation is still left with self-respect which may deter him from sinning again. We have to aim at providing a probation during which a man who appears desirous of reform may have the chance of proving his sincerity under conditions which remove him from further contamination or tempt him to lapses. We have to try and remove as far as possible those causes which tend to make him immoral and corrupt and we have to try to awaken in him those incentives which make men honest and keep them so."

It seems to be absolutely necessary that hardened criminals should be kept separate from impressionable youths for whom there is still a chance of reformation, and the success of the Borstal system, under which convicts between the ages of 16 and 21 are placed in settlements in which prison discipline is kept in the back-ground and education and general reformation are placed in the forefront, is well worth enquiring into.

Another matter with regard to which complaints are too frequent is the dietry arrangement in Jails. So far as this question is concerned, it is much easier for the Government to take remedial steps than with reference to the broad question of the reformation of the convict which involves larger issues and necessarily requires greater time and reflection.

Hindu widow—Suit for partition.

PEMA v. JAS KUNWAR, I. L. R. 35 All. 527.

The mere fact that a widow is recorded in the Khewat as a co-sharer under a family arrangement does not make her a co-sharer and this alone cannot entitle her to sue for partition.

Mortgage—Post diem interest.

BALWANT SINGH v. GAJJAN SINGH, I. L. R. 35 All. 534.

A mortgage provided for the payment of the sum of Rs. 300 with interest at a certain rate per cent per mensem in one lump sum on a certain specified date, four years from the date of the mortgage. It was further provided that if the money was not paid on that date the property should be the absolute property of the mortgagee. There was no stipulation of any interest after the fixed date.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Oram v. Hutt. Before LORDS PARKER AND SUMNER AND MR. JUSTICE WARRINGTON. 5th November 1913.

Payments made by a corporation in pursuance of an agreement for maintenance of an action are void.

This was an appeal from a decision of Swinfen Eady, J. Messrs. Johnson and Davis were two officials of a Miners' Association. The Executive Committee of the Association passed a resolution which [illegible] indemnity in respect of the costs of an action for slander which Messrs. Johnson and Davis were to institute against a third person. [illegible] the said Executive Committee [illegible] paid the solicitors' costs. A [illegible] the association now claimed their repayment [illegible] that the action of the Executive Committee was ultra vires, and the Court below so held. The appeal was dismissed. In the course of his judgment Lord Parker said :—

The first question for decision, was whether the agreement by the Association to indemnify any of its officers who took proceedings against McNicholas for libel was void on the ground of maintenance. In his opinion Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady was bound and that Court was bound to hold that agreement void unless the case could be distinguished from the case of Alabaster v. Harness, [1895] 1 Q. B., 339. Several grounds of distinction were suggested in argument, but upon consideration he thought that there was little substance in them. A person who maintained the action of another could only justify by proving the existence of a common interest or bringing himself within certain recognised exceptions of the common law rule. A common interest meant an interest recognized by law in the subject-matter of the action or some issue between the parties to the action. It was decided in the case in question that a libel action was a personal action which in point of law concerned only the parties to it and the matters legally at issue were merely whether the Plaintiff had been libelled, and if so to what damages he was entitled. The mere circumstance that in the libel action there must or might arise questions of fact in the determination of which a third party had an interest would not constitute a common interest sufficient to justify maintenance by such third party. In the libel action by Tibbits which Harness maintained there might arise, and did in fact arise, a question as to the efficiency of the electric belt in which Harness was interested. Indeed, the libel on Tibbits consisted in charging him with professional incompetence on the ground that he had reported favourably on a belt which was alleged to be worthless. From a business point of view it was vital to Harness after the publication of that libel to prove that the belt had the merits appearing in Tibbits's report. That, however, was held insufficient to justify his maintaining the libel action. Similarly in the present case it might have been vital for the association from a business point of view to controvert certain of the allegations made by McNicholas against their officers the truth of which would be in issue in the libel action by Johnson. Nevertheless, according to the case in question, that would not constitute a common interest justifying the Association in maintaining such actions, the matters legally at issue being merely whether the Plaintiffs in those actions had been libelled, and to what damages they were entitled. He did not, therefore, see how this case could be distinguished from the case of Alabaster v. Harness, [1895] 1 Q. B., 339, nor did he think that the association could be brought within any of the recognized exceptions.

The question remained whether the payments were justified on any other ground. As pointed out by Lord Alverstone, C. J., in Greig v. National Amalgamated Union of Shop Assistants, Warehouse- men, and Clerks, 22 T. L. R. 274, a mere power to give legal aid to its members in protection of their interests could not justify an act which would be otherwise illegal. But even if the objection based on maintenance were out of the way in the present case, he was of opinion that the payments could not be justified. Such payments were certainly not justified by express words of the rules of the association.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Papworth v. Battersea Borough Council Before MR. JUSTICE HORRIDGE. 20th December 1913.

Liability of the Borough Council for injury caused by defect in the road—Negligence in not repairing it.

The Plaintiff, a lady, was injured while cycling. She sued for damages alleging that the accident was caused by a sewer grating in the road which was allowed to get out of its position by the negligence of the Defendants. The jury found that the gully was negligently constructed and that the Defendants were negligent in not remedying or repairing the defect which caused the accident. The learned Judge gave judgment for the Plaintiff. He said it was contended before him that the principle of Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board ([1892] App. Case, 345) applied to a local authority in respect of whatever duties they were exercising, but he did not think this was the correct view, as that decision was strictly limited to their position as highway authority and ought not to be extended to their position when acting as other than highway authority. The true view of the position of a public authority which undertakes statutory duties was correctly laid down by Mr. Justice Lush in McClelland v. Manchester Corporation ([1912] 1 K. B., at page 133), where he says:—"If a duty is undertaken and improperly performed and actual damage is occasioned thereby the person injured has, as I have already stated, a perfectly good cause of action. The cases of Meet v. Whitechapel Board of works (2 F. and F, 144), White v. Hindley Local Board of Health (L. R., 10 Q. B., 219), and Blackmore v. Vestry of Mile end (9 Q. B. D., 451) seem to me clearly to show that the Defendants are liable as sewer authority for not seeing that the inequality caused owing to their gully being so much below the roadway was remedied, and the jury having found against the Defendants on this question the Plaintiff was entitled to judgment upon it.

Special leave to appeal—Test cases, not by themselves involving statutory value—Leave upon conditions.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal. The Petitioners instituted suits against the several Respondents for ejectment and recovery of rent. The Defendants pleaded that they were permanent tenants holding at a fixed rent. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suits except as regards arrears of rent. This decree was varied by the Divisional Judge, but the Chief Court of the Punjab on appeal restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The Petitioners' application for leave to appeal was refused on the ground that the consolidated value of the suits was less than Rs. 10,000.

Mr. Arthur Grey for the Petitioners submitted that the present suits were test cases and that the value of the property indirectly affected thereby would exceed the statutory amount.

Their Lordships granted special leave on the condition that the Appellants paid the costs of the Respondents unless otherwise ordered.

Special leave—Substantial question of law—Undue or fraudulent preference, finding of.

This was an application for special leave to appeal against the decision of the Bombay High Court, dated the 2nd July 1913. In 1910 the District Court at Ahmedabad ordered that the said Company be wound up and the Respondents were appointed official liquidators thereof.

In the course of the liquidation proceedings the liquidators applied to the said Court to have it declared that certain debentures and trust deed were invalid as constituting undue or fraudulent preference of the said Bank and the other creditors of the Company to whom the debentures were issued within the meaning of sec. 213 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882) and sec. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907).

Both the lower Courts found against the Bank and the High Court refused leave to appeal on the ground that it did not involve any substantial question of law.

Mr. G. R. Lowndes for the Appellants submitted that the appeal raised substantial and important questions of law and that the value exceeded by far the statutory amount.

Their Lordships granted special leave on the usual terms.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1392 OF 1912. BEPIN BIHARY BHATTACHARJEE, Plaintiff, Appellant v. PANCHANON BHATTACHARJEE AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 19th February 1914.

Estoppel—Sale by heir of real owner, as administrator of a stranger, if passes title—Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 103B—Presumption, rebuttal of—Evidence taken on second appeal—C. P. C., Or. 41, r. 24.

The Plaintiff's allegation was that after the death of one Ram Kumar Bhattacharjee he was in possession of the disputed plot of land as his heir, and further that as one Rash Behary Bhattacharjee took out letters of administration in the estate of Ram Kumar, he also took a kobala from the above Rash Behary Bhattacharjee to avoid litigation. Further that he was in possession of the land in suit by letting it out to tenants ever since.

The Defendants alleged that the land in dispute belonged to one Rajbulluv Bhattacharjee, a predecessor of Abhoy Charan Bhattacharjee, father of Rash Behary and that he held a kobala from Abhoy from 1268, B. S., and was in possession of the land by letting out to tenants ever since.

In 1898 there was a record-of-rights which was finally published under sec. 103B, Bengal Tenancy Act, on 12th October 1898, and in which the Defendants were recorded as proprietors of the land.

Against the above entry, Plaintiff appealed before the Settlement Officer who transferred the case to the Civil Bench.

The Munsif held that the kobala of the Defendant of 1268, B. S., was not genuine but the kobala of the Plaintiff was and decreed the suit. He held that Raj Bullav was the real owner.

The Subordinate Judge in appeal by the Defendants held that that the kobala executed by Rash Behary passed no title to the Plaintiff as he gave the kobala as administrator to the estate of Ram Kumar who was not the owner of the disputed land, the owner being one Raj Bulluv, a predecessor of Rash Behary.

He further held that as the Plaintiff had failed to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the record-of-rights under sec. 103B, (Bengal Tenancy Act), by satisfactory evidence of title his suit must fail.

Babu Hit Lal Guha for the Plaintiff-Appellant.—The kobala in favour of the Plaintiff by Rash Behary Bhattacharjee passed good title to the Plaintiff although Rash Behary gave the kobala as administrator to one Ram Kumar he was thereby estopped from challenging the title of the Plaintiff as heir of Raj Bullav. So is the case of anybody else claiming through him. Referred to sec. 115 (a), Evidence Act, Sarat Chandra De v. Gopal Laha, 19 I. A. 203: S. C. I. L. R. 20 Cal. 296, 4 C. L. J. 23 and 323 at p. 330, sec. 43, Transfer of Property Act, etc.

Further, the Defendant whose kobala was a forgery was no better than a trespasser and could not question the Plaintiff's title.

Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal in reply submitted that Plaintiff claimed title through the kobala of Rash Behary and as Rash Behary was nobody and had not title himself at the time he got nothing by the kobala. Vide sec. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, and 15 Mad. 54. Sec. 115, Evidence Act, have no application in this case. 11 M. I. A. 7.

Further, as there was no finding as to the genuineness of Defendant's kobala the appeal at the worst ought to be remanded for a finding.

Their Lordships asked the Respondents to adduce evidence as to the genuineness of the kobala.

The evidence having been taken,

Their Lordships held:—

(1) The kobala in favour of the Plaintiff by Rash Behary as heir to Ram Kumar was a genuine one and when Rash Behary inherited the property as heir to another person, viz., Raj Bullav, it passed good title and could not be questioned by Rash Behary or anybody claiming through him.

(2) Further, though there was no finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the genuineness of Defendant's kobala, on the evidence of the record, their Lordships found, as under Or. 41, r. 24, C. P. C., they could, that the kobala was not a genuine one.

(3) That the presumption arising under sec. 103B, Bengal Tenancy Act, had been satisfactorily rebutted and title of the Plaintiff established in the land in dispute.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was set aside and that of the Munsif was affirmed.

sale by the accused. The questions consequently remain, whether the accused has manufactured excisable article or has bottled any liquor for sale. Now, the term "manufacture" is defined in cl. (15) of sec. 2 to include every process whether natural or artificial, by which any excisable article is produced or prepared, as also every process for the rectification, flavouring, blending or colouring of liquor. The essence of "manufacture" consequently, is that it is a process, which is defined as follows in the Oxford Dictionary: (Vol. VII, p. 1408). "A continuous and regular action or succession of actions taking place or carried on in a definite manner and leading to the accomplishment of some result; a continuous operation or series of operations; a particular method of operation in any manufacture." We are not prepared to hold that the mere dilution of denatured spirit with water is a process for the manufacture of an excisable article, assuming that the diluted liquid is an excisable article within the meaning of the Act. Besides, there is no evidence to show that it was the accused who "manufactured" the liquid, even if it is assumed that dilution is "manufacture" for the purposes of the Act. Nor is it proved that the accused transferred liquor from a cask or other vessel to a bottle or other receptacle for the purpose of sale within the meaning of cl. 3 of sec. 2. The conviction under sec. 46 cannot consequently be sustained. In this view, it is not necessary to consider whether the spirit diluted with water is excisable article or intoxicating liquor within the meaning of cls. (7) and (14) of sec. 2 or whether the case of Matilal v. Emperor (1), upon which much reliance was placed on behalf of the Appellant gives effect to the statutory provisions on the subject. It is, however, difficult to believe that the framers of the statute could really have intended that spirit which had been effectually and permanently rendered unfit for human consumption should, by reason of mere dilution with water, be deemed to have become an intoxicating liquor or drug within the meaning of the Act. It is a matter for legitimate comment that the difficulty in this case is attributable principally to the surprising looseness of expression which characterises many of the provisions of the Act.

It was faintly suggested in the course of argument, on behalf of the Crown, that the order of the Magistrate is not liable to be challenged by way of appeal under sec. 410 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and reference was made to secs. 75 and 81 of the Bengal Excise Act to show that the Code has a restricted application to proceedings taken under the Act. This argument is obviously fallacious inasmuch as secs. 75 and 81 apply only to proceedings before a Collector. On the other hand, sec. 84 which excludes the application of sec. 191 of the Criminal Procedure Code in cases in which a Magistrate has taken cognizance of an offence under the Act, furnishes ample indication that the Criminal Procedure Code is applicable to trials before a Magistrate, subject to specified restrictions.

We may finally add that the trial in the Court below has been obviously vitiated by misjoinder of charges in contravention of the provisions of sec. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The view cannot possibly be maintained that the acts imputed to the accused, namely, manufacturing the excisable article seized and brought into Court, bottling it, possessing it, selling from time to time various other articles not before the Court, and attempting to render denatured spirit fit for human consumption, constitute the same transaction. The fact that the trial has taken place as in a summons case does not exclude the application of sec. 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code [King-Emperor v. San Dun (2)]. Consequently on the ground of misjoinder alone, the conviction and sentence are liable to be set aside: but we have preferred to rest our decision on the merits of the case, inasmuch as we would have felt inclined to direct a retrial if the appeal had succeeded merely on the ground of misjoinder.

(1) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 1053 (1912).

U. N. BISWAS v. KING-EMPEROR.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed and the conviction and sentence set aside The consequential order for confiscation made under secs. 63 (1) and 64 (1) will necessarily stand cancelled. The fine, if paid, will be refunded, and the articles seized will be returned to the Appellant.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 2 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.
MOOKERJEE, J.

INDRA MANI DASYA, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
PRIYANATH CHACKRABARTY and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), sec. 13—Share sold for its own arrears though estate as a whole not in arrears—Validity of sale—"Estate," meaning of.

Where the Plaintiff's share in a revenue-paying estate in respect of which a separate account had been opened was sold for its own exclusive arrears, without taking into account excess payments made by the proprietors of other shares and which more than made good the arrears due on Plaintiff's share:

Held—That as the estate as a whole was not in arrears the sale of Plaintiff's share was illegal and was liable to be set aside by the Civil Court.

The term "estate" as used in the clause "if the estate shall become liable to sale for arrears of revenue" in sec. 13 of Act XI of 1859, means the entire estate out of which the separate share has been carved.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 3rd of January 1911 against the decree of Mr. Justice Caspersz, dated the 25th of November 1910, passed in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 432 of 1909.

The appeal arose out of a suit to set aside a sale of Plaintiff's separated share of the revenue paying estate on the ground inter alia that the arrears, for the realisation of which the sale was held, were not really due. The suit was contested by the auction-purchaser. The arrears as stated in the notification of sale were Rs. 6 14, made up as follows: Kist of 1914, 12 as. 6 ps.; kist January 1905, Re. 1-8; kist March 1905, Re. 1-9; kist January 1906, Re. 1 8; kist March 1906, Re. 1 9. Plaintiff's case was that she had paid 8 as. 6 pies in excess of the revenue payable by her for these years, that a sum of Rs 5-11-2 pies stood in the general account of the entire estate being excess payments made by other co-sharers and that if these were taken into account, as they should have been, the estate was not in arrear and the Collector had no jurisdiction to sell the estate.

The Munsif was not satisfied with the evidence produced by the Plaintiff to prove "wrong debit" in the Collectorate and dismissed the suit observing that in a case like this the Plaintiff should clearly satisfy the Court that there has been actually a mistake and not ask the Court to go upon mere guess. The Subordinate Judge on appeal affirmed this decision observing that it lay on the Plaintiff who challenged the correctness of the Collectorate accounts to prove her contention by the production of fuller accounts from the Collectorate.

Hence this Second Appeal.

Babus Prokash Chandra Mojumdar and Jogesh Chandra Roy for the Appellant.

Babus Boidya Nath Dutt and Taraknesswar Pal Chowdhury for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration that a sale for arrears of revenue of her share in an estate held on the 14th September 1906 was inoperative, and for recovery of possession thereof.

The sale took place for realization of a sum of Rs. 6-14 annas 6 pies made up as follows: namely, 12 annas 6 pies as arrears due at the end of the year 1903-1904, Rs. 3-1 anna as an arrear due in respect of the year 1904-05 and a second sum of Rs. 3-1 anna as an arrear due in respect of the year 1905-06.

The case for the Plaintiff is that the sale was inoperative because it was held in contravention of the provisions of sec. 13 of Act XI of 1859. This contention has been negatived by all the Courts, and the question in controversy is as to the true construction of this provision of the law. Sec. 13 provides that "whenever the Collector shall have ordered a separate account or accounts to be kept for one or more shares, if the estate shall become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid in the first place shall put up to sale only that share or those shares of the estate from which, according to the separate accounts, an arrear of revenue may be due."

In the case before us, the share of the Plaintiff was separated in 1887, and the order came into effect from the beginning of the year 1888-1889.

Now, under sec. 13 to which reference has been made, the first point to be determined is whether the estate is liable to sale for arrears of revenue.

On behalf of the Respondents it has been contended that the term "estate" means share of an estate. But notwithstanding the definition of the term estate as given in sec. 1 of Bengal Act VII of 1868, it is plain that the term estate as used in the clause "if the estate shall become liable to sale for arrears of revenue" means the entire estate out of which the separate share has been carved. The policy of the Legislature is clear beyond dispute. The first point for determination is, is the estate as a whole liable to sale for arrears of revenue. If it is not, no further question arises. But if the estate as a whole has become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, the question arises which portion or portions thereof should be brought to sale. Under sec. 13, the Collector can put up to sale only that share or those shares of the estate which has thus become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, from which, according to the separate accounts, an arrear of revenue may be due.

In the case before us, it has been contended by the Plaintiff throughout the litigation that the entire estate which comprised her share had not become liable to sale for arrears of revenue on the 14th of September 1906. This is a point which has not been investigated by the Courts below. Consequently, it is open to us, under sec. 103, C. P. C., upon the materials on the record to determine whether the estate has become liable to sale for arrears of revenue.

Now, the Plaintiff has established by the production of the receipts for payments made by her from time to time into the Collectorate that from 1888 to 1904, during a period of seventeen years, she had paid 6 pies a year in excess of the amount due. The amount paid by her was Rs. 3-1-6 pies, whereas the amount payable by her in respect of her share was Rs. 3-1 anna; she had thus over-paid 8 annas 6 pies. At the end of the year 1903-04 consequently the accounts ought to have shown 8 annas 6 pies to her credit, but they erroneously show against her 12 annas 6 pies, and it is not obligatory upon her to show how the error originated. As regards the years 1904-05 and 1905-06 it has not been established that she had paid the amounts due. Consequently, at the end of the year 1905-06 the amount due from her would be Rs. 6-14-6 pies reduced by 12 annas 6 pies, namely, Rs. 6-2 annas. But as already explained she had made the excess payment of 8 annas 6 pies. She further proves that in the residuary estate there had been over-payments and a sum of Rs. 5-13 2 pies stood to the credit of that estate. Consequently a sum of Rs. 6-5 annas 8 pies ought to have stood to the credit of the entire estate, and as there was a non-payment of Rs. [illegible] annas, there would be a sum of 3 annas 8 pies in excess to the credit of the estate. Consequently at the end of the year 1905-06 the estate had not become liable to sale for arrears of revenue. If the estate, as we have found, was not liable to sale for arrears of revenue, the Collector had no jurisdiction to put up any share thereof to sale. Consequently, the sale must be declared as inoperative as explained by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Balkishen Das v. Simpson (1).

The result, therefore, is that this Appeal must be allowed, the decrees of the Courts below discharged and the suit decreed. It will be declared that the sale held on the 14th September 1906 was inoperative, and the Plaintiff will be placed in possession of the property sold.

This order will carry costs throughout.

barred by sec. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 28th of February 1912 against the order of Babu Dinonath De, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, of Zillah Khulna, dated the 6th of December 1911.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge which sets out all the material facts was as follows :—

"In this case the judgment-debtors object to the execution of the decree on the ground that as the application has been filed more than 12 years after the passing of the decree the execution is barred under the provisions of sec. 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. The decree was passed in a mortgage suit on the 28th May 1896 and it was ordered that the mortgaged property was to be sold in the first instance and if the proceeds of the sale were insufficient to pay up the decree the balance would be realized from other properties and the persons of the judgment-debtors. Thus virtually there were two decrees passed at the same time, one under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act and another under sec. 90. The decree under sec. 90 was, however, to remain inoperative until the remedy provided under the decree under sec. 88 had been exhausted. Now, the period of 12 years provided in the case of a decree does not certainly begin to run until the decree becomes operative and capable of execution. In the present case the mortgaged properties were sold under the decree passed under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act on the 24th June 1907. So the decree under sec. 90 became operative and capable of execution some time after that date and the period of 12 years must be counted from that time. The case of Chandi Charan v. Ambika Charan (1) is a direct authority on the point. The present application for execution being filed on the 3rd March 1911 is therefore clearly within time and is not barred by the 12 years' limitation prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code. The objection of the judgment-debtor is accordingly disallowed and it is ordered that execution do proceed. The objectors shall pay costs in this matter with interest at 6 per cent. per annum until payment."

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose for the Appellants.

Babu Brija Lal Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of execution of a mortgage decree. It was directed in that decree that the mortgaged property should be sold and if the proceeds of the sale were insufficient the balance should be realized from the other properties and the persons of the judgment-debtors. This application was presented more than 12 years after the date of that decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that there were virtually two decrees at that time and that the period of 12 years did not run until what he regards as the second decree under sec. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, became operative and capable of execution. Accordingly he held that the application was not barred, basing his decision on the case of Chandi Charan Roy Chowdhury v. Ambika Charan Dutt (1).

The judgment-debtor appeals, and it is argued that the execution is barred. It appears to us that this contention must succeed. The case cited by the learned

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 792 (1904).

JNANENDRANATH BOSE v. KHULNA LOAN COMPANY LIMITED.

Subordinate Judge is not an authority for holding that the decree-holder who has obtained a decree such as is given in this case has 12 years for proceeding against the person and other properties of the judgment-debtor, dating from the time when the mortgaged property has been sold. The point never arose in that case. All that was held in that case was that when the execution was applied for more than 12 years after the mortgaged property had been sold, the application was barred. But the question whether it was or was not barred before that stage was not raised in that case and was not decided. The terms of sec. 48 seem to us to be perfectly clear, and according to that section time runs from the date of the decree. The date of the decree is fixed by Or. XX, r. 6, and we cannot understand how there can be any other date of the decree from which limitation should run. It has been suggested that this case may be regarded as one in which the decree directed the payment of money to be made at a certain date, namely, after the mortgaged property had been sold. It appears to us that a direction of such a kind would certainly not be a direction to pay money at a certain date. The date would not be certain.

Next it has been argued that the first application for execution against the person and other properties of the judgment-debtor might be regarded as an application for an order under sec. 90 and the order passed thereon might be regarded as a decree. Applications for execution are ordinary applications for the attachment of property and bear no resemblance whatever to an application under sec. 90. No reason really has been shown to us for supposing that the application of 1908 for execution was in any way an application for a decree under sec. 90.

We think, therefore, that the Appeal must be decreed and the application refused as being barred by limitation.

The Appellant will be entitled to his costs in both the Courts. We assess the hearing fee at 4 gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE NO. 1265 OF 1913.

CARNDUFF, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1913, Heard, 15, December. Judgment, 22, December.	AKHOY KUMAR PAL, Defendant, Petitioner, v. HARIDAS BYSACK, Plaintiff, Opposite Party.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), sec. 48—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs. 123, 130, 137—Promissory note, making over of, without endorsement, if constitutes valid transfer or gift—Chose in action, transfer of—Negotiable Instruments Act, scope of.

The Defendant executed a promissory note in favour of one N who handed over this note without any endorsement to an idol through its pujari, and having done so, died. The Plaintiff, the shebait of the idol, thereupon sued the Petitioner for the amount due on the note:

Held—That although a promissory note to order may be transferred otherwise than by endorsement and delivery as contemplated by sec. 48 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, there was no legal transfer of the promissory note to the Plaintiff or the Deity whom the Plaintiff represented, either as a negotiable instrument or as a chose in action under sec. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act nor was there a valid gift of the promissory note under sec. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act.

AKHOY KUMAR PAL v. HARIDAS BYSACK.

That even assuming that there was a valid transfer the Plaintiff was not entitled to sue in his own name.

It may be generally true that a valid assignment of a negotiable instrument as an actionable claim gives the assignee the rights of the holder subject to equities but this broad proposition must be subject at any rate to the qualification that it is true only so far as it is not inconsistent with the special provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—The object and purpose of the Negotiable Instruments Act is to legalise a system under which claims arising upon certain instruments of a mercantile character can be treated like ordinary goods which pass by delivery from hand to hand. But except within the prescribed limits such claims cannot be so treated.

This was a Rule granted on the 29th of August 1913, against an order of B. L. Chatterjee, Esq., Small Cause Court Judge at Dacca, dated the 31st of July 1913.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Petitioner.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Sarat Chandra Dutt for the Opposite Party.

CARNDUFF, J.—The Petitioner before us executed a promissory note for Rs 300 in favour of one Nityamani Baisnabi. Nityamani handed this note over without any endorsement to an idol through its pujari, and, having done so, died. The shebait, who is the Opposite Party, sued the Petitioner for the amount due and obtained a decree. Hence this Rule.

For the Petitioner it is contended that a promissory note to order cannot be transferred otherwise than by endorsement and delivery, as contemplated by sec. 48 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. But there is authority—see Benode Kishore Goswami v. Ashutosh Mukhopadhya (1) and the cases and text-books there cited—for holding that this is not so; and the argument of the Opposite Party that he can here rely on an assignment of the note as a chose in action or, failing that, on a transfer by gift, requires examination.

A chose in action can now, under sec. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, as amended by the Transfer of Property Act, 1900, be assigned only by an instrument in writing signed by the transferor or his agent. But, it is contended, the section does not—see sec. 137—apply to instruments which are for the time being, by law or custom, negotiable, and under the former law there could apparently be an equitable assignment without writing. That is obviously all that the Opposite Party can rely upon here: and he is put out of Court as soon as the fact is recalled that his is the position of a mere volunteer. For equitable assignments were given effect to in equity only when supported by valuable consideration.

There remains the question of gift, which depends upon sec 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Under that section a gift of moveable property—and a chose in action is moveable property within the meaning of the Act—may be effected by delivery made in the same way as goods may be delivered. Now, the delivery required by sec. 90 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, involves the doing of something which has the effect of putting the goods in the possession of the receiver or his agent. Here what was done was the handing over of a piece of paper, which as it stands, is, on the face of it, of no intrinsic value to anyone but Nityamani or a person nominated by her indorsement, and which, in the hands of a third party unindorsed, is, at most, some evidence of an intention on the part of Nityamani to make a present of the debt indicated by it to that third party. Nityamani having failed to nominate by indorsement, her intention was not carried out, and there was no completed gift: or, to employ the language used in re Richardson; Shillito v. Hobson (2), the document was only an incident to the chose in action, and all that was delivered was this incident, the handing over of which cannot be said to have had the effect of putting the representative of the idol in possession of the debt. This view is, I think, in accordance with that taken in Merbai v. Perozbai (3) in Khursedji Rustomji Colah v. Jestonjee Kowasjee Bucha (4) and by the Judicial Committee in Aga Mohamad Jaffer Bindamin v. Kulsum Bibi (5). It seems to me, therefore, that there was no completed gift, and that the contention of the Opposite Party again fails. The Rule should, therefore, be made absolute, but I would not make any order as to costs.

(1) 16 C. W. N. 666 (1912).

AKHOY KUMAR PAL v. HARIDAS BYSACK

I must add that the broadly stated proposition that the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, leaves untouched the rules of the general law which regulate the assignment of chose in action and the transfer of chattels seems to me to require the qualification, that the latter must not be inconsistent with the former. In England this qualification is expressly imposed by sec. 97 (2) of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict., C. 61), and, though there is no corresponding provision in the Indian Act of 1881, the principle that a general and earlier rule must give way to a special and later provision seems to be sufficient. Even if there had been in this case a valid transfer to the idol, whether by assignment or gift, of the debt due to Nityamani, the assignee or donee would at once be confronted by the express provisions of the Act of 1881, which not only enacts by sec. 48 that a promissory note payable to order is negotiable by indorsement and delivery, but also declares—see sec. 78—that payment of the amount due on such a note must, in order to discharge the maker, be made to the "holder." The Petitioner is certainly not the "holder" and he cannot, therefore, give the Opposite Party a valid discharge. How, then, can he obtain a decree in his own name? He might be entitled to the money promised, but, before he could recover it, he would have to obtain the indorsement of the legal representative of the deceased promisor. The position would, indeed, be similar to that described in Chalmers on Bills of Exchange, Ed. 7, at p. 140, where it is stated, on the authority of Bishop v. Curtis (6), that, where C, the holder of a bill payable to order, dies after having specifically bequeathed it to X but without indorsing it, X cannot sue on it unless and until he obtains an indorsement in his favour by C's executor.

no complete legal transfer or gift of the promissory note by the deceased woman to the Plaintiffs or the deity whom the Plaintiffs represent. It is conceded that the instrument represents an actionable claim but it is argued that inasmuch as it is a negotiable instrument the case is taken out of the provisions of sec. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act relating to the transfer of actionable claims by sec. 137 of the same Act. That may be so. But it nevertheless remains that there has been no valid or complete transfer of the instrument either as a negotiable instrument or as an actionable claim. The procedure provided by the Negotiable Instruments Act has not been followed and there is nothing which operates as such a transfer either under or outside the Transfer of Property Act. There is no writing to support the transfer. There is nothing which amounts to an equitable assignment and in fact, the Plaintiffs claiming as volunteers have no equity in respect of which they can ask for the assistance of a Court of Equity. The contention is, as I understand it, that sec. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, which relates to gifts of moveable property, applies and that this promissory note which is drawn payable to the promisee or order, is capable of being made the subject of a gift by mere delivery under that section, although it is not indorsed by the holder. There is no question here as to the right to the possession of the piece of paper on which the promise is written but the promise itself, or the debt of which the paper is evidence, or the claim to the debt, is an intangible thing incapable of passing by delivery like an ordinary chattel. It is perhaps a possible view that actionable claims are not "moveable property" within the meaning of sec. 123. But if the section applies to them, then it would seem that, delivery being impossible, a gift could only be made under the section in the first of the two modes provided, namely, by a registered deed, attested by two witnesses. The law might say that the delivery of the paper should in such a case as the present (as in the case of a currency note) carry with it the right to the debt but it does not say so.

The right to the debt can only be effectually transferred by some method authorised or recognised by the law. Something must be done to enable the actionable claim or thing in action to be reduced to a thing in possession. The whole object and purpose of the Negotiable Instruments Act is to legalize a system under which claims arising upon certain instruments of a mercantile character can be treated like ordinary goods which pass by delivery from hand to hand. But except within the prescribed limits such claims cannot be so treated. It may be that claims arising upon negotiable instruments may be transferred not only under the Negotiable Instruments Act but also by some means applicable to claims arising upon instruments which are not negotiable, though the rights resulting from the adoption of one mode of transfer may be different from the rights resulting from the adoption of another mode. The topic however need not be pursued because in the present case there has been no legal transfer of the actionable claim by any authorised mode.

The case of Aga Mohamad v. Kulsom Bibi (5) illustrates the principle involved. The documents there in question were not negotiable instruments but it might be said here with equal force (slightly paraphrasing the language of their Lordships) that "the instrument is not in a form which would entitle the bearer of it (without the holder's endorsement) to the debt created thereby as holder there of." It may be well to add that we have not had to consider the provisions of sec. 178 of the Indian Succession Act in regard to gifts made in contemplation of death because these provisions are not applicable to Hindus.

(5) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 9: s. c. L. R. 27 I. A. 196 (1897).

But assuming that there was a valid transfer, the further question arises whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to sue on the note. It may be generally true that a valid assignment of a negotiable instrument as an actionable claim gives the assignee the rights of the holder subject to equities. But this broad proposition must be subject at any rate to the qualification that it is true only so far as it is not inconsistent with the special provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Under sec. 78 of the Act the only person who can give a good discharge to the maker of a negotiable instrument is the holder. That being so, it would seem that the rights which might or would pass to an assignee by an assignment which does not constitute him the holder (assuming any rights to pass at all) would not include the right to give a good discharge. And if they would not include the right to give a good discharge, they could hardly include the right to sue in his own name. The assignee may have instead the right to compel the holder or the holder's legal representative to make the requisite endorsement on the instrument though apparently, the Indian Act does not (like the English Act, sec. 31 (4)) expressly say so. It is not, however, necessary in the present case to express a final opinion on this point or to say more than that in the Madras cases which were cited in the course of the argument no reference was made to sec. 78.

I agree that the Rule should be made absolute without costs.

Rule made absolute.

technical or otherwise,' and to have the Court's judgment on it.

It is no affair of the defence to supplement or explain deficiencies or suspicious circumstances appearing on the face of the prosecution evidence. It is open to it to say that the prosecution has not proved its case and to refer to such deficiencies in proof of the submission or to other circumstances appearing on the face of the prosecution evidence which show that it is so open to suspicion that it would be unsafe to accept it. If however the defence puts forward a case of fraud or if the evidence for the prosecution is not ambiguous the defence should give notice of the point they intend to take so that the prosecution may have an opportunity of explanation. If any charge of fraudulent practice was going to be based on a circumstance which standing by itself was not necessarily suspicious the defence should have cross-examined witnesses on the point.

Where the Sessions Judge in taking the verdict of the assessors put a large number of questions to them and then recorded their opinion on those questions:

Held—That the Judge should have allowed the assessors in the first instance to have given their opinion in their own language and way, and then when they had completed what they had to say it would have been open to him to put to them such questions as were necessary to elucidate or supplement their opinion.

Where the charge against the accused was of two separate offences laid in an alternative form, viz., one under sec. 399 and another under sec. 402, I. P. C., but it appeared that the charges were treated not alternatively but as additional and the Sessions Judge acquitted them of the charge under sec. 399, I. P. C., and convicted them of the charge under sec. 402, I. P. C.

Held—That the acquittal under sec. 399, I. P. C., did not involve an acquittal under sec. 402, I. P. C., and the conviction under the latter section was not wrong and the judgment of the Sessions Judge was not vitiated by repugnancy.

That even if there was any repugnancy it was open to the High Court to alter the finding of acquittal under sec. 399, I. P. C., into one of conviction maintaining the sentence.

That the offences of commission of dacoity, preparation for it and assemblage for the same purpose have this in common that they presume an intention or agreement to commit dacoity by five or more persons. A mere assembly without further preparation is not a preparation within the meaning of sec. 399, I. P. C, for if it were, sec. 402, I. P. C, would be redundant. Sec. 402, I. P. C., applies to the case of mere assembling without proof of other preparation. A person can thus be not guilty of dacoity yet guilty of preparation and not guilty of preparation yet guilty of an assembly.

BEACHCROFT, J.—The tendency of modern legislation in general and of the Criminal Procedure Code in particular is to avoid technicalities and there is no provision in that Code which would justify interference with a conviction on the ground of repugnancy in the record.

WOODROFFE, J. (BEACHCROFT, J., concurring).—Where the Police searched a hut on suspicion and incriminating evidence was found and after the search was over the Additional District Magistrate came to the spot and saw what had been found and a search list was prepared which the Additional District Magistrate signed and the accused were subsequently placed before another Magistrate who held an enquiry and committed the accused to the Court of Sessions for trial:

Held—That the fact that the Additional District Magistrate did not take cognizance of the case at once did not render the subsequent proceedings before another Magistrate bad nor could such subsequent proceedings be held to be prejudicial to the accused.

That it was not the duty of the Additional District Magistrate to take cognizance of the case on the basis of what he found at the spot.

Where the accused persons who were inside the room searched by the Police were, after the discovery in their presence of a gun and after search of their persons, sent out of the room and the search was continued:

Held—That the Code of Criminal Procedure permits the occupants of the place searched to be present at the search and there was therefore a violation of this rule which is one not merely of technicality but of substance, in that it is enacted to guarantee the reality of the search and the discoveries made thereat.

That this was an irregularity which the accused were entitled to ask the Court to consider and which made it incumbent on the Court to scrutinise the evidence carefully.

BEACHCROFT, J.—The spirit of sec. 103, sub-sec. 3, is that the occupant of the place searched shall be present and it means that he is to be given the option of being present and not that he is to be allowed to be present only if he demands it. But the right of presence given by sec. 103 applies only to the occupant of the place searched or some person in his behalf and the words "occupant of the place" are not intended to cover every person who may happen to be in the place at the time but they refer back to the person mentioned in sec. 102, i e., a person residing in or being in charge of the place.

WOODROFFE, J.—Where after searching a hut arms were found under a machan inside the hut and in the ceiling of the hut:

Held—That knowledge of the existence of the arms would not without other evidence be imputable to any other than the lessee of the hut, nor would the presumption operate even against him if it were shown that the circumstances were such that arms might be in his place without his knowing it.

BEACHCROFT, J.—Where an article is found in a man's house the ordinary presumption is that he as owner of the house is aware of its contents. This is subject to the qualification that no other person has access to that particular place. It follows that if the house is in the occupation of more persons than one having access to the particular place there is no presumption against them individually that they have put the article where it is found; though if it be proved that an article has been for a considerable period of time in a place to which all have frequent access it might reasonably be presumed that all were aware of its existence.

Sec. 47, Cr. P. C., is not intended to restrict the powers of the Police to enter the place to be searched: on the contrary it is a provision compelling householders to afford the Police facilities in carrying out their duties, and sec. 48 provides that if difficulties are placed in the way of a Police officer he may use force to obtain ingress.

WOODROFFE, J.—In this case, the hearing of which on appeal has lasted over three weeks, there are twelve accused who have been represented by various learned Counsel and by Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherji.

The charge in the Magistrate's Court was of two separate offences laid in an alternative form. The first charge was that the accused on or about the 1st November 1912 at Comilla made preparation for committing dacoity in a particular manner, which was assigned to be as follows; namely, by assembling together with arms, masks and implements which might be used for the commission of dacoity. The offence there charged was one under sec. 399, Penal Code, all else in the charge than the allegation of preparation being merely particulars as to the preparation alleged. It then proceeded in the alternative to charge an offence under sec. 402 of the Indian Penal Code, in that on the said date and at the same place the accused assembled together for the purpose of committing dacoity; judging from the record before us it would seem that before the Sessions Judge the charges were treated not alternatively but as additional. This appears both from the order-sheet, the judgment, the written statement of the accused and from what learned Counsel has told us Under the circumstances, however, the matter is of no practical importance.

The learned Judge and the Assessors found that the accused were not guilty under sec. 399 The learned Judge's view, as appears in the judgment, was that though the facts alleged by the prosecution had been proved they did not constitute an offence under sec 399, because he was of opinion that mere assembling would not constitute an offence under sec. 399 and because he thought it necessary that it should be proved what part each particular member of the gang took in the preparation and bringing together arms and the like. As he was of opinion that this had not been shown he held that the accused had not been guilty of an offence under sec. 399. There may be a question whether he was right in this for it may be argued that if the facts put in evidence by the prosecution are true, they evidence preparation and that it was not necessary that the prosecution should point out with their finger the exact part taken by each member of the gang as regards such preparation provided that it were shown that the accused were members of a gang which had made in fact preparation for dacoity. Doubtless the word "whoever makes" in sec. 399, may have been the cause of the contrary view. But sec. 399, it is argued, assumed a previous agreement to commit dacoity and to refer not to individual but concerted action (see Punjab Report, p. 43). It is, however, unnecessary in this case to discuss or decide the question having regard to my findings on the other points raised. The question before us is not whether the accused might not also have been convicted of the major offence but whether their conviction on the minor offence should stand. The Assessors were of opinion that the accused were not guilty under sec. 402. Here I may observe that objection has been and I think rightly taken to the form of the Assessors' verdict which was due to questions put by the learned Judge. The latter put a large number of questions to the Assessors and then recorded their opinion on those questions. He should however have allowed the Assessors in the first instance to have given their opinion in their own language and way and then when they had completed what they had to say it would have been open to him to put to them such questions as were necessary to elucidate or supplement their opinion. To the method followed there is amongst others this objection that the questions which a Judge may call on an Assessor to answer may not be exhaustive in extent nor crucial in character. Speaking generally the opinion of the Assessors was that the accused Nos. 1, 5, 6 and 10 (I take the numbers of the [illegible] here and later from the heading [illegible]ted judgment) had offered a [illegible]planation of their conduct, but that as regards the other eight they were assembled for a purpose which one Assessor describes as "immoral or illegal" and the other as "evil." It is not easy to reconcile such a finding with the facts of the case whatever view be taken of them. The Assessor could only be justified in assuming the existence of some evil and illegal purpose on the evidence. If that evidence is not accepted there is no legal ground for such an imputation. If it is accepted, then the evidence itself discloses specifically what the purpose was, namely, preparation or assembly for the committing of dacoity. The learned Judge accepted the truth of that evidence and consistently with such acceptance found that all the accused were guilty of an offence under sec. 402.

Now, the first objection to this finding is one of law. It is said that the acquittal by the learned Judge of the accused under sec. 399 involved an acquittal under sec. 402, and therefore the conviction under the latter section cannot stand. There is of course no merit in this objection, for when we look at the judgment itself apart from the order of acquittal following on it, we know why it was that the Judge acquitted the accused under sec. 399. It was not because he found that there had been no assembly where arms had been found and so forth but because though there had been such an assembly as would justify a conviction under sec. 402, there was in the Judge's opinion no sufficient evidence of preparation under sec. 399, Penal Code. The objection is a technical one and put forward as such. The accused are, however, entitled to put forward any defence open to them, technical or otherwise, and to have the Court's judgment on it. The objection however is ill-founded. I assume for the purpose of argument and without further discussion that we should in determining this matter not consider what the learned Judge had said in his judgment, but that we should determine the objection on a reading of his order of acquittal with reference to the terms of the charge which are incorporated in it. The objection then is this. It is argued that there may be preparation both before and after assembly, and that assembly itself is a form of preparation: that here the preparation alleged is the assembling with arms, etc., and that as the assembling in terms of the first charge was negatived as preparation, assembling under the second charge was also negatived. It is argued that as the accused were acquitted under sec. 399, they should (having regard to the terms of the charge under that section) have been acquitted under sec. 402, as the charges under the two sections contained, having regard to their form, the same essential elements. There is, therefore, it is said, a repugnancy in the judgment. If this were the case, I am not prepared to accede to the argument that we could not ourselves alter the finding of acquittal under sec. 399 into one of conviction maintaining the sentence. Mr. Nisith Sen has argued that the decision in Queen-Empress v. Jabanulla (1), which admittedly entitles us to do so was wrongly decided. It is, however, now too late to question it even if it was open to us and we wished to do so. That decision was given some seventeen years ago and must have been followed in numbers of unreported cases. It has also been adopted in reported decisions. I think it may be said, as Mr. Sen has done, that the decision in Satish Chandra v. Queen-Empress (2), in which no question of acquittal was involved: in Kunja Bhuiya v. Emperor (3) in which the Court did not convict on a charge on which the accused had been acquitted and in 8 Bombay Law Reports, p. 376 (?) in which the Court set aside the order except so far as it involved an acquittal, are not authorities on the particular point before us. But the decision in Nazimuddin v. Emperor (4) clearly is such an authority. It is true that the Judges in that case say that the trial was vitiated because the Assessors' opinion was not properly taken, but by this word "vitiated" they did not mean that the trial was void, otherwise they could not have proceeded to have expressed the opinion which they did, namely, that it was open to them to convict the accused of an offence of which he had been acquitted. That they did not do that which they considered they had ordinarily jurisdiction to do was due to the fact that they could not enhance the sentence and therefore a retrial was ordered. The Madras High Court have followed the decision in Empress v. Jabanulla (1), see Appanna v. Pithani (5), Hanmappa v. Emperor (6), and the Allahabad High Court proceeds on the same principle, see Emperor v. Sardar (7), for though that appears to have been a case where a Judge declined to convict, the effect of such an order is tantamount to an acquittal. It is however not necessary to invoke such powers as these cases speak of, as there is in my opinion no such repugnancy in the

Judge's order as would require us to have recourse to them. Dealing only with the principal aspects of the offence of dacoity there may be, as is apparent from the Code itself, the actual commission of dacoity, a preparation for it, and an assemblage for the same purpose. As appears from the punishments awarded, the first two are treated as the more grievous offences, preparation is the next grievous, and assembly is the least grievous. All the offences have this in common that they presume an intention or agreement to commit dacoity by five or more persons. In a popular sense an assembly to commit dacoity may be a preparation for it. But a mere assembly without further preparation is not a preparation within the meaning of sec. 399. For if it were, sec. 402 would be redundant. This section applies to the case of mere assembling without proof of other preparation, for which there is a maximum punishment of seven years, whilst the preparation which is the subject of sec. 399 is punishable with ten years' imprisonment. A person can thus be not guilty of dacoity and not guilty of preparation yet guilty of an assembly. This appears also to be admitted by the argument for the defence that a band of dacoits might be convicted under both sections. However this be, and such admission does not affect my conclusion in this case, the argument substantially is that the form of the charges is such that the preparation alleged under sec. 399 is such that if negatived it follows that an offence under sec. 402 is negatived. On the other hand, it is said that the gist of the offence of preparation is the assembly which is also the offence under sec. 402. The argument, though not without an air of seriousness, appears to me to be fallacious. What the first charge says when paraphrased is this: It says that the Defendants assembled or came together with or bringing arms, masks and other implements. This is specifically alleged as the preparation. It is obvious that it is not merely the mere assembly as such which is charged as a preparation under sec. 399, for in law it would not amount to such, and the use of the words with arms, masks and implements would be unnecessary. It is true that in order to make out that the assembly under sec. 402 was for the purpose of committing dacoity, it may be necessary to show that there were arms, masks, and other implements found at the place of assembly indicating such purpose, but in that case such evidence is not relied upon as indicating preparation, but to show the purpose of the assembly. No question of bringing arms, masks and other implements necessarily arises under the second charge though the fact in this particular case that arms and so forth were found on the premises has been taken as evidence indicative of the purpose of the meeting. What therefore the Judge has done is to hold that the accused did not commit the offence of preparation under sec. 399 by assembling together and doing something more, viz., bringing with them arms, masks and implements; but that they did assemble together within the meaning of sec. 402 and that the presence of such arms, masks, and implements (by whomsoever brought and whether by the accused or by others) together with other circumstances of the case showed that such assembly was for the purpose of dacoity. There appears to me to be nothing repugnant in such a finding, though as I have already said, it might perhaps have been open to the learned Judge on the evidence to hold that there was not merely an assembly but that the circumstances of the case, if accepted, indicated that the presence of arms, masks and implements at the place of assembly was due to the action of those who took part in it. The learned Judge, however, took a course which I am not prepared without further discussion to say was wrong and which was more favourable to the accused in that he convicted them only of the minor offence. Having now disposed of this argument on the order and charge only I may refer to the judgment which clearly expresses the ground of the learned Judge's decision on this point. He says " with the possible exception of Kumud in whose pocket a mask was found I do not think that there is sufficient evidence of preparation by bringing together arms and weapons. I do not think it can be assumed that any individual actually made preparation for dacoity by bringing together arms. Nor do I think it can be said that under the circumstances of the case constructive preparation has been proved by the application of sec. 149 of the Penal Code."

I hold then that there is no such repugnancy as is alleged, that if there were, it would be open to us to correct it and I now proceed to deal with the facts of the case.

It is said that, on the 27th October 1912, a letter which is in peculiar terms was sent to one Sukhendra Bhattacharji, the thirteen years old son of Sub-Inspector Sashi Kumar Bhattacharjee, here referred to as the witness Sashi. This was received by the witness Sashti Charan De, a servant of the Sub-Inspector, on the 28th October and shewn by the witness Sashi to Inspector Hari Kumar and mentioned to the Superintendent of Police. The letter warned the recepient who was directed to tell his father that a dacoity would be committed on the 1st November. In consequence of this on the 1st November Sub-Inspector Sashi sent a requisition to the Superintendent of Police for extra constables and two head constables and 10 men were deputed for round duty. About 10-30 P.M. on a rainy evening of the 1st November two constables, the witnesses Majub Ali and Fazar Ali who were on the Kandipar Chomuni Road, saw two persons whom they regarded with suspicion and whom on refusing his challenge, Majub Ali chased. He caught one of them but being struck on the arm with something hard either by the man he was holding or by his companion the man who was caught was let go and he and his companion ran eastward along the road, in the direction of the hut, where the accused were found. These two men were followed by 7 or 8 others, who ran past Majub Ali in the same direction, that is, towards the hut of one Probhat Karmakar. This man is said to be a goldsmith and has hired two huts which are in the compound of the witness, and Mukhtear Durga Charan Pal from the latter. The hut in which the latter lives is only 23 cubits from the Karmakar's hut. He gave important evidence when he said that he heard a noise on the road about 11 o'clock, on which he came out of his hut and enquired of Probhat Karmakar what it was about. He then says that Probhat (who would ask us to believe that he was then asleep) told him that there was shouts of " thief, thief" on the road and that people were running, on which the Mukhtear returned to bed until as hereinafter stated he was called by the Police to be a witness to the search of the Karmakar's hut. Majub Ali says he then stayed on the spot and sent Fazar

Ali for relief, the latter armed with 8 or 10 Police, one of whom was Yakub Ali Havildar. He on being told what had happened went to the Police where Majub had attempted to effect an arrest and there found a blacksmith's cold chisel and iron holder, the fourth Sub-Inspector of the Katowali Thana who lived near by and whose name is Jatindra Mohan Ray, was sent for through the Jamadars Jaffar Ali and Yusuf Ali. The latter seems to have arrived about 11-30 P.M. He was told what had happened and made an examination of the locality. He then went to the Inspector who having heard what he had to say told him to return and enquire and promised to follow later on. The Inspector's house is close by, 40 or 30 cubits south-west of the Kandipar Chomuni. On Sub-Inspector Jatin's return he asked Majub Ali to point out the way along which the suspicious characters had run and according to Jatin's evidence Majub Ali pointed out a route across the drain along a drain and 2 or 3 cubits east of the Karmakar's hut. He then crossed the drain and went and stood at the north-east corner of the Karmakar's north hut,—a light was burning within. The Sub-Inspector asked who was inside to which some one replied "we Karmakars are here." The Sub-Inspector then said "some men have run past this house a little time ago, do you know where they have gone or anything about it." He also asked if any one had come into the house from outside to which some one replied "we heard the footsteps of some people going away but we do not know where they have gone. There is no one else in the hut." On, however, the Sub-Inspector going to the south-east corner of the hut he saw with the light of his lantern a man spring from the south to the north hut of the Karmakar. The whole of this hut measures only 21 × 13 feet. It is divided into two rooms by a fencing, which are called the western and eastern rooms. The eastern or larger room is said to be 13 × 13 and the western 8 × 13 only. Further in the room there is a machan which takes up a good deal of the space. On this machan was a mosquito curtain which was down. Outside this machan were found according to the Sub-Inspector three or four persons whose upper bodies were bare and their dhuties were wet. On lifting up the curtain 6 or 7 more persons were discovered lying down on the machan with something like a quilt over them. This was removed and the clothes of some of those who were beneath it were found to be wet. Two men were in the east room where there was a light. These were the accused Thakur and Prasanna. The Sub-Inspector Jatin says that he then asked what they were all doing there on a wet and cloudy night with wet clothes on to which he said none of them answered. There is some conflict of evidence here, for the Constable Yakub Ali before the Committing Magistrate says that the Daroga felt the clothes of a man who appears to be the accused Romesh Banerjee who was standing between the machan and the doorway and who explained that his clothes were wet as he had come from the station which is possibly the case. This from his deposition would appear to refer to a time before the arrival of the Sub-Inspector Sashi. In, however, his deposition before the Judge he made the incident take place after the arrival of the witness Sashi. So far as the Police witnesses are concerned, this and other discrepancies to which we have here referred, must be considered in dealing with the weight to be attached to their evidence, but so far as the defence of the accused is concerned it does not appear to be of much importance, for it is admitted that a little later on they all did give accounts (whether true or not is another matter) of themselves on that night to the Additional Superintendent of Police Rai Sahib Nanda Kumar Bose who has given evidence before us. This man Romesh Banerjee was known to Sub-Inspector Jatin and made an observation which has been held to be not admissible. Thereupon the Sub-Inspector looked under the machan and found a basket which, when removed, disclosed a double barrelled gun in two pieces. A man was then sent to fetch the Sub-Inspector Sashi and the Mukhtear in whose basha the hut was—Durga Charan Pal. The latter came about midnight. On his arrival he was shown the gun and told what had happened and it is noteworthy that none of the persons in the room made any disclaimer as to knowledge of the gun which was found in their presence, and which according to the evidence was stolen from the district of Mymensingh some 4 or 5 years ago. Five or six minutes after the arrival of the Mukhtear Sub-Inspec or Sashi came. He was informed of what had occurred and three or four minutes later Hari Kumar Gupta, the Sadar Inspector, arrived and with or shortly after him another Mukhtear named Lalit Chandra Chakrabutty. Sashi Inspector on arrival told the men that he put them under arrest and four or five minutes later the accused were taken out of the rooms and kept out of it and tied up—a circumstance on which the defence naturally rely. It is said however that, though taken outside, they were kept near the south door facing the machan. In the presence then of the two Mukhtears, the Sadar Inspector and the two Sub-Inspectors a search was commenced of the hut. On the mosquito net being undone a lot of clothes were found heaped upon the machan. On examination of the ceiling a cloth bundle was found which on being opened was seen to contain a number of bags of similar pattern and design which it is suggested were to be used for the purpose of carrying loot and so forth, as also two revolvers, one of which was an old fashioned pinfire. There were also found some cloth bundles containing cartridges. Two hammers one of which is described a sledge hammer, a bag of seeds and some lathis were found in various places. After this search was over the Superintenden of Police and subsequently the Additional Superintendent Rai Sahib Ananda Kumar Bose arrived. This was about 1 30. They were informed of what had happend and shown the articles which had been found. Still later and some time after 1-30 the Additional Magistrate Mr. Chatterjee came. A search list was then prepared. The clothes which had been found on the machan were then examined. These or some of them were wet. Some things were found in the pockets of the clothes. It is not necessary to deal with this in detail. It is sufficient to say that some of the clothes contained cloth marks. If these were truly discovered they could under the circumstances only have been there for the purpose of dacoity, and in a shirt was found a piece of paper marked XVC which is in the following terms. (1) Nishi and Paritosh, (2) note, (3) packing, (4) money takadi, (5) Cheni (Chisel) las etc., (6) automatic, rumal (handerkerchief), (7) Carry, (8) Nayan. In a piece of wet rag was found a paper marked XX*a* which runs as follows :—

There are 18 names in this list which, it is suggested, are those of the members of a gang of dacoits. If the names on the list are found to correspond with the names of the persons under trial then under the circumstances the inference is that the names on the list are those of the persons on trial. And the more of such names there are on the list corresponding with the names of the persons on trial the stronger is the evidence of identity. In the present case if the document is a genuine one it is in the highest degree improbable that the 8 names on the list which correspond with the names of 8 persons in the hut should yet refer to some other people. Of these 18 names 8 are said to be those of the accused found in the hut by the Police, viz., accused 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 11. Arun is one of the names of Ramesh Chandra Gupta, accused No. 4, and accused No. 8, Hara Chand Sil, was known by the name of "Doctor." Baju is the nickname of Brojendra, the fifth Defendant. The names of accused Nos. 3, 7, 10, 12 are not included. The remaining ten names refer to others who are, it is suggested, members of the same gang. Of these names Nishi was a servant of the accused Sarbari or Baju. In a letter which purports to be written by the latter and which was found at the hut on the 7th November six days after the present search, the addressee is Nishi and reference is made to one Revati. It is also remarkable that a man of this name was actually arrested in the early hours of the morning of the 2nd and according to Mr. Watling between 4 and 5 A.M. after the discovery of Ex. XXA and the completion of the search list. This man Revati was wearing a damp dhuti, had shoes and said nothing when the constable made his statement to Mr. Watling. It is suggested as regards the names other than those of the accused that they were those of members of the same gang who were coming to Comilla to join forces with those members who were already there, but which they were unable to do as the steamer missed connection. The words opposite the names on the list are said to indicate the weapons which were to be assigned to each member of the gang. The words "hammer" and "chisel" speak for themselves. R. refers, it is said, to revolvers and a revolver of 380 bore was found which is said to be one of the R. 380 appearing in the list. R. Pin refers, it is said, to the Pinfire revolver found. Other entries, it is suggested, refer to the guns and lathis, "automatic" referring to "automatic pistol." One mask was found outside by Jamadar Yusuf Ali near the kitchen.

When the list was completed the Rai Sahib questioned the accused and he has deposed to their answers. They gave various accounts of themselves to which I refer later when dealing with their individual cases. It is only necessary to note here that the accused Kumud does not admit having been found in the hut as the others were. He alleges that he was going from his mama's basha to the railway station with a view to returning home when he was arrested on the road by the Police and by them mixed up with the other accused.

All these matters took up to about 6 A.M. when formal first information was laid at the Thana. The party then left and the accused were taken to hajat. It will be convenient to notice here an argument of Mr. Caspersz who appeared on behalf of the first accused Romesh Banerjee. He contends that when Mr. Ganga Charan Chatterjee arrived he should at once himself have taken cognizance of the case and as he did not, learned Counsel at first contended that all subsequent proceedings were bad, and secondly, the accused were in any event prejudiced. I will assume for the sake of the argument that in law it would have been open to Mr. Chatterjee to have taken cognizance of the case then and there as also for the same purpose that it was his duty to do so. It would of course be impossible to hold that such a neglect of duty and refusal of jurisdiction by one Magistrate could possibly have the effect of preventing any other Magistrate doing his with the result that subsequent trial and commitment before and by Mr. Rankin, the Magistrate, was bad. Ultimately learned Counsel conceded that this must be so and that even on the assumption which he asks us to make the commitment and trial were not bad. I may here observe that nothing appears to have been heard of this objection before this appeal. The matter then ultimately resolved itself into a question of alleged prejudice. According to learned Counsel the Magistrate Mr. Chatterjee should have taken cognizance on his own suspicion from what he saw that an offence had been committed and should then and there and in this hut and in the hours between 2 and 6 at night commenced proceedings, calling upon the prosecution to proceed with their case, asking the accused what they had to say and if necessary postponing further hearing. I have myself no doubt that if the Magistrate had in this case done anything of the kind his conduct would have been severely assailed by the accused. His cognizance on his own suspicion would have been censured as precipitate and his conduct in hastening on the proceedings and questioning the accused would have been challenged as oppressive. I think myself that under the circumstances of the present case had the Magistrate taken the course which Mr. Caspersz suggests it would have been open to objection. It appears to me that what actually followed was right, namely, further investigation by the Police to see whether further light or evidence could be had on the affair and then the charge before Mr. Rankin. If Mr. Chatterjee should not have taken the course suggested then it cannot be argued that the accused were prejudiced by his not doing that which he ought not to have done, but I may add that this objection of prejudice appears to be a shadowy one. It was suggested that the accused had no opportunity of making a statement then and there before the Magistrate. As a matter of fact they did make a statement on that same night to the Rai Sahib which has been recorded and of which they have had the benefit and though a further statement might have been made before the Committing Magistrate the opportunity was not availed of. It is also made a grievance that instead of sending up the accused at once for trial the Police took time for further investigation with a view, it is suggested, of discovering whether there was evidence of a wider conspiracy of which the dacoity in question was an incident. I can myself see nothing improper in this. In fact it was their duty to investigate the matter in this manner and for the purpose of collecting all available facts before sending up the accused for trial. On the 2nd November the accused were remanded to hajat until the 10th. On the 8th one Nagarbashi Rudra Pal was produced before the Magistrate but discharged at the request of the Police for want of evidence. This has been relied on as a circumstance of suspicion and one tending to support the Police plot suggested in the case. There appears to have been no suggestion or cross-examination as to this before and, had there been, it might have been shown that the reason of his arrest was due to the appearance of his name in the Karmakar's books. On the 11th the Police asked for adjournment to complete enquiry. This was granted until the 16th when a further remand was given till the 27th November on which day and following days evidence was taken, and accused committed to the Court of Sessions on the 14th December last. During the investigation on the 9th November some chisels and crowbar were found at the point marked S on the map while the basha of the witness Debendra Nath Ghose was being cleaned. This place is at a short distance to the south of the Karmakar's hut, on the other side of the drain running from north to south. This finding is corroborated by the evidence of Babu Satish Chandra Rai, Honorary Magistrate, who having received immediate information from the sweeper Basanta Mali, who found them, went to the place pointed out by the latter and there saw the crowbar and five or six chisels. With that conflict of argument which has marked the defence in this case it has been suggested on the one hand that these chisels were really dropped there by some dacoits and that therefore these had gone past and never entered into Karmakar's house and on the other hand that the story of suspicious men having been found on the road and of their running away is an invention of the Police who for their own purpose put the chisels at the points where they were subsequently found. On the third of November the house of the accused Kumud was searched and some papers found. In one of these letters the latter is asked to secure a self-sacrificing member, "a young man," for it is said "things are achieved by the energy and perseverance of young men." The writer in the post script gives the name of a young student. "You should" it says "watch him strictly and if found fit you should write to me, you should procure all informations regarding him and write to me and if you think it all right you yourself may proceed slowly." Another letter presses upon the addressee the propriety of the time and opportunity of work and in another letter the writer says that by the will of the mother (that is the Devi) he hoped to meet Kumud shortly, adding, "It seems to me that mother would get some works done by you. The mother has an eye upon you." Mr. Rasul has suggested to us that these references may apply to assurance business or religious proselytising. It is however obvious to me that the letters are of a political character and refer to secret nationalist propaganda most probably of a revolutionary kind. They were however written some time before the occurrence, the subject of the charge, but have this bearing that if Kumud Nag was a member of this gang, this evidence serves to explain its motives and how it is that persons who did not appear to belong to the ordinary criminal classes engaged in the work of dacoity. On the early morning of the 2nd November the house of the accused Romesh Chandra Banerjee was examined. The importance of this evidence is with respect to the postcard, Ex. A, said to have been addressed by one Surendra to Romesh Banerjee and which is relied on by the latter in support of the account which he gave of himself to the Police. For though in examination of the search witness No. 36 the question of the prosecution as to whether that postcard was found at such search was on the objection of the defence disallowed, it is yet obvious that the postcard was not then found as it was produced by the prisoner's Counsel much later and for the first time in the Sessions Court. The fact is of importance when we consider the question of the genuineness of the document. On the 7th November the Karmakar's hut was again searched and possession taken of some khata books and papers. An entry in the khata exhibit is relied upon in support of the defence of the accused Sarbari or Baju. It has been a matter of dispute whether there were two entries as the defence contends or one as Mr. Sinha for the Crown has submitted. It shows under the name of this accused an entry of gold weighing twelve annas and the receipt of 3 annas for repairing work. Of the other papers there found two have some importance, viz., Exs XXVIII and XXIX, one of which is addressed to one Nishi who was a servant of this accused Sarbari and contains a statement of the sending of one Rebati. These names occur on Exs. XVC and XXA and have importance on the question of the genuineness of the latter documents.

Before leaving the question of Police investigation before trial it is to be noted that the Police charge-sheet of the 15th November in giving the names of the witnesses and the points upon which they are to be called to give evidence mentions two persons' names, Nagarbashi Rudra Pal and Ram Chandra De, who are expected to prove association of the accused and their conduct. The former is the man who had been put up and discharged on the 8th November. These persons are not called and the circumstance is pointed out as one of suspicion; in what way is not clear. All that is before us is that the Police expected two witnesses to depose for the prosecution and for some reason or other they did not. We cannot assume that this indicates something wrong on the part of the Police when it is quite possible that these two witnesses may have been willing to give evidence and for fear or other motive refused at the last moment to do so. Moreover, if any charge of crime in this matter was going to be made against the Police it should, as I have already pointed out, have been cross-examined on when, as Mr. Sinha has argued, an explanation might have been forthcoming. The charge-sheet was signed by Sub Inspector Sashi, who was not questioned as to this. Upon this point I may make an observation which has application to other points in the case. It is of course no affair of the defence to supplement or explain deficiencies or suspicious circumstances appearing on the face of the prosecution evidence. It is open to it to say that the prosecution has not proved its case and to refer to such deficiencies in proof of the submission or to other circumstances appearing on the face of the prosecution evidence which show that it is so open to suspicion that it would be unsafe to accept it. If however not content with relying on such deficiencies and suspicious matter the defence put forward a case of fraud or if the evidence for the prosecution is not ambiguous the defence should give notice of the point they intend to take so that the prosecution may have an opportunity of explanation. The present is a case in point. If any charge of fraudulent practice was going to be based on a circumstance which standing by itself is not necessarily suspicious the defence should have cross-examined witnesses. I may here add in connection with the witness Sashi that I think that there is ground in the defence objection that he should have been called at an early stage of the case and not at the very end as was the fact. He and the other Sub-Inspector are two of the more important if not most important witnesses in the case and such should always be examined as early as possible. To some extent the matter has been remedied in the present case by the fact that the other Inspector of Police was called at an early stage being in fact the fourth witness.

It must be plain that if the facts are truly stated the case against the accused is fully established in the absence of any credible explanation forthcoming from them.

I turn now to that which is undoubtedly the most substantial point in favour of the defence, namely, the question of the manner in which the search was conducted. It is argued that there were grave irregularities in the conduct of the search and that although the existence of such irregularities does not render evidence of what was discovered on such search inadmissible, it does affect the credit which we should give to such evidence.

In the first place, reference is made to the provisions of the Police rules that the party making the search should himself be searched. Sub-Inspector Jatin says that he told the search witnesses to examine his person, but they said it was unnecessary. The Mukhtear Durga Charan Pal however says that no one searched him and that he did not search any nor did any one offer to be searched by him. Whether the evidence of the one witness or the other is correct, it seems plain that the searching party were not for one reason or another themselves searched. I need not delay to consider the argument that the entry into the house was illegal and which was sought to be justified on the ground that the Sub-Inspector Jatin may have had reasonable suspicion of an offence. The question is of no importance here whatever might be its value in an action for trespass on which I express no opinion. The Sub-Inspector however admits that after entry no notes were made of the places at which things were found at the same moment that they were found. It is said that people were allowed to come in and go out during search. This, if it took place, would be an irregularity but is certainly no indication of the suggested dishonesty of the Police which might be exposed by allowing any stranger to pass in and out of the room. Dealing however with the case of alleged irregularity, Lalit, the Mukhtear, says that between the time of his arrival and the preparation of the search list Police officers and others were coming and going through the door. This refers to a period extending from midnight till four in the morning. The point is who were these others. But this he was not asked. These may have included such persons as the Additional Magistrate, the Deputy Magistrate or Mr. Watling. And this may explain the apparent contradiction between the evidence and that of Sub-Inspector Jatin who, says that people did not come and go in and out of the room before the Additional Magistrate came. He may be speaking of persons other than those concerned in the search. The Mukhtear Lalit may by the word "people" refer to persons who, though not Police officers, may have had a right to be there. The other search witness Durga Charan Pal similarly says that from the time that Sashi Babu arrived till the search list was completed people including officers and constables were coming in and going out of the room. When Durga Charan speaks of the children of his house coming he appears to be speaking of the time of his arrival and on cross-examination, he says the children were outside or rather in the door way. Lalit's statement as to the presence of a post office employee living with Inspector Har Kumar Gupta refers to a period before the accused were removed. It cannot be said that the evidence is very clear or satisfactory on this point but if it be possible that others than those properly concerned did have access to the room, then, as I have said, though an irregularity it would go against the theory that the Police amongst other things fabricated documents there or introduced those documents and other things from outside for it is not likely that under such circumstances anybody and everybody would have been admitted access to the room. The Police rules further provide that what is found should be sent up as soon as possible to the Magistrate. The reason given for the non-observance of the rule in this case is that the Magistrate had (as is the fact) already signed the search list. As, however, the object of this rule is to satisfy the Court of the identity of the objects found it cannot be said that in this case the matter was one of any importance seeing that Mr. Ganga Charan Chatterjee, the Additional Magistrate, was himself in the hut and saw the articles which were entered in the search list.

It is not clear that the alterations on the search list were made whilst the document was in Police custody but in any case they are not of importance. The alteration of the numbering was due to the fact that the number 23 was written twice and though the word Nogen has been changed into Nayan—Nayan appears on the original document entered in the search list. This document was in a bad light read as Nogen and so entered at first in the search list, though in fact it is plainly Nayan. The most important matter in this connection is the fact that the accused were after the discovery of the gun (which was in their presence) after search of their persons sent out of the room. The Code permits the occupants of the room to be present at the search and there was therefore a violation of this rule which is one not merely of technicality but of substance in that it is enacted to guarantee the reality of the search and the discoveries made thereat. It is unnecessary to determine whether all the accused found in the hut can be said to be occupants within the meaning of the section because the person or persons who were admittedly occupants were not present at the search. The reason for disregard of this rule is that the hut was, as is undoubtedly the case, a very small one. It is said also that the accused, though taken out of the room, were kept near the south door facing the machan. This, if a fact, would have been of little service to them. Moreover it is contradicted by the search witness Durga Charan Pal who says they were taken to the west of the wall which appears to be away from the door. Whilst I am not satisfied that, as has been argued, notwithstanding the alleged want of space people of all sorts were allowed to come and go out of the room, I am unable to say on the other hand that it would not have been possible to continue the search in the presence of the accused as by placing them in the eastern room and removing. the mat screen between it and the western room or otherwise. However this be, the fact remains that the accused were not present at the search and this is an irregularity which they are entitled to ask us to consider. The evidence must undoubtedly be carefully scrutinised on that account. It is to be noted, however, that there were two search witnesses present. But after all if upon a careful scrutiny of the evidence we come to a conclusion that notwithstanding the absence of the accused advantage was not and could not have been taken of it the irregularity whilst serving to exact from the Court a careful scrutiny of the evidence relating to the search has no further effect. It is not sufficient to suggest that articles might have been fraudulently introduced we must see whether there are any reasons to suppose that this was done. The chief question therefore iss was it possible or probable that the arms, implements, masks and documents found on that night were either there or previously introduced or fabricated by the Police as alleged. It will be here convenient to deal with the legal presumptions arising from possession if proved If we take the single circumstance tha arms were found under the machan and in the ceiling of the hut, knowledge of that existence would not (without other evidence) be imputable to any other than the lessee of the hut Probodh Karmakar— nor would the presumption operate even against him if it were shown that the circumstances were such that arms might be in his place without his knowing it:— for instance, if, as alleged to be the case here, they could have been introduced from outside. The evidence on this point is in some respects not as clear as it might be but appears to me to establish that the arms could not have been introduced from outside.

[His Lordship after dealing with the other facts and circumstances considered the case of each individual accused and concluded as follows.]

I have now dealt with the defence of all twelve accused. In my opinion for the reasons given I think that notwithstanding the suspicion which attaches to them we should acquit the accused Thakur Das Pal and Aditya Charan Dutta, the other circumstances of the case being insufficient to overcome the inferences which may be drawn from their position as subordinates of the Karmakar and the absence of their names from Exhibit XXA. As regards the rest of the accused they have in my opinion failed to meet the strong case which the prosecution makes against them and have not by their defence shown that their presence in the hut was, as they allege, of an accidental and innocent character. The two Defendants I have above named, Thakur and Aditya, are accordingly acquitted and I direct that they be set at liberty. The appeal of the other accused fails and is dismissed and their convictions and sentences are confirmed.

BEACHCROFT, J.—In this case I had written a separate judgment, but my learned brother has dealt so exhaustively with the facts and arguments advanced and my own views coincide so closely with his on almost every point, that a lengthy separate judgment would be a mere repetition of a great deal of his. I therefore propose to confine my remarks to a few only of the principal matters that have been argued before us.

I agree with my learned brother's views as to the scope of secs. 399 and 402. The contention that the conviction cannot stand by reason of repugnancy in the record must fail in my opinion for two reasons: (1) that there is in fact no repugnancy, (2) that if the suggested repugnancy existed it would provide no good ground for setting aside the conviction. With the first reason, my learned brother has dealt. I shall therefore confine myself to the second. The argument as to the repugnancy is based on the case of Rex v. Plummer (8) a case in which a person was acquitted though he had pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy, because the jury acquitted the other two persons with whom he was alleged to have conspired. It seems to me that the principle which underlies that case is really this, that you cannot have contradictory results or decisions from one set of facts, as only one decision can be the right one. The verdict of the jury was "no conspiracy," that was conclusive and therefore the prisoner who pleaded guilty could not be convicted because his plea was inconsistent with established facts. It is true the learned Judges speak of the record being inconsistent and contradictory. But the record is merely the outward and visible sign of the facts found and I take it that the underlying principle is that which I have stated.

In that case Bruce, J., says "the record of conviction can only be made up in the terms of the indictment" and on that expression it is argued that in considering this matter we must look only to the indictment and ignore the facts actually proved. The reason for the rule in the case of a jury verdict is obvious, for the verdict is simply one of guilty or not guilty on the specific indictment and the facts found by the Jury are unknown except to this extent that the allegations in the indictment are proved or not proved. But I emphatically dissent from learned Counsel's contention that such a rule can be applied to the case of a decision by a Judge. In such a case we cannot ignore the facts found. The argument amounts to this: The Judge has found certain facts, he has made a mistake in law in saying that those facts do not amount to an offence under sec. 399, the facts do also amount to an offence under sec. 402, yet because he has, though mistakenly, acquitted the accused of the charge under sec. 399 and though he has rightly held the facts to be an offence under sec. 402, the accused must be acquitted of the offence under sec. 402. It seems to me that the argument has only to be stated in this form to insure its instant rejection. The position is this. The Judge finds certain facts, we agree with him in his findings as to those facts, yet if he makes an error in law in the application of the facts as to sec. 399, we are not only to accept his error in regard to that section, but to add to it one of our own in regard to sec. 402.

The accused are entitled to the benefit of any technicality that they can invoke in their favour, but a technicality which leads to such a farcical result as the above, must be clearly established, and it must be one which is to be found within the four corners of the Code of Criminal Procedure and not one borrowed from English law and founded on ideas as to the sacred character of a verdict by a jury, whose findings of fact are unknown, a character which by the express provisions of law does not attach to jury verdicts in this country.

Now, the tendency of modern legislation in general and of the Criminal Procedure Code in particular is to avoid technicalities, and I am aware of no provision in that Code which would justify interference with a conviction on the ground of repugnancy in the record. An instance will make it clear that repugnancy in the verdict of a Jury in India is not by itself sufficient to justify the quashing of a conviction and to anyone with much experience of mofussil juries, it will be evident that such repugnancies do occur. Suppose six persons are charged under sec. 147 with rioting and under sec. 304 read with sec. 149 in respect of culpable homicide committed in the course of the riot. The Jury convicts all six under sec. 147 but convicts only three of the charge under secs. 304 and 149 acquitting the others of this charge. They do this arbitrarily to distinguish the case of ringleaders from those who take a less prominent part. The Judge considers that he can give a sufficient sentence in regard to the latter three, though he does not agree with the verdict. He cannot, therefore, refer the case under sec. 307, for it is not necessary for the ends of justice to do so. Nor on appeal could this Court interfere on the ground of repugnancy, for under sec. 423 (2) it could interfere only on the ground of misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding by the Jury of the law and both of these elements are absent in the case supposed. It is no answer to say that such verdicts ought not to be given for the fact remains that they are.

If mere repugnancy in the verdict of a Jury is not by itself sufficient to ensure quashing of a conviction, much less can that result be insured by a repugnancy, which exists only in the formal decision of a Judge, whose actual findings of fact are known, in other words a repugnancy in form only and not in substance.

The finding of the gun and revolvers is not disputed, but it is urged that the manner of their finding shows that the Police knew that these articles were there to be found and one of the facts on which this theory had been based is that Jatin found the gun almost immediately after he entered the hut, an entry which it is urged was in itself unjustifiable. It is argued that under sec. 47 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Jatin had no authority to enter the hut until he had asked permission from the occupant of it. This argument, in my opinion, is based on a misconception of the scope of sec. 47. It is not intended to restrict the powers of the Police: on the contrary it is a provision compelling householders to afford the Police facilities in carrying out their duties, and sec. 48 provides that if difficulties are placed in the way of a Police officer, he may use force to obtain ingress. Now, no suggestion was made in the course of cross-examination to Jatin that he had done anything improper in entering the hut. What were the facts? He had been told about the occurrence on the road and led to the spot where the men had disappeared. He had been told that there was no one in the hut but the Karmakars, yet he sees a man, as he says, "spring" from the south hut to the north hut. He followed the man through the open door and found a number of men in a room without any light. He was about to look under the machan to see if anyone was hiding there, when one of the men there made a statement to him. He then removed the basket which was under the machan and found the gun. I do not see anything suspicious in this conduct of Jatin's: on the contrary it seems to me extremely natural. If his suspicions were not aroused before he entered the hut, it is a reasonable supposition to make that he entered to ask the inmates if they could throw any light on the point as to where the fugitives had gone, and it would be absurd to call such an entry illegal. If his suspicions were aroused before he entered, it is impossible to say that in the circumstances his suspicions were not reasonable, and if he had reasonable suspicion of the commission of a cognisable offence sec. 54 would have been a sufficient authority for him to effect an arrest. In either case the contention that his entry was illegal is in my opinion an idle one.

There is, however, more substance in the contention that at the time of the search the provisions of sec. 103, Criminal Procedure Code, were ignored. The learned Judge states, no doubt correctly, that the accused were not "prevented from seeing what was going on after expressing a wish to do so." The language of the Code no doubt is, "shall be permitted to attend during the search," and on that language it might be argued that there is no breach of the Code in excluding the occupant of the place, if he does not demand to be present. But the occupant of a place searched is hardly likely to be aware of his rights and in practice the search is ordinarily made in his presence. In my opinion the spirit of the section is that he shall be present and I take it to mean that he is to be given the option of being present and not that he is to be allowed to be present only if he demands it.

It is to be noticed, however, that the right of presence given by sec. 103 applies only to the "occupant of the place searched or some person in his behalf." I take it that the words "occupant of the place" are not intended to cover every person who may happen to be in the place at the time, but that they refer back to the person mentioned in sec. 102, "a person residing in, or being in charge of the place." Strictly speaking, then, the only persons entitled as of right to be present at a search are persons residing in or in charge of the place, and when that view is applied to the facts of the present case, it is evident that the majority of the accused were not entitled as of right to be present at the search. As a matter of practice it is doubtless desirable that any person against whom an inference may be drawn from the fact of certain articles being found in a particular place should have an opportunity of being present at the search, but if it is proposed to draw an inference against the bonâ fides of the Police in respect of a search on the ground that the provisions of the law have not been complied with, it must be shown that those provisions have heen ignored, and such an inference will not be justified from a mere failure to exercise a wise discretion. In the present case, however, it is quite clear that some one or more of the accused were in fact occupants of the hut, so that if they were improperly excluded there has been an ignoring of the provisions of the law.

Jatin says that the accused were taken out of the room and kept near the south door, that is the door facing the machan. He evidently intends to suggest that they were in such a position as to be able to see what was happening. In cross-examination he gives the reason for the removal to be that the presence of respectable witnesses made it unnecessary to keep them in the room. Sashi, being the person who had then removed, is the proper person to give the explanation. The reason he gives is that there was not sufficient room in the hut and says they were standing in the passage between the hut, in front of the door. Durga says they were taken to the west of the west wall. Lalit says they were taken out but he did not see where they were taken to.

Taking these statements together it may, I think, be fairly inferred that they were taken to a place from which they were not in a position to see what occurred. It is possible that it was not Sashi, but the constables who were in charge of the accused, who removed them from the doorway to the west of the hut, but I think Sashi ought to have taken steps to see that they were not removed.

It is suggested that they might have been taken into the east room and so enabled to watch the proceedings from the opening between the two rooms. Neither of the police-officers was asked why they were not taken and if they had been taken there the suggestion would doubtless have been made that considering the position of that opening they were not able to see anything.

If the dimensions of the hut are considered it will be seen that Sashi's estimate that there was not sufficient space in the west room for them is reasonable. The west room measured 13′ x 8′, the machan took up 8′ x 6′ leaving an empty space of only 8′ x 7′. In this space were three search witnesses, and three police-officers, for the Inspector was also there and it does not need much imagination to realize that there was very little space left.

Another consideration must also not be lost sight of, two of the search witnesses were Mukhtears, the third Jadu Babu, is described as a Civil Court Commissioner. These witnesses doubtless knew their businesses and were not likely to be imposed upon.

To my mind the removal of the accused ought to be attributed to an error of judgment, and it must be remembered that it was an error of judgment shared in also by the Inspector as being the senior officer present, against whom not only has no suggestion been made, but it has been made a grievance that he was not examined as a witness, for it is suggested that he having formerly been a pleader and above suspicion, would have materially assisted the defence if called. However, the fact remains that the accused were not present at the search, and for that reaosn the evidence of finding of articles requires careful scrutiny. My learned brother has given reasons, in which, I concur, for holding that the masks were not introduced by outside agency and that the two important documents Exs. XVC and XXA were genuine documents.

The grievance of exclusion of the accused from the hut at the search is one which in regard to the earlier stages of the proceedings may fairly be termed unsubstantial, for it is not disputed that the bundle containing two revolvers, and a shirt, in the pocket of which a mask was subsequently found and a hammer was found above the ceiling, or that a gun was found under the machan. As regards these things the contention is that, whether put in the places where they were found by the Police or by some body else, the accused knew nothing about them.

When an article is found in a man's house the ordinary presumption is that he, as owner of the house, is aware of its existence. This is subject to the qualification that no other person has access to that particular place. It follows that if the house is in the occupation of more persons than one having access to the particular place, there is no presumption against them individually that they have put the article where it is found; though if it be proved that an article has been for a considerable period of time in a place to which all have frequent access, it might reasonably be presumed that all were aware of its existence. These propositions depend on ordinary common sense and do not require any authority to support them. Applying them to the present case the position is this. If it is shown that these articles could not have been introduced above the ceiling or beneath the machan from outside, there will be a presumption that some one or other of the persons using the hut put them where they were found, but there will not be a presumption as against any particular individual if the hut is used by more than one person. It therefore becomes necessary to examine the possibility of the introduction of these things by outside agency.

[His Lordship considered the evidence on the record and agreed with Woodroffe, J., and thus concluded.]

The next stage in the proceedings after the finding of the bundle and hammers and the clothes on the machan, was the examination of the contents of the pockets of the clothes after the arrival of the Additional Magistrate, who had been preceded by Mr. Watling :—in fact it was Mr. Watling who sent for the Additional Magistrate and the Additional District Superintendent of Police,—and much argument has been devoted by all the learned Counsel appearing for the Appellants as to the interval of time that elapsed between the arrival of Sashi and the arrival of Mr. Watling. The arguments are based on the estimate of the times given by the different witnesses when the various steps were taken. It is urged that no explanation is given of what was done during 1½ hours. The estimates of time given by the different witnesses naturally vary somewhat, and it is impossible to suppose that men who have been suddenly called from bed will have any very clear idea of what the time was. Mr. Sinha, for the Crown, has argued that the interval was not more than about ½ hour to ¾ hour, i.e., from the time when the Inspector left to call Mr. Watling till the arrival of the latter. Considering the time that has been taken I do not think it makes very much difference whether it was ¾ hour, an hour, or 1½ hours.

The argument is this. Sashi having found the revolvers etc. and the clothes must have done something in the interval before Mr. Watling came; as it has not been stated what was done an inference must be drawn against the prosecution that the Police were up to no good, or at any rate that the absence of an explanation as to what was done rouses such an amount of suspicion that no reliance can be placed on the subsequent finding of the papers, Exhibits XVC and XX*a*, and of the masks.

Mr. Sinha's suggestion is that what was uppermost in the minds of Sashi and Jatin was the nature and condition of the clothes, for the circumstances showed that the accused found on the machan with wet clothes were out for no good purpose, and that they had no idea of the possible contents of pockets at that time, but thought only of showing the clothes as they found them to the superior authorities.

It seems to me to be futile to speculate as to what were the motives of the two police-officers when not a single question has been put to them, the only persons who could state them, touching the point. It is suggested that that was a point which it was the duty of the prosecution to clear up. Now, not only is the argument based on a false premise that the police-officers must have been doing something, but it is obvious that if the argument is to have any force it must be clear that the circumstances were such as to throw on the prosecution the duty of giving an explanation.

In cross-examination no stress was laid on the lapse of time and it was not suggested by a single question that there was a period for which some account should be given. And if the cross-examination does not even lay the foundation of a suggestion that there is a period for which an account ought to have been [illegible] been given, an Appellate Court ought not in my opinion to pay any attention to suggestions made for the first time in appeal. If there is anything in the evidence which on the face of it requires explanation, the absence of an explanation may reasonably give rise to adverse comment, and an accused is entitled to the full benefit of the want of explanation of a circumstance which primâ facie requires explanation. But the very argument that there has been no explanation implies the suggestion that something ought to have been done other than what was done or what appears on the evidence to have been done. That, it is suggested, was according to the evidence nothing. Of the various counsel to whom I put the question what did they suggest ought to have been done, one alone had a suggestion to make; it was that the clothes ought to have been examined. Now, I have not the slightest doubt that if the two police-officers had examined the clothes and found the masks and papers, the comment would have been that their haste was evidence of dishonesty, and that in view of the fact that the Inspector had gone to call the District Superintendent of Police, they ought to have waited. In a case like this it is impossible for the Police to do anything which will not be attacked and it is impossible to say, in view of the fact that their actions are so frequently subjected to hypercritical comment, that it would have been wiser to pursue one course rather than the other.

I agree that accused Aditya Charan Dutt and Thakur Das Pal should be acquitted and the convictions and sentences of the rest of the accused affirmed.

NOTES.

Identification of criminals.

In noticing the death of Bertillon, the English Law Journal in an appreciative note notices how the researches of the illustrious deceased directed the attention of criminologists to the identification of criminals. Although finger-print has in the present day superseded any other method of identification yet it is doubtful whether it would have been resorted to for the purpose had not Bertillon carried on his anthropological researches in this connection. It is however interesting to note that the finger-print method of identification of criminals was practically initiated by Anglo-Indian officials in India. Finger-print as a means of identification has been in vogue in India from the very earliest times. So much so that the Indian Sovereigns and later on the Mahomedan Emperors used to seal all their important documents with their finger-prints. All the important charters and grants always bore the imprint of panja or the five finger-prints of the Emperors. The suggestion that finger-print is an infallible means of identification surely originated in India and the credit of its being made use of for the identification of criminals surely belong to Anglo-Indian officers.

This is what the Law Journal says on the subject :—

Few men have rendered the cause of criminal justice more solid service than the late M. Bertillon, whose death, at the early age of sixty-one, will be sincerely regretted by everyone who realises how useful his system of anthropological measurements has proved to be in the better identification of criminals. It is true that Sir Francis Galton's system of finger-prints, with the method of classification invented by Sir Edward Henry, has, at any rate in England, surpassed the Bertillon system ; but it was the famous Frenchman's method of elaborate measurements of body, head, feet and hands which facilitated the introduction of the more trustworthy system now existing in this country. Not that Sir Francis Galton, whose method was adopted in 1894, is entitled to the distinction of having been the first to recognise the value of finger impressions as a means of identification. Sir William Herschel devised a system which was successfully introduced into India as long ago as 1858. Finger impressions are, of course, of much more ancient origin. To give but one instance, Professor Sollas, in dealing with the palæolithic races, states that 'impressions of the human hand are met with painted in red in Altamira, but in other caves also in black, and sometimes uncoloured on a coloured ground.' Dickens, too, may be quoted in this connection. Did not Dan'l Peggotty, in that quaint dwelling of his at Yarmouth, 'print off fishy impressions of his thumb on all the cards he found'? But the employment of finger-prints as a means of indentifying prisoners is quite a modern thing, and nowhere has it been brought to a higher pitch of utility than in England.

Sale of Court-fee stamps to pleaders' clerks.

Our attention has been drawn to a practice which is said to be common, viz., the sale of Court fees to pleaders' clerks in the name of such clerks by licensed vendors and we have been asked as to the propriety of the course. The pleaders' clerks are said to sell them to their masters' clients without further endorsement. The question is whether such purchase and sale offend against sec. 34 (3) of the Court Fees Act. If the pleaders' clerks do it for any profit of their own they surely come under the section. But if they do it on their masters' behalf and for the latters' clients they surely do not offend against the section. We think that if the stamp vendors would in such cases endorse the name of the pleaders' clerks as such, and not merely individually, there can be little objection urged against the practice. We believe that since the enactment of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 34, the question was referred to the Government of India as to whether legal practitioners may buy a stock of Court-fee stamps for the use of their clients from time to time. The Government of India decided that the prohibition as contemplated in sec. 34 (3) is not applicable to a case of a legal practitioner or banker buying a stock of stamps for use in his own business. They may prepare drafts on the stamped paper and recover the cost of the stamp and their professional charges from their clients. But surely it would be improper for a pleader or solicitor's clerk to purchase any Court-fee stamps except in the name of his master and for the use of his clients.

The lay and the legal journals in England are at present discussing the limitations of judicial joking. The following observations of the Law Journal may be said to sum up the view which will receive general acceptance.

'The Court is very much obliged to any learned gentleman who beguiles the tedium of a legal argument with a little honest hilarity,' Chief Justice Erle told a member of the Bar who apologised for a sally that set the Court in a roar of laughter. To judge from the protests which are being made against judicial humour, there are persons who regard even 'a little honest hilarity' as something quite alien to the serious work of the Courts. They would not object to a flash of wit from the witness box; they might even tolerate a witticism from the Bar; but they appear to think that the dignity of the Bench requires that a judge, no matter how mirthful or tedious the proceedings over which he presides, should sit all day 'like his grandsire cut in alabaster.' Judicial joking may, no doubt, sometimes be carried to excess. An incident in the judicial career of Sir James Fitzjames Stephen—by no means, in the ordinary sense, a 'judicial humorist'—indicates its dangers. He was trying a slander case in which both the parties were Billingsgate salesmen, and the counsel for the defendant did not fail to take full advantage of the humour of the situation. Mr. H. F. Dickens, who represented the plaintiff, seeing the judge, as well as the rest of the court, impressed by the jocular aspects of the case, made a strong effort to bring out the serious injury that had been inflicted upon his client Mr Justice Stephen, his sense of fairness aroused, was sobered in a moment, and summed up in favour of the plaintiff. After the jury had returned their verdict the learned judge sent this note to the plaintiff's counsel: 'Dear Dickens,—I am very grateful to you for preventing me from doing a great act of injustice.' Perhaps some judges would display a better regard not only for their reputation as wits but also for the dignity of the Bench if their attempts at jocularity were rather less frequent. For laughter, though it certainly need not be banished from the courts, may sometimes create an atmosphere in which the serious character of the work is prejudiced. A 'little honest hilarity' in a court of justice is one thing; an habitual striving after the mirth-provoking is quite another.

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES BY THE POLICE.

Chap. XIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals with "information to the Police and their powers to investigate." Any officer in charge of a Police Station may, without the order of a Magistrate, investigate any cognizable case which a Court having jurisdiction over the local area within the limits of such station would have power to enquire into or try under the Code. This power of a police-officer to hold an investigation of his own accord is limited to cognizable cases only and so far as non-cognizable cases are concerned it is absolutely necessary that the police-officer should be authorised in the Mofussil by the order of a Magistrate of the first or second class having power to try such case or commit the same for trial and in a Presidency town by the order of a Presidency Magistrate. In the course of an investigation under Chap. XIV of the Code, a police-officer may by order in writing require the attendance before himself of any person being within the limits of his own or any adjoining station who from the information given or otherwise appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case and such person is bound to attend as required (sec. 160). By a misuse of this provision, accused persons are sometimes called upon to appear before a police-officer, but this is wholly illegal. The intention of the Legislature in making this provision, as pointed out by Turner, C. J., in Queen Empress v. Saminada Chetti, I. L. R. 7 Mad. 274, seems to have been only to provide a facility for obtaining evidence and a police-officer cannot legitimately invoke the aid of sec. 160, Cr P. C, in seeking to enforce the attendance of an accused person.

Even in exercising his legitimate powers under sec. 161 with reference to witnesses, a police-officer must act with discretion and caution. The case of Haladhar Bhumij, 9 C. W. N. 199, where the Police had taken a number of women stated to be related to certain absconders from their village to the Police Station on the pretext that they wished to examine them, is an instance of the indiscreet exercise of powers conferred on the Police by the section. It was pointed out by Harington and Pargiter, JJ, that the proper course for the Police was to hold the examination of the women at their own houses.

It is to be noted that non-attendance in obedience to an order issued by a police-officer under sec. 160, Cr. P. C., is punishable under sec. 174, I. P. C., but it is essential that the order should be properly made, Lakshmi Gadu, 2 Weir. 121, and if the order disobeyed was not made in writing no conviction can be had for disobedience thereof, Verasami Pillai, 1 Weir. 86, see also Queen-Empress v. Purshotam Vanamali, Ratanlal's Unreported Cases, page 850.

Secs. 161 and 162 lay down the scope and the manner of the examination of witnesses summoned under sec. 160. Under sec. 161 the witness is bound to answer all questions relating to the case under investigation put to him by the police-officer, other than questions the answers to which have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture. When the Code of 1872 was in force it was ruled by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (Emperor v. Kassim Khan, I. L. R. 7, Cal. 121; s. c. 8 C. L. R. 30) that the corresponding secs. 118 and 119 of that Code imposed no obligation upon a person examined by the Police under those sections to speak the truth. This decision overruled the case of Queen v. Nimchand Mookerji, 20 W. R. Cr. 41, and it was also directly opposed to a previous decision in the case of Juggornath Sahai, 8 C. L. R. 236. The decison of the Full Bench was superseded by sec. 161 of the Code of 1882 in which the word "truly" was for the first time added after the words "shall be bound to answer." Accordingly in Emperor v. Parshram Ray Sing, I. L. R. 8 Bom. 216 and Nathu Sheikh v. Emperor, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 405, it was held that if a person knowingly answered falsely questions put to him by a police-officer under sec. 161 he would be guilty of intentionally giving false evidence but a contrary view was held in Queen-Empress v. Ismail Valad Fatari, I. L. R. 11 Bom. 659. In the Code of 1898 the Legislature has reverted to the law as it stood under the Code of 1872 and it has been held that as under sec. 161 of the present Code a person is not bound to answer truly questions put by a police-officer no conviction under sec. 179, I. P. C., can be had for refusing to answer such questions (Savani Virabayi, 1 Weir. 111) and that such a refusal is not punishable under secs. 176, 179 or 187, I. P. C., (Queen-Empress v. Sankaralinga Kone, I. L. R. 23 Mad. 544); and in Queen-Empress v. Appi Gadu, I. L. R. 23 Mad. 544 (note), where the accused was charged in the alternative with making a false statement to a police-officer investigating under sec. 161 or with making a false statement before the Magistrate, it was held that as under the present Code a person is no longer bound by law to tell the truth when questioned by a police-officer, a conviction in the alternative as aforesaid cannot stand.

An instance of a rather curious application of the section is to be found in Reg. v. Fakira, Ratanlal's Unreported Cases, p. 92, where a police-officer asked a witness to look at the hands of a complainant and answer whether there were any marks of tying with a rope on his hands; this the witness refused and it was held that he could not be convicted of an offence under sec. 179, I. P. C., for refusing to comply with the police-officer's bidding.

So far as liability to a prosecution under sec. 211, I. P. C., is concerned it was held in Veerepalli Penchalugadu, 1 Weir. 193, Chenna Ramana, I. L. R. 31 Mad. 506, that a person who answers questions put to him by a police-officer making an investigation under sec. 161 does not institute or cause to be instituted criminal proceedings within the meaning of sec. 211, I. P. C., nor does he thereby charge any person within the meaning of that section but a statement made under sec. 161, Cr. P. C., is included in the word "information" as used in sec. 182, I. P. C. (Queen-Empress v. Bhikaji, Ratanlal's Unreported Cases, page 124).

It may be observed that under sec. 175, Cr. P. C., a police-officer of the class mentioned in the section on receiving information of the commission of suicide, murder or accidental or suspicious death is bound to proceed to the place where the body of such deceased person is and there make an investigation and draw up a report. This report is popularly known as the Surathhal report and for the purpose of an investigation as aforesaid a police-officer may by order in writing summon persons appearing to be acquainted with the facts of the case and every person so summoned shall be bound to attend and to answer truly all questions other than those of an incriminating nature and if he answers falsely he is liable to be prosecuted under sec. 193, I. P. C.

In the practical application of sec. 161, Cr. P. C., it appears to have been the practice for police-officers in the mofussil to hold a regular investigation of a quasi judicial character in the presence of the accused and his agents. This does not seem to be contemplated by the law which lays down that the statement of a witness examined under sec. 161 may be taken down in writing under the provisions of sec. 162 but such statement shall not be signed by the person making it nor shall such writing be used in evidence: provided that when any witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been taken down in writing as aforesaid the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof: and such statement may be used to impeach the credit of such witness in manner provided by the Indian Evidence Act.

Sec. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act is the general section which deals with the subject of previous statements which may be proved to corroborate the testimony of a witness. Sec. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure occurs in a special enactment relating to the procedure of Criminal Courts. This section deals with a special class of statements, namely, those made by a witness in a criminal case to a police officer in the course of the investigation of an offence. The Evidence Act is a general Act dealing with the admission of evidence generally. The general provisions of sec. 157 of that Act must be taken to be controlled by the special provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure embodied in sec. 162 (Emperor v. Narayan Raghunath Palki, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 111; Bhulai Sing, 13 Oudh Cases 7). The rule of construction applicable in a case like this is thus laid down in Beal's Cardinal Rules of Legal Interpretation, p. 219. "It is to be borne in mind that where there are provisions in a special Act which are inconsistent with the provisions of the prior general Act the provisions of the general Act must yield to those of the special Act."

The first Code of Criminal Procedure which was passed soon after the passing of the Evidence Act, in sec. 119 of the Code, enacted that no statement of a person examined by the Police if reduced to writing shall be signed by the person making it nor shall it be treated as part of the record or used as evidence. Sec. 162 of the Code of 1882 formulated the rule in these words: "No statement other than a dying declaration made by any person to a police-officer in the course of an investigation under this Chapter (XIV) shall if reduced to writing be signed by the person making it or shall be used as evidence against the accused." The section as at present enacted plainly constitutes an exception to the ordinary rule of evidence. The proviso again engrafts an exception upon the exception (Emperor v. Narayan Raghunath, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 111, per Beaman, J., Bhulai Sing, 13 Oudh Cases 7.)

SOURCES OF LAW IN ANCIENT INDIA.*

This is an essay on Hindu Jurisprudence which the author submitted as his thesis for the degree of Doctor of Laws of the Calcutta University. The thesis, we are informed, has been accepted, and so far it may be said to have served its immediate purpose. But its intrinsic merits will not, we hope, be measured merely by its success as a University thesis—for it is, within its modest limits, a very suggestive and in some respects original contribution to Hindu Jurisprudence. It cannot be said, indeed, that the sources of law in ancient India are an entirely new subject. But this essay is, we believe, the first in which an attempt has been made to co-ordinate these sources according to the historical and generic method. This work of co-ordination could not, of course, be accomplished without taking account of the institutions which acted and reacted on the law and accordingly the subject has naturally expanded into an inquiry into the development, by interaction, of Law and Society in Ancient India.

The author's sketch of the constitution of Ancient Indian Society, it may be stated at once, is a highly conjectural one. But it is not necessary for us to assent to every link in the chain of ideas which lead him to formulate the view, which seems to us to be a sound one, viz., that Ancient Hindu Society "should be looked upon as an aggregate of several societies embodying different principles of association, loosely knit together by the military principle into a rudimentary State" (p. 18). He has also, we think, correctly indicated the position of the King in Ancient Hindu polity. The king in India was never a "lawgiver," and his legislative powers were restricted within the narrowest bounds (p. 80). His judicial functions too were very much circumscribed, being limited in theory at least to merely exacting compliance on the part of the subjects with the eternal laws of dharma. In no other society too were constitutional limitations on the king's powers more thoroughly secured by the obligation to consult various bodies of councillors.

The author takes note, as every one must, of the well-known fact that the end of society in Ancient Hindu India was the promotion of dharma or the moral order of the universe. "All law was viewed as subsumed under that ruling conception. Law was therefore not a matter to be made or moulded by human hands. It is eternally ordained and interwoven with the constitution of society and capable of ascertainment partly by revelation and partly by enquiry in a spirit of reverence, into the nature of dharma. The result of this was the development of a comprehensive idea of law which is the dream and perhaps the despair of the sociological school of modern philosophical jurists." How and by what processes this idea of an all-pervading dharma or moral order permeated, moulded and in a great measure refined the customary rules of the people through the changing ages forms of course the main theme of this essay and it is here that the author's originality in ideas as also method of treatment becomes most marked.

The Sruti of course is the traditional source of all Hindu Law, and no text-book on Hindu Law omits to impress this fact on students. But the Vedas never were a concrete source of strictly legal rules. All rules, srouta or grihya or strictly legal, were alike referred to the ultimate authority of the Vedas. "It would seem then that 'Veda' had ceased to signify merely the aggregate of sacred revealed texts known to the writers but stood for the sum total of actual and possible knowledge and the embodiment of all moral and religious truth" (p. 37). The reference of all rules of conduct for their source to the "Veda" finds its nearest parallel in Roman Jurisprudence in the reference to Natural Law. The Smritis according to the writer were originally understood to be "recollections" of the practices of those who knew the Vedas—not individual recollections but "agreements" or common recollections of associations of men—in other words, traditions preserved in colleges of learned men (Parishads). The author's account of how in course of time Smritis came to assume super-human authority until claims of equal (if not superior) authority with the Vedas were put forward on behalf of such works as the Dharmashastras of Manu and Yajnavalkya is both suggestive and interesting. Not less interesting is his account of the process by which the customs of the Aryas came in course of time to secure the sanction of presumed Vedic origin, were transformed in the process, and became laws. The only other matter dealt with in this essay which deserves special mention is "secular customs" as a source of law. "There are in the contemplation of the Smritis, countries and classes of people where and amongst whom sacred law does not exist (the Vrishalas, Vratyas, Antyajas, Abhisartas and Apapatras), and possibly we should never have known by what law they were governed were it not that it would be dharma for the king to maintain such laws as prevailed amongst them" (pp. 91-92). These and other secular customs were not touched by the Sruti and consequently consistency with the Srutis or the Smritis was not demanded of the customs, for instance, of herdsmen, husbandmen, traders, bankers, and artisans" (p. 93). It was the king's dharma to enforce these customs as he found them amongst the persons concerned. Thus "it was the duty of the king to do justice as amongst gamblers according to the rules of the game ascertained from the gamblers themselves. Even a woman's wages of shame did not fall outside the scope of the king's dharma" (p. 95).

We do not propose to notice this essay at greater length as the extracts given above will suffice to show the character and value of the author's speculations on a subject of absorbing interest to all students of Jurisprudence, particularly amongst Indians. The ancient Indians were in many respects a most remarkable community with a social organisation of far more elaborate structure and cohesion than either the Roman, or the Teutonic polity. Should the labours of historical jurists ever succeed in re-discovering and reconstructing the lost records of this community, the result, we feel sure, will far exceed in interest and importance the records of any other people on the earth, not excluding the Hebrews, for in no society have moral ideals been more consciously and consistently worked out in practice than in ancient India. We sincerely trust therefore that the present essay is but an earnest of what in the fulness of time the author and others who have been working in this most interesting field of research will yet accomplish by more extended and sustained efforts to comprehend and interpret Hindu Jurisprudence in the spirit in which it was understood and accepted in ancient Aryavarta.

Money transaction—Agency.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF MADRAS v. D. RAGAIN AYYAR, I. L. R 36 Mad. 499 (F. B.).

A certain railway company remitted money to a firm to the credit of a claimant. The firm informed the claimant who was not one of their customers that this has been done and asked for his instructions but before he could instruct them they suspended payment.

Held—That the firm held the money as agents of the Railway Company and not as bankers of the claimant.

Indian Contract Act, sec. 16—Rate of interest, Court's power to interfere with.

U. KESADULU NAIDU v. ASITHALAI AMMAL, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 533.

It is not open to a Court to reduce the rate of interest unless it is of opinion that the stipulation as to interest was procured by the exercise of undue influence as defined in sec. 16.

Promissory note—Payment to one of several payees, effect of.

M. ANNAPURNAMMA v. U. AKKAYYA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 544 (F. B.)

Under a promissory note the promisor is entitled to offer payment to one of the promisees and the promisor cannot be held to be liable to pay over again to the other promisees what he has already paid. The payment therefore must be treated as a complete discharge.

(CRIMINAL.)

Forgery committed to conceal already perpetrated fraud.

EMPEROR v. BALKRISHNO WAMAN, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 666.

The word "fraud" as used in the Penal Code is used in its ordinary and popular acceptation and a man who deliberately makes a false document with false signatures in order to shield and conceal an already perpetrated fraud is himself acting with intent to commit fraud.

EMPEROR v. RAMCHANDRA HARI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 685.

The object of the Rule is to lessen the risk of accidents through shunting on a through line after line clear has been given. The disregard of the rule enhances the danger to passengers. It is the risk thus entailed which renders the rule breaker liable to punishment. The offence is the endangering of the passengers, not the contributing to an accident, for the rule breaker may be punished even though no accident occurs. The gravity of the offence should be estimated not by the actual ultimate consequences but by the risk involved.

Indian Penal Code, secs. 213, 214—Screening an offender—Verdict of "not guilty."

The only thing which is made punishable under the law is the screening of an offence and if it cannot be made to appear that an offence has been committed then there has been no screening of an offence.

It is a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a verdict of "not guilty" as not fully establishing the innocence of the person to whom it relates.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Lyons & Co. Ld., v. Gulliver and Capital Syndicate, Ld. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES SWINFEN EADY AND PHILLIMORE. 12th November 1913.

Nuisance caused by collection of large crowds for theatres, when actionable.

This was an appeal from a decision of Joyce, J. The Plaintiffs owned a tea-shop near a theatre. In order to get into the theatre for unreserved seats persons formed themselves into a queue, a long time before the performance. The Plaintiffs alleged that it was a nuisance and caused them loss of custom and the Court below so held. The appeal was dismissed, Lord Justice Phillimore dissenting. In the course of his judgment the Master of the Rolls said.

It was said by the Appellants that they were not answerable for what went on in the streets, because it was the duty of the police to keep the streets clear; and they also said that the persons forming the queues were not there on their invitation, because their only invitation was for the public to come into their theatre when the doors were opened. It was, they suggested, unreasonable that they should be made liable without having issued any invitation to people to obstruct the highway. His Lordship said he had no intention of going through the ancient authorities on the point of law involved, all of which had been fully discussed in Barber v. Penley, (1893) 2 Ch. 447. He was quite content to take as the law what was said by Lord Bairns in Inchbald v. Robinson (L. R., 4 Ch., at p. 390): —"There are authorities to show that the collecting of crowds immediately before a residence, so as to block up the approaches to it, might be a nuisance, and that if the collection of these crowds was to be attributed to the act of a particular individual, that individual might be restrained from the commission of that act." That was the law quite irrespective of any improper action by the person causing the crowds to collect. There were other authorities, where persons had been indicted because they had instituted attractions which caused a crowd to assemble. His Lordship thought it was impossible to find in favour of the Appellants here without overruling not only Barber v. Penley but other authorities as well. In Rex v. Carlile (6 Car. and P., 636), the law was clearly laid down as what was treated by Lord Cairns as plain law in 1869, and adopted by the Court of Appeal in the same case. The same view of the law had also been taken in Barber v. Penley and subsequent cases.

There was a further argument, which his Lordship said he failed to appreciate, that Barber v. Penley was a decision in favour of the present Appellants, because the Court refused to grant an injunction in that case on the ground that the police had done their duty. That was a case where the Plaintiff had complained that by reason of the performances of Charley's Aunt such crowds assembled that customers could not get into her premises. The learned Judge held that there was an actionable nuisance, but as the Plaintiff had by her affidavit in reply stated that since the action had begun the police had intervened and removed the nuisance, North J., did not grant an injunction, but showed his view of the matter by giving the Plaintiff the costs of the action. His Lordship said he was unable to see how the Appellants could escape liability in the present case by saying that it was the duty of the police to do whatever was necessary to prevent a nuisance.

LORD JUSTICE PHILLIMORE said people were not entitled to stop in the highway and stand still in it for more than a reasonable time, and the police had, at any rate in the metropolis, power to move them on. Instead of doing that the police had taken the reasonable course of forming people in queues outside places of entertainment and only allowing them to take up their stand on the terms that they should stand in a queue. The formation of these queues was said to form a nuisance, for which the owners of the Palladium were responsible, although they had only invited the people forming the queues to come to the theatre. The police had powers of control which they had exercised by insisting on the formation of a queue. Whether there ought always to have been a gap left opposite the Plaintiffs' premises was a matter for the police, and complaints as regarded the obstruction should have been made to the police. He disagreed with tho decision in Barber v. Penley although it was noticeable that in that case Mr. Justice North had hardly had the courage of his opinions, but had refused to grant an injunction because the police had so acted as to put an end to the nuisance. He also disagreed with Wagstaff v. Edision Bell Phonograph Corporation (10 T. L. R. 80), a case in which it was held that a shopkeeper could be restrained from exhibiting such attractive goods in his window as to cause a crowd to assemble and obstruct the entrance to his neighbour's premises. In his Lordship's opinion a shopkeeper was within his rights in so doing, and it was for the police to move on the crowds and prevent a nuisance. The present was an a fortiori case. There was actionable wrong on the part of the present Appellants.

IN THE MATTER OF AN ATTORNEY.

Proceedings of a Civil Court sanctioning prosecution under sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are of a Criminal nature for the purposes of special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

This was an application for special leave to appeal against an order of the Calcutta High Court whereby in a matter arising out of a Civil suit sanction was given to prosecute the Petitioner for an offence specified in sec. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The High Court at first issued a certificate to the effect that the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council under the provisions of sec. 39 of the Letters Patent. But it subsequently rescinded the certificate on the ground of its want of jurisdiction to grant the same.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C. (with him Sir William Garth) submitted that they were Civil and not Criminal proceedings under the law and decisions in India, and that the Petitioner was entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Their Lordships rejected the petition. The Lord Chancellor remarked that the proceeding was of a Criminal nature, and the grounds urged on behalf of the Petitioner did not satisfy the rule in Dillet's case.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before TEUNON, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3085 OF 1910. ABDUL KARIM AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. WAHED ALI BEPARI AND ANOTHER, Respondents. Heard, 5th February. Judgment, 20th February 1914.

Merger—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 111 (d)—Lease created before passing of the Act—Vesting subsequent to the passing of the Act—Merger, doctrine of, before the passing of the Act—Intention.

The appeal was by the Plaintiff in a suit brought for recovery of khas possession of the lands comprised in a certain under-tenure on the ground that the under-tenure had been annulled by appropriate proceedings under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In a certain putni taluk a ⅔rd share was held by one R and by a series of devolutions the owner thereof was one D. Under this ⅔rd share of the putni were created 3 sikmi aluks of which one representing a moiety of the ⅔rd share came to be held by A. At a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent against A, D, father and predecessor-in interest of J, purchased the sikmi on the 9th August 1905, and after proceedings for the annulment of encumbrances, the son, D, sold the same to the Plaintiff. Plaintiff next sold the moiety of the sikmi to Defendant No. 3 and sought to recover khas possession in proportion to the second moiety jointly with him and the other two Defendants who were the owners of the 2nd and 3rd sikmis (each of 4 annas) representing the second half of the putni.

The case of the Defendants 1 and 2 was that the second moiety of the 8 anna sikmi of which Plaintiff sought khas possession was held by them on a howla tenure created by A's predecessor-in-interest on the 16th Assin 1276. They denied that this howla had been annulled and further said that on the 9th August 1905, on the purchase of the 8 anna sikmi, the sikmi and the superior or taluki interest vested in one and the same person, that is, D's predecessor and that therefore by reason of the doctrine of merger as embodied in sec. 111 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, the sikmi lease was determined, and consequently by his purchase from D of that interest on the 24th April 1907 the Plaintiff obtained nothing.

The Plaintiff succeeded in the Court of first instance, but on appeal, the second contention of the Defendant was upheld and the Plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

Held, that sec. 111, cl. (d) is applicable to leases

[illegible] prior to the passing of the Transfer of [illegible] Act when the vesting of the superior [illegible]hold interests in one and the same person [illegible] subsequently to the passing of the said Act [illegible] the doctrine of merger applied in [illegible] ——.

Prior to the Transfer of Property Act, the doctrine of merger did not apply to property in the mofussil. In any case if it did apply the Courts here as in England would have to be guided by the intention and in the present case the conduct of the lessor might be taken as showing that merger was not intended.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARNDUFF, AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE Nos. 837, 838 AND 840 OF 1911. RANI HEMANTA KUMARI DEVI, Plaintiff, Appellant v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents Heard, 16th February Judgment, 25th February 1914.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Arts 142, 144—Right to fish in a pond left by river shifting in its course.

These appeals were against the dismissal by the District Judge of Dacca of three suits brought by the Appellants against the Secretary of State and others for a declaration of their right to fish in a certain doba or back water of the Brahmaputra river, and for recovery of possession of the same.

The doba was situated in what was formerly the bed of the river. The Appellant's case was that the fishery in this part of the Brahmaputra was settled with them as Jal Hatna by the Government, and that in 1897 the river, by reason of the great earthquake of that year, suddenly changed its course and left the doba. In 1901 the Respondents, who were the lessees of an adjoining khas mahal, refused to allow them to exercise their rights in the doba, and these suits were in consequence instituted.

The first Court decreed the suit. It was found by that Court—and that finding was not displaced—that the doba was connected throughout the year with the new channel in which the Brahmaputra flowed. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suits as being barred by Art. 142 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act, the Appellants having failed to show that they had exercised their rights in the doba within 12 years of suing. It was admitted that they never fished in the doba since it was formed.

Held, "where a river shifts its course, leaving dobas in its old bed, the grantee of the exclusive right of fishery in the river retains his right over such dobas so long as the latter remain in communication with the main channel at all seasons of the year."

Bhaba Prasad v. Jagadindra Nath Rai, (1905) I L R 33 Cal. 15, followed.

Hence so long as the Appellants had been fishing in the new channel they could not be said to have ceased to be in possession of the doba and, if they exercised their rights in the channel within the period of limitation, Art. 142, (even if it be applicable at all where the matter in dispute was an interest in immoveable property) was no bar to these suits. In such circumstances, the plea of limitation could prevail only if the Respondents could show that they held adverse possession of the doba portion of the fishery for more than 12 years, or in other words, that they prevented the Appellants, not since 1901, as the latter alleged, but for 12 years before the 29th June 1907 from fishing in the doba. That is to say, the Respondents must rely on Art. 144 and the onus was on them, and not on the Appellants.

KUAR DURGA PARSHAD, Respondent.

Will, natural in its terms—Presumption in favour of genuineness—Attestation by servants and dependants only, if discredits such Will—Evidence that men of testator's position sign blank vakalatnamas if admissible to question genuineness of Will—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 468—Appellate Court, taking of evidence to discredit a witness without giving him opportunity to explain, propriety.

Where the Will challenged is in every respect a natural Will and in accord with the feelings and tenor of life of the testator, and its execution is proved by anything like reasonable evidence, the presumptions of law are in favour of its being maintained.

In the case of a Will, reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of documents which are unnatural, unreasonable or tinged with impropriety.

Comment, therefore, with reference to such a Will, that the witnesses to the Will might have been of a better class and persons other than servants that the testator had about him, had no force unless something showing much higher than mere suspicion was established, viz., proof which would thoroughly satisfy the mind of a Court that these persons had committed both forgery and perjury.

CHOTEYNARAIN SINGH v. RATAN KOER (1) referred to.

Blank forms and sheets signed for the purpose of vakalatnamas by people other than the testator and with whom he had nothing to do were not relevant to prove that the testator also was in the habit of signing similar blank sheets and that the Will was written after his death on one such form.

Where on appeal the Appellate Court admitted fresh evidence to prove that on a date on which a witness deposed to having attested the Will he was elsewhere and could not have attended on the testator and the witness, who had not been asked anything in the original Court on this point, and whose evidence was otherwise unimpeachable, was disbelieved by the Appellate Court without being given an opportunity to offer any explanation of the matter by the Appellate Court:

Held—That the procedure was illegal and no witness, whatever his standing, would be safe from adverse judicial comment under such procedure.

This is an Appeal from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh, Mr. W. Tudball and Mr. E. Chamier.

The material facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment. The Will, dated the 21st October 1904, was not registered till forty days after the testator's death. The Appellants' case was that on the 20th April 1905 the testator got the Will attested by Chowdhri Nasarat Ali at Sandila. The Plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that the said Will was a forgery. He alleged that although the signature of the testator on the Will was genuine, the Will was nevertheless a forgery and that it was concocted with the help of the attesting witnesses. He suggested that a man in the testator's position would be accustomed to sign blank forms and blank sheets for the purpose of vakalatnamas being drawn up thereon for use in cases in the subordinate district Courts by his Agents.

To prove that this was not an unheard-of thing, the Plaintiff produced, at the hearing, a number of blank forms signed by one Syed Fazal Husain, a deceased talukdar of Sandila. The Subordinate Judge believed the attesting witnesses and found for the Will. On appeal during the argument it was discovered that Chowdhri Nasrat Ali was present at a meeting of the Municipal Board of Lucknow on the 20th April 1905 at a time when, according to his deposition, he attested the Will at Sandila. The Judicial Commissioners allowed the Plaintiff to call witnesses to prove this fact and to this no objection was taken by the Defendant. Chowdhri Nasrat Ali, however, was not called and no explanation was offered on his behalf. The Judicial Commissioners disbelieved Chowdhri Nasrat Ali and the other witnesses.

The principal judgment of the Court was written by Mr. W. Tudball, the Second Additional Judicial Commissioner, who, after a full examination of the evidence on the record, concluded his judgment as follows:—

"The burden of proof was upon the Defendants to prove this Will. In my opinion the evidence put forward by them cannot be trusted and they have utterly failed to discharge the burden which lay upon them. The lower Court, in my opinion, has not given the evidence its true value but has slurred over the points which were against it. In the place of good reliable evidence we have discrepant, suspicious evidence, some of which, to say the least, lies on the margin of perjury, even if it does not clearly overstep it. I therefore hold the Will not proved."

Mr. E. Chamier, the Judicial Commissioner, concurred entirely with his colleague and also delivered a separate judgment, in the course of which he observed:—

"As my learned colleague has shewn, the Will presents every circumstance of suspicion, and the evidence of the witnesses Bajrang Bali, Ganga Parshad, Khuda Bakhsh and Suraj Bakhsh, though they were well-drilled, is most unsatisfactory. Their story that Narindra Bahadur went out of his way to let them know the contents of the Will and then bound them over to secrecy, and that they never said a word to anyone about the Will till Narindra Bahadur died is incredible. The Defendants seem to have felt that the evidence of these men would not be sufficient. Their sheet anchor was Nasrat Ali. I can only account for the Subordinate Judge's estimate of the evidence of this witness by supposing that he was carried away or overawed by the long list of honours and distinctions enjoyed by this witness which are paraded at the beginning of his deposition. The witness for many years, indeed up to the time when he gave his evidence in this case, held an honourable position, and was primâ facie entitled to credit, but I agree with my learned colleague that it is impossible to accept his evidence. His statement that he visited Narindra Bahadur at Sandila on April 20th, 1905, found Narindra Bahadur then suffering from a carbuncle and sat with him all day, has been shown to be false. It was suggested that he made a mistake in the date. A man performing the solemn act of attesting a Will would probably not make a mistake about the date. At the most he might put 20th for 21st, but he could not put 20th for 15th or 30th, nor could he give the wrong month. The evidence on the record of the Court below established conclusively the falsity of the statement of Nasrat Ali that he attested the Will on or even about April 20th. The evidence admitted here shows only that he was on that date in Lucknow, and cannot have travelled by the morning train to Sandila. It was said that he is a man of means and has no object in giving false evidence. But his cross examination shows that his claim to be considered a rich man is unfounded. It may be conceded that the affair of the notes purchased by his cousin Khaslat Husain is rather ancient history, but the witness's persistent denial of all knowledge or recollection of it till the letters were produced is plainly false. In my opinion the evidence of Nasrat Ali should be rejected altogether."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. A. Jackson for the Appellant submitted that the decision of the Subordinate Judge who had heard and seen the witnesses to the Will was right. The Judicial Commissioners were wrong in rejecting the positive evidence of the attesting witnesses who were trustworthy servants of the testator. Mere suspicion was not enough to prevail against positive evidence. Reference was made to Choteynarain Singh v. Ratan Koer (1). The propounders of the Will had discharged the burden of proving the execution of the Will and the burden had shifted to the Plaintiff and it was for him to show that the Will was a forgery. It was submitted that the blank forms signed by Syed Fazal Husain ought not to have been admitted in evidence. As regards Chowdhri Nasrat Ali, it was submitted that his evidence was trustworthy and that, in any case, the Judicial Commissioners ought to have given him an opportunity of explaining the inaccuracy (if any). Under sec. 568 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1882, the additional evidence called by the Judicial Commissioners was not admissible.

Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C., and Mr. Bhagwandin Dube for the Respondent submitted that the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners was right. The onus was upon the propounder of the Will to satisfy the Court beyond a reasonable doubt that it was a genuine Will. The Defendant had failed to discharge the burden. The additional evidence was admitted by the Judicial Commissioners without any opposition on the part of the Defendants and if they had no explanation to give they could have asked the Court to call Chowdhri Nasrat Ali. The point for determination was a pure question of fact and, the Courts having differed on what were not the same materials for decision, the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners ought not to be reversed unless the Appellants satisfied their Lordships that it was wrong. Reference was made to Jagannath Pershad v. Hanuman Pershad (2)

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 11th January 1909. This partly affirmed and partly reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 4th February 1908, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi.

The only question raised at the Bar of the Board was whether a will executed on the 21 October 1904 by one Kuar Narindra Bahadur is or is not a genuine Will.

Its provisions are substantially these: That after his death his widow should be proprietor of his estate in the Kheri District, and should have absolute power over the estate in the Hardoi District and hold proprietary possession over all his estate. By the third clause of the Will it was provided that after her death "Raj Bahadur, my sister's son, shall be the absolute owner of all my property moveable and immoveable, of every description." Other provisions, including certain annuities to the testator's brother-in-law, occur in the Will.

Ex facie it was duly executed and properly attested, and the witnesses are, first, his diwan, or general agent; secondly, a servant, who appears to have had charge of the wardrobe and a certain power of supervision, including that of making purchases; and lastly, his treasurer, or confidential clerk. In the words of the Subordinate Judge,—

"The scribe of the Will is the mukhtar, and the three attesting witnesses are the diwan, the treasurer, and the daroga of late Kuar Narindra Bahadur, who were his respectable private servants, and used to be always in the house, as is the case with Indian gentlemen in the position of the Kuar."

The domestic position of the testator and the parties was this: Durga Pershad, the Respondent, was remotely related to the testator Narindra, and for years had been on terms of enmity with him. Details of this are given, as, for instance, that they had not been on "eating and visiting terms," and that there "used to be no exchange of presents during marriages." Both the Courts below are clear upon the subject, the Judicial Commissioner's opinion being so strong as this, that "the ill-feeling, however, which existed between the two men was quite sufficient to cause Narindra Bahadur to desire that his property should not go to the Plaintiff or his branch of the family."

On the other hand, the Appellant, the testator's sister's son, was treated with regard and affection by the testator and, upon this subject also both Courts have no doubt. In the language of the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner:—

"In respect of the feelings which existed in Narindra Bahadur's mind towards the Defendant, Raj Bahadur, there can also be but little doubt . . . . Narindra Bahadur treated his sister's son as if he were his own son in every way . . . . . This feeling of affection towards his sister's son by a childless Hindu is fairly common; and, after full consideration of the evidence on the point, I have no hesitation in holding that Narindra Bahadur did look upon Defendant No. 2 more or less in the light of a son. It would, therefore, not have been a matter for surprise if he had made a Will benefiting the latter."

This being the state of the relations of the parties to the testator, it stands conceded that the Will now challenged was in every respect a natural Will, and in accord with his feelings and tenour of life. Granted, therefore, that its execution is proved by anything like reasonable evidence, the presumptions of law are in favour of its being maintained. The Subordinate Judge, after a close analysis of all the evidence, affirms its validity, and that without hesitation. Every kind of challenge was made of it,—of its execution, of the status of the witnesses, of the health of the testator, and so on. But at the end of a long litigation upon the subject it was admitted by Mr. Ross, the learned

MUSAMMAT JAGRANI KOER v. KUAR DURGA PARSHAD.

Counsel for the Respondent, in his clear and candid argument at their Lordships' Bar, that the signature was genuine, nor could he venture to disturb what he admitted were concurrent findings on the subject of the Appellant's position in the testator's household being equal to that of a son, nor upon the point of the estrangement between the testator and the Respondent.

This makes an end of a considerable portion of the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, which treats the signature as suspect. The grounds of suspicion which that Court, notwithstanding its view as to the complete propriety and naturalness of the Will itself, nevertheless attaches to the execution, are three-fold.

1. In the first place, it is maintained that the witnesses might have been of a better class. Perhaps they might; but they were just those witnesses that the testator had about him; and a comment of this character has no force except upon something on a much higher level than mere suspicion, viz, proof which would thoroughly satisfy the mind of a Court that these persons had committed both forgery and perjury. In the case of a Will reasonable, natural and proper in its terms, it is not in accordance with sound rules of construction to apply to it those canons which demand a rigorous scrutiny of documents of which the opposite can be said, namely, that they are unnatural, unreasonable, or tinged with impropriety. Their Lordships venture to repeat the judgment of Lord Watson in Choteynarain Singh v. Ratan Koer (1) bearing upon the point of an attestation by a person's own servants and dependants. As has been shown, the execution of this Will was not only not improbable, but was in fact probable. The words of Lord Watson apply to this case, therefore, a fortiori:—

"The theory of improbability remains to be considered; and the first observation which their Lordships have to make is, that, in order to prevail against such evidence as has been adduced by the Respondent in this case, an improbability must be clear and cogent. It must approach very nearly to, if it does not altogether constitute, an impossibility. To give effect to the argument pressed upon this Board by the Appellants, which seems to have found favour in the Court of First Instance, would be equivalent to holding that the Will of a Hindu gentleman, attested by his own servants and dependants, must be held to be invalid, unless it is shown that the testator, at the time assigned for its execution, was placed in such circumstances that he could not secure the attendance of persons of a higher rank. That is a proposition which verges too closely on the absurd to be seriously entertained. There may be cases in which attestation by servants only is an important element to be taken into account in considering whether a Will has been validly executed—cases, for example, in which there is reasonable ground for suspicion that the Will is not the voluntary act of the testator, but has been procured by the undue influence of members of his household. This case does not, in the opinion of their Lordships, belong to that class."

This point, however, is at an end because the execution and attestation are proved.

2. The second ground of suspicion in the minds of the Judicial Commissioners was that the paper upon which the Will was written appeared to be old instead of fresh, and proof was given that the paper was official paper in general use, together with evidence that some other people had been in the habit of having forms or sheets which they signed in blank. In the language of the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner:—

"That men of the deceased's position in life do sign blank forms and blank sheets, especially for the purpose of Vakalatnamas being drawn up thereon for use in cases in the subordinate District Courts, is not an unheard-of thing."

Various forms were produced, signed by people other than the testator, and with none of which the testator had anything to do. In their Lordships' opinion, such evidence should not have been allowed to influence the mind of a Court. It should not have been admitted, as it was not relevant to the present cause.

3. The third matter appears, however, to their Lordships to be more serious. By sec. 568 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that if "the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced, or any witness to be examined, to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence to be produced or document to be received or witness to be examined." In the course of the hearing of this Appeal by the Judicial Commissioners, a question was asked as to the additional attestation of the Will, which bore to have been made on the 20th April 1905 (that is, on a date about six months after execution) by Mohammed Nusrat Ali. This gentleman appears from the Record to be a person of standing, the judgment mentioning that he is the Honorary Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the British Indian Association. He is also a member of the Municipal Board of Lucknow, Lucknow being thirty miles by train from Sandila, where the Will was ordered to be registered. On this date, 20th April, a meeting of the Municipal Board had been held, followed by a special meeting, both meetings being early in the day and being of some duration. Enquiry was made, and it was proved before the Judicial Commissioners that Nusrat Ali was present at these meetings. If this was so, then, it was argued, he could not at the same hours of the 20th April have been in Sandila.

Nusrat Ali had been examined before the Subordinate Judge, but nothing had been asked of him on the point, and he was not examined by or before the Judicial Commissioners. Their Lordships disapprove of the procedure which has permitted doubt to be thrown upon his evidence in the course of procedure taken on appeal by the Judicial Commissioners, "to enable them to pronounce judgment," without the witness whose testimony is impugned having been afforded the opportunity of clearing up the mistake and having been convened for that purpose. No witness, whatever his standing, would be safe from adverse judicial comment under such procedure. I may quite well be that Nusrat Ali could have clearly explained the whole point of difficulty, and their Lordships would be slow to conclude, in the absence of his own evidence on the point, that the rest of his testimony, otherwise quite unimpeachable, was perjury.

Fortunately, there is no necessity for further procedure or expense in regard to the matter, for the case that the Board is now dealing with is a case in which the signature of the Will, whether the deed was additionally attested on the date stated or not, is proved and is properly attested. In these circumstances their Lordships do not doubt that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be restored.

They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to that effect. The Respondent will pay to the Appellant the costs of this Appeal, and in the Courts below.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 319 OF 1911.

Judgment,
26, August.

SARAT CHANDRA BASACK, Petitioner, Appellant,
v.
GOLAP SUNDARI DASYA, Objector, Respondent.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), secs. 19, 24, 57—Letters of Administration with Will annexed—"Will" in sec. 19, if means original document—Existence of Will up to testator's death if necessary to be proved—Revocation, pleading and proof of—Presumption of destruction of Will, when arises—Loss of Will if operates as revocation—Destruction of Will when operates as revocation—Sec. 24—"Since the testator's death," scope and effect of—Delay in applying for Letters of Administration with Will annexed.

Where the testator did not appoint an executor and the residuary legatee applied for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed 12 years after the death of the testator and the objector did not plead revocation but set up non-execution of the will.

Held—That the execution of the Will in the manner required by law having been proved it lay upon the objector to plead and prove revocation and no such plea having been taken it could not be held that the Will was revoked.

Per RAY, J.—That the application for Letters of Administration was not liable to dismissal on the ground that the Petitioner did not prove that the Will was in existence up to the time of the testator's death.

That in sec. 19 of the Probate and Administration Act the word "Will" does not mean the original document but has been obviously used to mean the disposition.

When a Will is shown to have been in the custody of the testator and is not found at his death the well-known presumption arises that the Will has been destroyed by the testator for the purpose of revoking it. This rule of law bears only on revocation when it is an issue in the suit and then the presumption may be rebutted by the facts.

The loss of a Will does not operate as revocation to establish which destruction of the Will by the testator must be shown.

In sec. 24 of the Probate and Administration Act the words "since the testator's death" qualify the word "mislaid" and have no reference to the word "lost" or to the succeeding clause of the sentence.

The delay in making the application under sec. 19 was not a material fact in this case.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th of August 1911, agains the decree of Moulvi Ali Ahmed, Officiating Additional District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 23rd of June 1911.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—

The Appellant, who was the Petitioner in the lower Court, presented an application for probate of a Will of one Tokani Basak dated 18th November 1897. The Will was registered on the same day. The testator died on the 6th Sraban 1305, corresponding to 21st July 1898, leaving behind him a daughter Golap Sundari and nephews, Sarat Chandra Basak who was the Petitioner, Ruidas Basak and others. The present petition for probate was filed by Sarat Chandra Basak as a legatee under the Will for Letters of Administration on the 21st January 1911. The original Will not being forthcoming a certified copy of the Will was filed with the petition. In this petition it is stated that the original Will was with Golap Sundari Dassya and she was requested to produce the original in Court. To this petition the Respondent Golap Sundari objected on various grounds stating that she was not aware of any Will having been executed by the testator and no Will was in her possession. She did not state in her petition of objection that although the testator made a Will it was subsequently destroyed by him with the intention of revoking it. The lower Court refused probate on the ground that the Petitioner did not discharge the onus of proving that the Will existed up to the time of testator's death.

The Petitioner preferred this Appeal.

Babu Bhudeb Chandra Ray for the Appellant.—The lower Court is wrong in holding that before probate can be granted it must be shown by the applicant that the Will existed up to the death of the testator without being revoked. The objectrix does not say that there was a Will but it was subsequently revoked. That is not her case. Her case is that no Will was executed. Here there is no doubt that the Will was executed and registered. I say that the original Will is in possession of the objectrix and is to be found in the chest which the testator left, the key of which is with the objectrix but she does not say that she made a search for it there and could not find it. On the other hand her husband deposes that no search was made for the Will. Under these circumstances the legal presumption that a Will which is not forthcoming was destroyed by the testator animo revocandi does not arise. Finch v. Finch (6). Once it is proved that there was a Will, and there is no evidence that it was destroyed by the testator animo revocandi, revocation must be pleaded and proved by the other side. The onus is on the other side to prove this. Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards (1), Benson v. Benson (7), Sib Sabitri v. Collector of Meerut (4), Saheb Mirza v. Umda Khanam (8), Anwar Hossein v. Secretary of State (3).

(6) (1867) 1 P. & D. 371.

Babu Biswanath Bose for the Respondent.—I submit that as the original Will is not forthcoming it must be proved by the other side that the Will was not revoked by the testator and in such cases the legal presumption of revocation from the loss of the Will does arise. Refers to secs. 24 and 19, Probate and Administration Act. The onus is on the applicant to satisfy that this is the last disposition by the testator and the applicant not having done that the application was rightly refused.

C. A V.

COXE, J.—This Appeal arises out of an application for probate or Letters of Administration (the applicant seems not quite certain which) with respect to a Will said to have been executed on the 18th November 1897. The learned District Judge has refused the application on two grounds, namely, that the applicant has not proved, firstly, that the Will was in existence at the death of the testator, and, secondly, that it was duly executed. The facts in this case seem to me to indicate very strongly that this Will was not in existence at the time of the testator's death. He died in July 1898, eight months after the Will. The petition itself shows that he changed his mind with regard to an important portion of the property. In the Will he devoted a deposit of Rs. 200 in the Savings Bank to the service of a certain idol and directed that the Petitioner and the husband of the objector should draw the interest and spend it on the sheba. But it appears from para. 8 of the petition that the testator drew out the whole sum before his death and handed it over to the objector's husband. This shows that with regard to at least a quarter of the whole property the testator had completely changed his mind. Finally the Petitioner's conduct suggests very strongly to my mind that he knew that the Will had in some manner come to an end It is not uncommon in a case of this nature for the Will to be made over to and kept by the person for whose benefit it is executed. Here the Petitioner's whole title is based upon the Will, yet not only did he not keep the Will himself but he does not say that he ever took any steps to obtain it or even see it after the testator's death. He was entitled under the Will to a quarter of the moveable property, but apparently he has never attempted to secure it. This application was presented 12 years after the testator's death when everybody had forgotten all about the circumstances of the case, and it looks to me very like a speculation.

If the objector had been frank and truthful about the matter and had admitted the execution but pleaded revocation I could not have agreed with the view of my brother Ray that Letters of Administration should be granted. The objector however takes up the impossible attitude that this Will, which is a registered Will, was never executed and therefore he does not plead revocation. That being so, it is difficult for me to hold that the Will has been revoked, when that plea has not been taken, and I therefore will not dissent from the decision of my learned colleague. The Appeal will be allowed and Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed will be granted. Costs of all Courts to be paid out of the estate.

Hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

RAY, J.—This suit is for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed under sec. 19 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. The Will is dated the 18th November 1897. Tekari Barak is said to have made the Will. . The Petitioner is brother's son of Tekari and the objector is his daughter. The Will purports to give half his immoveable property to the Petitioner and half to the objector. If there was no Will, the whole of the property would go to the objector and after her to her sons, if she should have any surviving her. The Will was duly registered and upon reading the evidence I am clearly of opinion that its proper execution has been established. Tekari died on the 6th of Sravan 1305—July 1898. The evidence is that Tekari kept the Will in his box. The objector's husband says that Tekari had an iron safe. This iron safe has been called a box by the Petitioner. This safe was in Tekari's room and the key remained with him. The key of the room also remained with Tekari and the husband of the objector says that after his death probably it went into the possession of his wife, i.e., the objector. As to the key of the iron safe his evidence is this. "The key of the iron chest was with my father-in-law." It came to the hands of my wife after his death." The objector in her written statement denies being in possession of the Will but her husband has given evidence that they have not opened the iron chest and have not searched for the Will. On these facts the suit is not liable to dismissal on the ground that the Petitioner has not proved that the Will was in existence up to the time of the testator's death. There has been a misconception of the law on the subject. In this case the testator did not appoint an executor, so the application is necessarily under sec. 19 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. That section provides when the deceased has made a Will, but has not appointed an executor, or etc., etc., an universal or a residuary legatee may be admitted to prove the Will, and Letters of Administration with the Will annexed may be granted to him, etc., etc. It cannot be said that "Will" must be the original document. The word has been obviously used to mean the disposition. Otherwise in no case where the Will is not in existence the universal or residuary legatee can apply. He cannot do it even if he proves tha an interested party has destroyed it after the death of the testator. That cannot be the law. Hence I think nothing turns upon the fact that in the previous sec. 18, there is mention of a copy of the Will. This sec. 19 does not lay down any rules for the guidance of the Court in determining when the Will is established. The execution of the Will in the manner required by law having been proved, it lay upon the objector to plead and prove revocation. She has not even pleaded revocation. All that she says in her written statement is that she is not aware of any Will having been executed by her father. Her husband says in his evidence that Tokani did not execute any Will. That being so, the revocation of the Will is not a question in this suit. When a Will is shewn to have been in the custody of a testator, and is not found at his death, the well-known presumption arises that the Will has been destroyed by the testator for the purpose of revoking it. Now this rule of law bears only on revocation when that is an issue in the suit. Then the presumption may be rebutted by the facts, Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards (1). In the case of Brown v. Brown (2), Lord Campbell observes:—If, for instance, it could be shewn that the heir-at-law had access to the place where the testator had deposited the Will, and grounds could be shown for a suspicion that he had destroyed it, it would be a case to consider. These rules of English law are founded on reason and good sense and are regarded as of general application. The Courts in India have adopted these rules and have applied them to cases arising under the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. Anwar Hossein v. Secretary of State for India (3), Shib Sabitri Prasad v. The Collector of Meerut (4), Ishur Chandra Sarma v. Dayamoyi Debia (5). This last case was for Letters of Administration with Will annexed and the application was by a residuary legatee. The Will was not produced and it was stated to be in the possession of the objector as in the present case. The Court observed—If the Will is not shown to be in existence, then the Court will have to consider whether it had been destroyed by the testator, or by his orders with the intention of revoking it. SARAT CHANDRA BASACK v. GOLAP SUNDARI DASYA.

Act runs thus: When the Will has been lost or mislaid since the testator's death, or has been destroyed by wrong or accident and not by any act of the testator, etc., etc. It appears to me that the words 'since the testator's death' qualify only the verb 'mislaid.' They have no reference to the word 'lost', otherwise, what would happen if the Will has been lost before the testator's death? The loss of the Will would not operate as revocation—vide sec. 57. To establish revocation you must show destruction by the testator. Loss is no destruction. Then the words 'since the testator's death' have no reference to the succeeding clause of the sentence. The Will could not have been destroyed by any act of the testator since his death. The second clause is independent by itself. Then the words in this clause "and not by any act of the testator" have no special meaning. For, if the Will has been destroyed by any act of the testator, it has been revoked and and it is a dead thing. In the succeeding section the words used are "when the Will has been lost or destroyed, etc., etc." The former section refers to cases when a copy of the Will is available and the latter when no copy is available. This is the only difference. In neither of these sections any rule of law has been laid down and none tending to defeat the applicant's suit. Revocation must be proved by the party who sets it up. The facts proved and admitted preclude a presumption in favour of the objector and there is no evidence that the Will has been actually destroyed. The Petitioner has established his right to the Letters of Administration. The delay in making this application is not a material fact in this case. No sooner the objector attached his half share in the immoveable property he put in this application for Letters of Administration. I would reverse the judgment of the learned District Judge and decree the Appeal.

Appeal decreed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 320 OF 1908.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1912, Heard, 2, December. Judgment, 3, December.	JOGESH CHANDRA RAY, Claimant, Appellant, v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Defendant, Respondent.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)—Noabad Mehal property, acquisition, of—Apportionment of compensation between Government and claimant—Basis of calculation of value of Government interest—Chance of enhancement of rent, value of.

A Noabad Mehal held under Government implies a hereditary and transferable title in perpetuity subject to payment of rent for all lands under cultivation.

Where certain properties included in a Noabad Mehal held under the Government were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act:

Held—That the mere fact that the rent was enhancible did not justify the Court awarding half the compensation money to Government, as Government would not in ordinary course increase the assessment unless the assets of the property also increased.

That the interest of the Government ought to be measured by capitalising the present rent at 30 years' purchase.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 13th of July 1908 against a decree of B. K. Mullick, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 2nd of April 1908.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Dhirendra Lal Kastgir for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the claimant in a case under the Land Acquisition Act. The property acquired is known as Lanes Hill and the substantial controversy between the parties at the present stage relates to two matters, namely, first, the valuation of what is described as hill top and high flat lands; and, secondly, the apportionment of the compensation between the claimant and the Government, as a considerable portion of the property under acquisition is included in a Noabad Mehal held by the claimant under the Government.

In so far as the value of the hill top and high flat land is concerned, the award made by the Judge in affirmance of the award of the Collector is at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per kani. The materials placed before the Court to determine the market value are of two descriptions, namely, first, evidence of the rent payable and, secondly, evidence of land acquisition awards made in respect of similar property in the locality. The first class of evidence relates to what has been described as Good's Hill. This property was held in lease by Mr. Good for a period of 22 years at the rent of Rs. 67-12 per month and the Court below has passed its award on the assumption that this indicated fairly the award of rent payable in respect of that property. It has been pointed out to us, however, that the property was subsequently let out to Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., at a much higher rate, namely, Rs. 130 per month. But it is worthy of note that Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co. took a lease of the property in 1905, that is, nearly two years after the declaration had been made for the acquisition of the present property. The claimant cannot consequently contend that the present rent furnishes a conclusive test as to the market value of the property at the date of acquisition. But even if we assume that the fair rent at that time was the average of the rent paid by Mr. Good and the rent now paid by Messrs. Turner Morrison & Co., that is to say, approximately Rs. 100 a month, it is clear that the value of the property should be assessed at about Rs. 15,00 a kani. Here, then, is some indication that the value assessed by the Court below is too low. This view is confirmed when we consider the second class of evidence on the record, namely, that derivable from the award made in respect of Parsonage Hill. With regard to this hill, it has been pointed out that the award was made at the rate of Rs. 1,364 per kani. No doubt there is some evidence to indicate that the hill now acquired is not as conveniently situated for residential purposes as Parsonage Hill. But we are not prepared to hold that this circumstance alone would justify the reduction of the rate to Rs. 1,000 per kani, specially when we find that another hill in the neighbourhood, known as Tempest Hill, was valued at Rs. 1,300 per kani. In our opinion, taking the evidence as a whole, the hill top and high flat lands should be assessed at Rs. 1,350 instead of Rs. 1,000 per kani and we direct that the award be modified accordingly.

JOGESH CHANDRA RAY v, THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

In so far as the question of apportionment is concerned, it has been stated that the property acquired is situated in a Noabad Mehal held by the claimant under the Government A Noabad Mehal, it is well known, implies a hereditary and transferable title in perpetuity subject to payment of rent for all lands under cultivation. In so far as the taluk now in question is concerned, it has been pointed out that the rent has been nearly doubled in the course of about half a century: and the learned Government pleader has contended that it is possible that at the next settlement the rent will be still further enhanced. This, however, does not justify the apportionment made by the Court below. The learned Judge has divided the compensation equally between the Government and the claimant, on the ground that it has always been the practice to assess, in respect of Noabad properties in hill lands, the Government interest at half, allowing the surplus over the capitalized value of the rental to represent the chance of enhancement. This mode of apportionment is manifestly fallacious. Let it be assumed that the Government is entitled hereafter to enhance the rent: but there is no basis for the assumption that the net income of the property upon which the valuation must be based would remain constant during this period. On the other hand, it is reasonably clear that the Government would not in ordinary course increase the assessment unless the assets of the property also increased. In our opinion, the value of the interest of the Government ought to be measured by capitalising the rent now payable. The question next arises, how this capitalisation is to be effected. The learned Government pleader has invited our attention to a paragraph of the written statement of the claimant in which he admits that the rent ought to be capitalised on the basis of 20 to 25 years' purchase. We are of opinion, that in the case of Government, we may very well capitalise at 30 years' purchase, on the assumption that the rate of interest is three and a half per cent. per annum, which is the rate ordinarily payable upon Government securities. We therefore direct that the interest of the Government be valued at 30 times the present rental. This will be deducted from the amount awarded and the remainder will belong to the claimant. We may add that it has been mentioned that there are some inaccuracies in the judgment of the Court below in so far as the area of the land is concerned. The error in this respect is merely arithmetical and will be corrected when the decree in this Court is drawn up. If upon calculation it is found that the amount due to the claimant exceeds Rs. 5,000 the decree will be limited to that sum only, as Court-fees have been paid to that extent. Under the circumstances of this case we direct each party to pay his own costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 116 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.

Judgment,

SUPRASANNA ROY and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.

UPENDRA NARAIN ROY, Defendant, Respondent.

Receiver, appointment of—Partition suit—Defendant in sole occupation, though Plaintiff not altogether excluded—Court if may appoint a SUPRASANA ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

Receiver and when—Party to a suit when may be appointed.

The Court has jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver until the hearing of a partition action or until further orders, even though there is no exclusive occupation by any party, and the Court will not hesitate to do so whenever it is just and convenient. The case for the appointment of a Receiver is much stronger if a party to the partition action is in sole occupation. In such a case any other party may obtain a Receiver either of his share of the rents and profits or of the whole estate. The Court may also allow the party in exclusive occupation to elect to pay to the others an occupation rent, or the Court may require security from the co-owner in exclusive occupation to account for their share of the rents to the other co-owners.

Held—That in the circumstances of the present case the second of the four alternative courses, viz., appointment of a Receiver of the whole estate was the proper one to adopt.

One of the parties to a litigation should not ordinarily be appointed a Receiver except in very exceptional circumstances.

In the special circumstances of this case, the Defendant in possession was appointed Receiver of the whole estate subject to conditions.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 18th of March 1913 against the order of Babu Biraja Charan Mitra, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpore, dated the 12th of March 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Chackrabartty, Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy, Biraj Mohun Mojumdar and Anilendra Nath Roy Chowdhury for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Appeal is directed against an order by which the Court below has rejected an application by the Plaintiff in a partition suit for the appointment of a Receiver of the subject matter of the litigation. The Plaintiff and the Defendant are brothers and are the owners of joint properties of considerable value and extent. In 1902, after the death of their father, the Respondent, the eldest son, took out Letters of Administration of the estate with a copy of the Will annexed. He was at the same time appointed guardian of the person and property of his infant brother, the present Plaintiff, who went to England in 1906 and came back three years later. On his return, he demanded partition of the family estate, but met with refusal from his brother. Accordingly, the Plaintiff sued for partition in 1910 On the 22nd February 1910, a consent decree was made in the suit, under which the properties were to be divided and allotted to the two brothers. Arbitrators were appointed to make the division, but the partition was not carried out for reasons which need not be recited for our present purpose. On the 31 January 1912, the Plaintiff commenced this fresh action for partition either on the basis of the award of the arbitrators or irrespective of it. On the 22nd November he asked for the appointment of a Receiver pendente lite. This application has been refused by the Court below on four grounds; namely, first, that as the Plaintiff has from time to time received from his brother, who is in possession of the estate, various sums of money, it cannot be said that the Plaintiff has been kept out of possession of the joint estate; secondly, that under the circumstances of the case, the estate will be managed better by the Defendant than by a stranger as Receiver; thirdly, that the appointment of a stranger Receiver would mean imposition of a heavy burden upon the estate which is already encumbered to some extent; and, fourthly, that if the Plaintiff is not satisfied with the amount he has received from his brother, his obvious remedy is to move the District Judge to make an order for an increase of his allowance. In our opinion, these reasons do not justify a refusal of the application for the appointment of a Receiver.

Upon the facts stated, it is plain that the title of the Plaintiff to one-half share of the estate cannot be disputed. The Plaintiff has attained majority and is entitled to the enjoyment of his share. When the partition is effected, he will be entitled to take his share severally but so long as partition is not effected, he is clearly entitled to receive approximately one-half share of the net income of the estate. This aspect of the matter was not appreciated by the Court below, and as the Subordinate Judge has made an order which is manifestly erroneous, it is desirable to explain the principles applicable to a case of this description. At one time, it was held in England that as between legal co-owners of land, the Court of Chancery would not appoint a Receiver unless by consent, Ramsden v. Fairthorp (1), or unless the applicant was prevented from exercising his legal rights of entering into possession and sharing in the management, Millbank v. Revett (2) and Spratt v. Ahearne (3). In the same way, as between equitable co-owners, exclusive occupation by one owner, in the sense that he refuses to pay to his co-owners their proper share of the rents and profits, has always been deemed a good ground for the appointment of a Receiver. Tyson v. Fairclough (4). After the Judicature Act, however, it has been repeatedly held that the Court has jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver until the hearing of a partition action or until further order, even though there is no exclusive occupation by any party, and the Court will not hesitate to do so whenever it is just and convenient.' The case for the appointment of a Receiver is much stronger, if a party to the partition action is in sole occupation; in such a case, any other party may obtain a Receiver either of his share of the rents and profits or of the whole estate. Sandford v. Ballard (5), Sandford v. Ballard (6), Porter v. Lopes (7). The Court may also allow the party in exclusive occupation to elect to pay to the otners an occupation rent [Teasdale v. Sanderson (8)], or the Court may require security from the co-owner in exclusive occupation to account for their share of the rents to the other co-owners. [Street v. Anderson (9)]. Consequently, in cases of this description there are four alternative courses open: (1) the Court may require security from the person in sole occupation; (2) the Court may require him to pay occupation rent; (2) the Court may appoint a Receiver of the share of the Plaintiff; or (4) the Court may appoint a Receiver of the entire estate.

In the case before us, there is no room for controversy that a Receiver should be appointed in respect of the whole estate. The Plaintiff is, as already stated, the owner of one-half share of the estate. He has attained majority, is a married man and has a family to support. He is further engaged in this litigation and has to bear heavy expenses. If the Defendant is directed to furnish security, the order would be of no avail to the Plaintiff, and would not afford him immediate relief in the least degree. If the Defendant is directed to pay occupation rent, the Plaintiff would be entitled to claim one-half share of the income of the estate. But it would be difficult, if not impracticable, to carry out the order, because, the parties are hopelessly at variance as to the amount of the annual income which has been estimated at figures varying from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 50,000. If a Receiver is appointed in respect of the one-half share of the Plaintiff, there will obviously be an immediate conflict between the Receiver and the Defendant and the management of the estate will be completely paralysed. Under these circumstances, the only feasible and practicable course which can be adopted without detriment to the parties is to appoint a Receiver of the whole estate.

The next question for consideration is, who should be appointed Receiver. As pointed out by this Court in the case of Kali Kumari v. Bachhun Singh (10), one of the parties to a litigation should not ordinarily be appointed a Receiver and very exceptional circumstances must be established to justify the appointment of a party as Receiver. In our opinion, in the present case, such grounds have been made out. The appointment of a stranger would mean the imposition of a heavy burden upon the estate which is already encumbered; and it might also tend to dislocate the management. The Defendant, on the other hand, has offered to accept the appointment as Receiver, if the Court decides that a Receiver should be appointed. He has further agreed to bring into Court Rs. 10,000 within two weeks from this date, for payment to the Plaintiff; he has also consented to bring into Court Rs. 10,000 a year in four equal instalments for payment to the Plaintiff. In view of the offers thus made, we are of opinion that the Defendant may very well be appointed Receiver. We accordingly appoint him Receiver with effect from this date. His share of the joint estate in controversy will remain as security for the due performance of his duties as Receiver. He will bring into Court Rs. 10,000 within fourteen days from this date. As soon as the money is deposited in this Court, it will be paid out on the joint receipt of the Plaintiff and his trustees who are parties to the suit. No further order from the Court will be required in this behalf. As regards the sum of Rs. 10,000 which the Defendant undertakes to bring into Court annually in four equal instalments, we direct that the first instalment of Rs. 2,500 be deposited in this Court on or before the 31st October next. As soon as the money is deposited it will be paid out on the joint receipt of the Plaintiff and his trustees. The subsequent instalments of Rs. 2,500 each will similarly be deposited in this Court upon the expiration of every period of three months and will be similarly paid out to the Plaintiff and his trustees on their joint receipt. The Receiver will in all matters act under the direction of the Subordinate Judge. As regards the submission of accounts, we direct the Receiver to submit his accounts every three months in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. If the Receiver fails to deposit Rs. 10,000 as directed, or to deposit Rs. 2,500 every three months as ordered above, he will be discharged and the Subordinate Judge will proceed forthwith to appoint another person as Receiver. At the end of twelve months from this date, the parties will be at liberty to apply to this Court to vary this order as regards the annual payment of Rs. 10,000.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs of this Appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at five gold mohurs. Let the record be sent down at once so that the hearing of the suit may be expedited.

Appeal allowed.

SRIMATI RANI KESHABATI KUMARI and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XL, r. 1 (2)—Receiver, appointment of—Property in possession of Defendant, it may be taken over—Object of appointment.

Where the Plaintiff sued to recover property in the possession of his adoptive mother and the suit was resisted inter alia on the ground that the Defendant was entitled to retain possession of the estate for her life :

Held—That Or. XL, r. 1 (2), which clearly refers to a case of removal of property from the possession or custody of a person other than the parties to the suit, was no bar to the appointment of a Receiver on the application of Plaintiff when it was established that the estate was being grossly mismanaged by the Defendant.

The effect of the appointment of a Receiver would not be to prejudge the case in any way, as the only object and effect of so doing would be to maintain the estate in its present condition during the pendency of the suit.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 28th of November 1912 against the order of W. H. Thomson, Esq, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Sonthal Perganas, dated 16th of November 1912.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Dumka rejecting the Plaintiff's application for the appointment of a Receiver. The Plaintiff, who is still a minor, has by his next friend brought this suit for construction of a document purporting to be the Will of his father, Raja Udit Narain Singh ; for a declaration that two documents, dated 8th March 1898 and 14th August 1905, respectively, are void and inoperative so far as they purport to curtail the Plaintiff's rights and for possession of the properties left by his deceased father. The Plaintiff also asks for administration of his father's estate for the appointment of a Receiver and for an injunction restraining the Defendants from dealing with the estate. The Defendants are Rani Keshobati Kumari, widow of Raja Udit Narain Singh, Gajadhar Prosad Singh and Chundra Doyal Baram, whom Defendant No. 1 purported to appoint trustees by the deed of 14th August 1905 and Devsi Hirji, who has taken a lease of the forests on the estate from Defendant No. 1.

Raja Udit Narain Singh died on 10th April 1896. On 8th March 1898, his widow adopted the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff is now about 19 years of age. As the Plaintiff is under guardianship he will not attain majority until he is 21 years of age. The estate left by Raja Udit Narain is valued at about Rs. 26 lakhs. The net annual income is admittedly well over Rs. 1 lakh. The main grounds put forward by the Plaintiff for the appointment of a Receiver are: (1) that the Defendant No. 1 is a purdanashin lady of little education entirely incapable of managing the estate herself, (2) that the estate is in fact being grossly mismanaged by Defendant No. 1 in conjunction with the other Defendants, (3) that in particular Defendant No. 1 has granted to Defendant No. 4 a lease for cutting timber from the forest for railway sleepers, which is quite improvident and against the interests of the estate, and that (4) Defendant No. 1 has been and still is borrowing recklessly and at exorbitant rates of interest to such an extent as to endanger the estate. The Subordinate Judge has found that the case of mismanagement, particularly in the matter of the dismissal and subsequent re-employment of Mr. Falkner, has been made out against Defendant No. 1, that the charge of reckless borrowing at what he terms "illegal" interest, has been proved and that the whole situation is one of confusion. He, however, considers himself helpless by reason of certain rules of law which, in his opinion, prevent the Court from appointing a Receiver in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge is, we think, in error, in the view that he takes of the law. Or. XL, r. 1 (2), for instance, clearly refers to a case of removal of property from the possession or custody of a person other than the parties to the suit. Here one of the main questions in the case is whether the Plaintiff is entitled to immediate possession against Defendant No. 1 or whether she is entitled to retain possession for her life.

Nor is there any necessity to prejudge the case in any way by appointing a Receiver, the only object and effect of so doing should be to maintain the estate in its present condition pending the suit and for that period at any rate to avoid further waste.

We have carefully perused the evidence tendered on this application and heard the arguments of Counsel for Defendant No. 1 against the appointment of a Receiver. We are of opinion that a clear case has been made out for such appointment. There has been and still is gross mismanagement of the estate by Defendant No. 1 and if the present state of things be allowed to continue the whole estate will be jeopardised. It was argued that Defendant No. 1 had borrowed only on personal security and had not so far charged the estate. If, however, she borrows in such reckless fashion as to absorb the whole legitimate income of the estate it is obvious that the estate itself will immediately suffer. It cannot much longer be kept intact. We do not think that any useful purpose would be served by discussing in detail the facts disclosed in the several affidavits. No satisfactory reply has been vouchsafed by Defendant No. 1 or rather by those who profess to be looking after her affairs to the specific charges put forward on behalf of the Plaintiff. We accordingly allow this appeal and direct that a Receiver be appointed as prayed by the Plaintiff.

An application was made to the Vacation Bench by Defendant No. 1 for the transfer of this suit to the Original Side of this Court. That application was refused, mainly, as it was obviously made to obstruct or delay the present application for a Receiver. Further, it was considered unnecessary and inexpedient to remove it to this Court. Now, however, both sides agree that it would be well to transfer the case to another District, that the trial may be held before a Subordinate Judge of more experience. We agree in this view and order accordingly that the suit be transferred to the Court of the 1st Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur for disposal.

We think that it is advisable that this Court should nominate the Receiver at once and thus prevent further delay in this matter. Of the various names suggested that of Babu Murli Lal appears to us to be the most suitable. He is a wealthy man, resides in Bhagalpore and appears to be a good man of business. He is also willing to give the requisite security which in this case will be large. We accordingly appoint Babu Murli Lal as the Receiver in this case subject to his furnishing security to the extent of a lakh of rupees to the satisfaction of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore. We confer on the Receiver such powers as are contained in Or. XL, r. 1 (d) of the Code of Civil Procedure. We fix his remuneration at 10 per cent. on the gross collections, such percentage to cover all charges for collections, establishment and the Receiver's remuneration but not the costs of actual litigation. Costs of this Appeal must be costs in the case. We fix the hearing-fee at 10 gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 427 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 11, June, 1912 and 8, January, 1913, Judgment, 8, January.	SARANDHARI LAL, Decree-holder, Appellant, v. BIKRAM SINGH, Judgment-debtor, Respondent.

debtor applied on the 6th May 1907 for time to satisfy the decree. The judgment-debtor instituted a suit to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud and obtained on the 27th June 1907 an injunction restraining the decree-holder from further executing the decree and the Court recorded an order to the effect "that the case be dismissed, attachment subsisting;" the injunction was subsequently dissolved on 8th May 1908. On 18th October 1909, the decree-holder made a second application for execution by attachment and sale of moveables. To this the judgment-debtor objected on the 16th December that the execution was barred by limitation. The objection was overruled on 9th June 1910 and the decree-holder was called upon to take further steps but as the writ of attachment was returned unserved on the 18th June 1910 the case was dismissed for default and want of prosecution. On 4th July 1910, a third application was made for execution by attachment and sale of the identical lands mentioned in the first application of the 13th February 1907:

Held—That the application for execution of the 4th July 1910 was not barred by limitation under Art. 6, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the second application of 18th October 1909 could not rightly be treated as an abandonment of the relief claimed in the first application but was an application for additional relief, and the third application of the 4th July 1910 was in substance an application in continuation of the first application, the proceedings wherein were discontinued by reason of the injunction obtained by the judgment-debtor.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st August 1911 against an order of Babu Amrita Lal Palit, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Bhagalpur, dated the 26th of May 1911, reversing that of Babu Akhory Nityanund Singh, Munsif of that place, dated the 11th of February 1911.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Moulvie Khursed Husain for the Appellant.

Babu Laksmhi Narayan Singh for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the decree-holder in a proceeding for execution of an ex parte decree for rent. The question in controversy between the parties is, whether the present application for execution made on the 4th July 1910, is barred by limitation under Art. 6 of the third Schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The decree was obtained ex parte on the 16th July 1906. On the 18th August 1906, the Defendants applied under sec. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 to have the ex parte decree set aside. This application was refused on the 3rd January 1907. The decree-holder then applied for execution on the 13th February 1907 by the attachment and sale of specified lands. The judgment-debtors made an application on the 6th May 1907 for time to satisfy the decree. Meanwhile, they had instituted a suit to set aside the ex parte decree, on the ground of fraud, and, in the course of that litigation, they obtained, on the 27th June 1907, an injunction to restrain the decree-holders from further execution of the decree. The injunction was granted: the result was that further progress of the excution was arrested and the execution Court proceeded to record an order to the effect that the "case be dismissed, attachment subsisting." The injunction was subsequently dissolved on the 8th May 1908. On the SARANDHARI LAL v. BIKRAM SINGH.

7th October 1909, the decree-holders made a second application for execution by attachment and sale of moveables ; to this, the judgment-debtors objected on the 16th December that the execution was barred by limitation. On the 9th June 1910, the objection was overruled on the ground that limitation must be taken to run from the 6th May 1907, when the judgment-debtors acknowledged their liability to satisfy the decree. The decree-holders were then called upon to take further steps, but as the writ of attachment was returned unserved on the 18th June 1910, the case was dismissed "for default and want of further prosecution."

On the 4th July 1910, the present application was made for execution by attachment and sale of the identical lands mentioned in the first application. The Court of first instance held, that the decree-dolders had been prevented by the fraud of the judgment-debtors from executing the decree, within the meaning of Art. 6 of the third Schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act, and, in this view, held, that the period of limitation applicable was that prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has held that fraud, as contemplated by Art. 6, has not been established, and that, neither the application to set aside the ex parte decree nor the suit commenced to vacate the decree could be treated as a fraudulent act on the part of the judgment-debtors. In this view the Subordinate Judge has held that the application for execution is governed by Art. 6 and is consequently barred by limitation.

On the present appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the decree-holders that the question of fraud has not been properly tried. In our opinion, there is considerable force in this contention, and in view of the decision in Raghunath v. Kashi Prosad (1), further investigation would be necessary, if our decision had to be based on the ground assigned by the Courts below.

It is clear, however, that the objection of the judgment-debtor to the execution must be overruled on the ground that the third application of the 4th July 1910 is in substance an application in continuation of the first application of the 13th February 1907, the proceedings whereon were discontinued by reason of the injunction obtained by the judgment-debtors. In support of this view, reference may be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Qamaruddin Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (2). The principle which underlies that decision had been previously applied to proceedings in execution of rent-decree in the case of Chandra Pradhan v. Gopi Mohan (3) and Baikanta Nath v. Aghorenath (4). A similar view had been adopted by the High Court of Bombay in the case of Jivaji v. Ram Chandra (5). The case of Sarup Ganjan v. Watson (6) is clearly distinguishable, as there the proceedings on the first application had been interrupted by reason of the default of the decree-holder, and not on account of any bar imposed by the judgment-debtor [see also Kedar Nath v. Prodyat Coomar (7)]. It has been strenuously contended, however, on behalf of the judgment-debtors, that inasmuch as the second application has intervened, the third application cannot be treated as one in continuation of the first. In our opinion, this view cannot possibly be maintained. In the first application, the decree holders prayed for sale of certain immoveable properties. In the second application, they asked for attachment and sale of moveables. In the third application, they asked for the sale of the immoveable properties mentioned in the schedule to the first application. The second application cannot rightly be treated as an abandonment of the relief claimed in the first application: it must be deemed as an application for additional relief; and in this view, the third application may well be treated as a continuation of the first application. Considered from this standpoint, the case of the decree-holders presents no difficulty, as no question of limitation really arises.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and the order of the Court of first instance restored, with costs in all the Courts We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at five gold mohurs. The records will be remitted to the Court of first instance with directions to execute the decree forthwith on the basis of the application of the 4th July 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal against a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia in a case brought by the present Appellants, as Plaintiffs, to recover possession of 2 darputni holdings with mesne profits.

It appears that the present Appellants are purchasers of the putni right at a sale for arrears of rent, and that, under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, they served notices on Rajabala Debi, the daughter and heir of Radhaballav Gossain, annulling the darputni tenures and requiring her to give up possession. The notices were served on the 4th June 1901, but she refused to give up possession; and the present suit was instituted on the 13th April 1904. On the 31st July 1905, the suit was dismissed. The suit was instituted against Rajabala Debi, and, after it had been dismissed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge she died. There was an appeal to the High Court by the Plaintiffs; and the three sons of Rajabala were substituted for her as Respondents. The appeal was decreed on the 28th August 1907, and the suit was remanded for retrial by the Court of first instance. On the 30th July 1908, the Court of first instance decreed the Plaintiffs' claim for possession and for mesne profits from the 4th June 1901 up to the date of delivery of possession. In the judgment the Subordinate Judge distinctly stated that, as the original Defendant Rajabala was dead, her legal representatives would be liable for mesne profits which had accrued prior to the death of Rajabala to the extent only of Rajabala's assets which had come into their hands at her death, and that for the mesne profits subsequent to her death they would be liable personally. In the decree, as originally drawn up, mesne profits were awarded, with interest at six per cent per annum, against the 3 sons who had been substituted as Defendants; but on an application made to the lower Court, the decree was amended, on the 7th November 1908, in the following terms :—"If there be any property left by Rajabala and which has come into the hands of her heirs, then that property will be liable for mesne profits for the period from the date of service of notice up to the date of the death of the Defendant Rajabala. The heirs will be personally liable for mesne profits for the period subsequent to the aforesaid period."

The Plaintiffs have now appealed to us and in support of their appeal the main contention advanced is that the decree for mesne profits ought to have been against the sons for the whole period during which the Plaintiffs were kept out of possession.

It is suggested that Rajabala in refusing to give up possession was acting for the benefit of the estate and therefore that the whole estate of which she was in possession with a widow's interest would be liable for the mesne profits, and not merely her personal estate which came into the possession of the sons, the substituted Defendants. In support of this contention the learned pleader for the Appellants has relied upon the case of Katama Natchiar v. The Raja of Shivagunga (1), and the case of Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Muthur Mohun Gosswami (2). These two cases are not, however, applicable to the facts of the present case, and cannot in any way govern our decision in the present matter. The learned pleader for the Appellants has also relied on the three decisions of this Court in Lalji Sahaya Singh v. Kurki Jha (3), and Sadasi Koer v. Ram Gobind Singh (4), and Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad (5). The question, however, whether these judgments can be taken to apply to the present case must depend upon whether or not the act of Rajabala in the present instance can be taken to be an act done by her as representing the estate of which she was in possession as widow, and done for the benefit of that estate. After giving our best consideration to the matter, we think it is not possible to hold in the present case that the act of Rajabala can be so regarded. The notice was addressed to her to give up possession, after the darputni tenures had been annulled, and her failure to deliver possession was a personal tortious act on her part, rendering her personally liable to an action for mesne profits or damages, and not an act which can be regarded as one done in the interests of the family estate. The learned pleader for the Appellants has invited our attention to the fact that the elder son of the lady carried on the litigation on her behalf and that she was merely a nominal Defendant; but we are unable to hold that that circumstance would be sufficient to convert the act of Rajabala into anything different from a tortious act for which she personally would be liable for damages. In the case of Grish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Sekhareshur Roy (6), it was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council that "mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case." In the present instance the profits accruing from the wrongful possession prior to Rajabala's death may be taken to have gone to the person wrongfully in possession, namely, the widow; and we do not think that it can be held that they have gone for the benefit of the estate.

Under these circumstances we hold that the view taken by the lower Court was correct and that, so far as the Plaintiff's claim lay for mesne profits realised up to the date of Rajabala's death, they could only in law be entitled to recover those profits from the widow, or from the personal estate of the widow, which had passed on her death to her heirs. It may be unfortunate in the present case that little or no property belonging to the widow has passed to the heirs; but we do not think that on that account it is possible for us to give the Plaintiffs any relief. In our opinion the view taken of the law and of the justice of the case by the lower Court is correct; and we must therefore affirm the judgment and decree of the lower Court and dismiss this Appeal with costs.

We assess the pleader's fee at five gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2322 OF 1910.

COXE, J.
RAY, J.
1913, Heard,
23, July.
Judgment,
20, August.

JAHAR LAL BANDURI and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
NANDA LAL CHAUDHURI and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Injunction, suit for, if lies against trespasser in possession—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 56, Ill. (i).

A Plaintiff who is out of possession should not be allowed to sue the Defendant who is alleged to be in possession as a trespasser for an injunction. He ought to sue for recovery of the land.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 19th July 1910 against a decree of Babu Kanti Charan Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 6th of April 1910, reversing a decree of Babu Kunja Behari Ballab, Munsif at Howrah, dated the 9th of July 1909.

The Appeal arose out of a suit for perpetual injunction restraining the Defendant from digging earth from the land in question on declaration that the Defendant has no such right. The Plaintiffs also prayed that the Defendant should be directed to fill up the pits dug by him. The Defendant contended that the original tenant, Dino Muchi, was a raiyat at fixed rate and he had sold his interest to Khettur Dutta from whom he himself had purchased the land and that he was recognised as tenant by the Plaintiff's co-sharers. The Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was not maintainable as admittedly the Defendant was in possession of the land and the Plaintiffs should have prayed for possession. The Subordinate Judge in appeal held that the Plaintiffs were n constructive possession through their recorded tenants, and that it was open to them to allow the Defendant to keep possession, so long as he did not change the character of the land. In this view he decreed the suit.

The Defendants preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose for the Appellants.

Babu Narendra Chandra Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

COXE, J.—This was a suit for an injunction to restrain the Defendant from digging up the land in his possession for the purpose of making bricks. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that as the Plaintiff was out of possession the suit was not maintainable. The Subordinate Judge in appeal held that this view was erroneous. He accordingly decreed the Plaintiffs' suit. The Defendant appeals.

The question whether a suit of this nature is maintainable by a Plaintiff who is out of possession is discussed in the case of Davenport v. Davenport (1). That case may be regarded as authority that the Courts will not interfere by way of injuntion when the Plaintiff is out of possession unless there is some privity between the parties. As pointed out in Lowndes v. Bettle (2), the tendency of decisions has been to break down the unreasonable distinction between waste and trespass, and in Davenport v. Davenport (1), the refusal of an injunction was regretted. Indeed in such a case as the latter in which an action of ejectment was also pending, the Courts in India would probably grant an injunction. But it certainly seems to me wrong that when a Plaintiff avers that the Defendant is on his land without any right whatever, he should be allowed to sue for an injunction when he ought to sue for recovery of the land.

Accordingly I would decree the Appeal and restore the decision of the Munsif with costs throughout.

RAY, J.—I agree. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the Plaintiffs have constructive possession through their recorded tenant. This is not correct. The original tenant is not now in the land. The Plaintiffs allege that he had no assignable interest. They further allege that Defendant has no right to the land. That means he is a trespasser. In a case like this, relief can be obtained by the usual proceeding in ejectment, and sec. 56 of the Specific Relief Act lays down that the exceptional relief by injunction should not be allowed, vide Ill. (i). The Appeal should be decreed.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2921 OF 1911.

FLETCHER, J.
N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.

SATYA KRIPAL BANERJEE, Defendant No. 2, Appellant,
v.
SATYA BHUPAL BANERJEE, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Receivers, authorised to sue and defend—Suit by one against the other, if maintainable—Objection to suit, when to be taken—Contempt of Court.

A Receiver is an officer of the Court and the possession by him is the possession of the Court and to bring a suit so as to interfere with the possession of the Court without the leave of the Court is a contempt of Court.

But if a party is guilty of contempt of Court the proper way for the Receiver to act is to bring it immediately to the notice of the Court so that proper steps may be taken against the party guilty of contempt; and, in a proper case the Court would grant a party leave to proceed with the suit. But it is not proper for the Receiver to wait till the day of hearing and put this objection forward as a ground for dismissing the suit.

Where by consent, in a partition suit two of the parties were made Receivers of different portions of the property with full powers under sec. 503 of Act XIV of 1882:

Held—That each of the Receivers had power to bring and defend suits, and a suit by one against the other without leave specially obtained from Court did not amount to such a grave and serious contempt of Court by the Plaintiff as to merit dismissal.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1911 against the decree of T. S. Macpherson, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 14th of August 1911, affirming the decree of Babu Bidhu Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 11th of October 1909.

Satya Kripal, Satya Bhupal and Satya Doyal were the three sons of one Satya Doyal Banerji. In Jaista 1311 the three brothers by an amicable arrangement took separate possession of different portions of properties which subsequently formed the subject of a partition suit between them. In this suit the three brothers were appointed Receivers of the portions of the properties in their respective possession under the said arrangement, under which Satya Bhupal became Receiver of 8 as. zemindari interest in Lot Sarisa, whilst Satya Kripal became Receiver of the 16 as. of a putni tenure under Lot Sarisa. Satya Bhupal brought the present suit for rent against Satya Kripal in respect of this putni and the latter raised the objection that the suit was not maintainable without the leave of the Court. The Court of first instance overruled this plea on the ground that the order appointing the contesting parties Receivers sufficiently authorised the Plaintiff to bring this suit and no further permission was needed and accordingly decreed the suit. The District Judge having dismissed Satya Kripal's appeal, he preferred this Second Appeal.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Bejoy K. Bhuttacharjee for the Appellant.

Babus Jogendra Nath Mukerjee and Harendra Krishna Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

FLETCHER, J.—The only point raised in this Appeal is whether of the two parties in this case, both of whom appear to have been appointed Receivers of portions of the estate, one can maintain a suit and the other defend the suit brought against him by the former. These two gentlemen, the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 2, are brothers and they seem to be quarrelling over their father's estate with another brother.

Apparently, there was a partition suit and, on the 2nd June 1909, the Court by an order which obviously must have been a consent order appointed each of the three brothers Receiver of a portion of the property and, in the words of the order, each of the brothers was given full powers under sec. 503 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. That section conferred upon the Receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for realisation, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property and the collection of the rents and profits thereof as the owner himself had or such of those powers as the Court thought fit. The Court gave full powers and, therefore, each of the Receivers as regards the land of which he was appointed the Receiver, had the power of bringing and defending suits. It would be impossible to construe otherwise the words of the authority given by the order appointing the Receiver than that each of the Receivers had powers to bring and defend suits. Therefore, obviously, the Plaintiff had the power to institute the present suit and the Defendant had also the power to defend it. The only question is whether there was such a grave and serious contempt of Court by the Plaintiff in suing the Receiver of another portion of the estate, that the Court is bound to say that the suit must fail and ought to be dismissed. I am not clear that the argument put forward by the learned Vakil for the Appellant is right that when this point as to the suit having been instituted against an officer of the Court without the leave of the Court is a defence to be used at the trial to have the suit dismissed, that must of necessity make the Plaintiff's suit fail. It is much more likely that the statement which was read to us by the learned Vakil from some text-book that the state that prevailed in the old

SATYA KRIPAL BANERJEE v. SATYA BHUPAL BANERJEE.

Courts of Equity is what represents the practice to-day. It is quite true that proceedings cannot be brought against a Receiver without the consent of the Court. The Receiver is an officer of the Court and the possession by him is the possession of the Court and to bring a suit so as to interfere with the possession of the Court without the leave of the Court is a contempt of Court. That has been established by a large number of authorities. But if a party is guilty of contempt of Court, the proper way for the Receiver to act is to bring it immediately to the notice of the Court and the Court will deal with the party so guilty of the contempt of Court and take proper steps: and, no doubt, in a proper case, it would grant a party leave to proceed with the suit against the Receiver. Where leave is allowed to a person who happens to occupy the position of a Receiver by an order which is obviously a consent order, to keep the matter unchallenged until the suit comes on for hearing and then say that the suit must be dismissed is not a proper way. The only point on which there is any difficulty in the Plaintiff's way is the case of Pramathanath v. Khetranath (1) decided by Mr. Justice Bodilly. Whether that case does not too broadly state the proposition of law that is laid down in the judgment I do not wish to express any opinion. I rather wish to guard myself against either approving or disapproving it. It is quite sufficient to say that the order appointing the Receiver clearly authorised the Receiver to bring suits to recover the rent of the property of which he was appointed the Receiver. That being so, it seems to me that the present Appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 99, 353—Assault—Public servant acting under colour of office and in good faith—Right of private defence.

Where the Petitioner was convicted under sec. 353, I. P. C., of having assaulted a Civil Court peon when executing a writ of delivery of possession of a share in a tank by ordering some fishermen to cast their nets in the tank and catch fish for the decree-holder as provided in the writ:

This was a Rule granted on the 25th of September 1913 against an order of L. Barrow, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Vishenpur, dated the 8th of July 1913, convicting Petitioner under sec. 353, I. P. C., and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for 6 months, an appeal from which order was dismissed by C. Bartley, Esq., Sessions Judge of Bankura, on 29th of August 1913.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

PREO LAL MUKERJEE v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioner has been convicted of an offence under sec. 353, I. P. C., and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment for having assaulted a public servant, namely, a peon of a Civil Court, while he was delivering posseesion of a share in a tank to a decree-holder purchaser. A co-sharer of the Petitioner was the judgment-debtor in the civil suit and had been ordered under a decree to make over possessson of six annas out of the 16 annas of the tank to the decree-holder. The decree-holder obtained a writ of delivery of possession and was accompanied by a peon to whom a direction was given in the writ that he was to give delivery of possession of the share in the tank by "catching fish" in the tank. On the day on which the occurrence took place the decree-holder accompanied by the peon and some fishermen came to the tank and the peon ordered the fishermen to cast their nets in the tank and catch fish for the decree-holder. The Petitioner on behalf of his co-sharer finding that fish was to be caught in this manner came and objected and when his protest was not listened to he rushed into water and with a knife cut some of the nets. Thereafter there was a protest by the decree-holder as well as the peon and the Petitioner ran up to them. That constitutes the assault in this case. When the peon declared to the Petitioner that he had been acting under the order of the Civil Court and his authority was disclosed, the Petitioner desisted from actually striking either the decree-holder or the peon. On this case the Petitioner has been convicted.

It is contended before us by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the Petitioner that by permitting the fishermen to cast their nets therein the peon acted in excess of his authority, inasmuch as he had no power given to him by the parwana to catch fish in the tank. It has further been contended on behalf of the Petitioner that the Munsif had no power to give a direction in the parwana that possession was to be given by permitting the decree-holder to catch fish in the tank. Whatever mistake there may be in the procedure of the Munsif, if there was any at all by giving this direction, the Petitioner had no right of private defence against the peon who was acting under the colour of his office and in good faith though the act might not be strictly justifiable by law. The provisions of sec. 99, I. P. C., clearly confer no right of private defence on the Petitioner against the action of the peon who was a public servant. In this view we think that the conviction is sound and cannot be set aside. But the sentence passed on him appears to us to be extremely harsh. According to the case for the prosecution the Petitioner so long as he did not know that the person giving possession was a peon, that is, a public servant, was agitated and appeared to give opposition. But as soon as the official status of the peon was disclosed to him and his authority pointed out, the Petitioner subsided into a peaceful attitude and offered resistance no more. We think that in a case like this where the Petitioner even in a state of excitement showed so much respect for the law as he did by submitting to the authority of the public servant when his official designation was explained, a fine of Rs. 50 would amply vindicate the law for the technical offence of an assault on a public servant. We accordingly reduce the sentence passed on the Petitioner from six months' rigorous imprisonment to a fine of Rs. 50 (Rupees fifty) or in default of payment a fortnight's rigorous imprisonment. This Rule is made absolute to that extent.

Rule made ablolute.

THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Accomplice, competency of, as witness—Corroboration required, nature of.

An accomplice is a competent witness and there is no absolute rule of law which enacts that the conviction on the evidence of an accomplice is bad, but there is an established practice, founded on the judicial experience of generations, which requires corroboration by some untainted evidence and that in a material particular pointing not only to the crime but to the participation of the accused in that crime.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 31st of March 1913 against the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused by the Sessions Judge of Sarun under secs. 395 and 395/109, I. P. C., on the 10th of February 1913.

The accused were convicted of charges of dacoity and abetment of dacoity. The Committing Magistrate tendered a pardon under sec. 337, Cr. P. C., to one of the accused Sobran Ahir and another accused Sheonandan Ahir pleaded guilty and was convicted and sentenced. Both were examined as witnesses for the prosecution at the trial. Three other accused persons made confessions which they subsequently retracted. The material portion of the judgment of the Sessions Judge bearing on the evidence of the accomplice is set out below:

"The evidence of the villagers amply corroborates the evidence of Sobran the approver and Sheonandan the convict.

"I think it may be taken as certain that these two men Sobran and Sheonandan were among the dacoits. There does not seem to be any reason to disbelieve them, and they are amply corroborated. They each name all the accused as having taken part in the dacoity. They are accomplices, and their evidence is therefore open to suspicion. Sheonandan Ahir has however a stronger claim to credit than Sobran Ahir, for he has pleaded guilty, been convicted and sentenced, and has little now to gain or lose from the favour or displeasure of the Police.

* * * * *

"These seven men have against them the evidence of Sobran Ahir and Sheonandan Ahir, together with the statements of the three accused who have since retracted their confessions.

"Now the retracted confessions, (even if they had not been retracted), would not technically be corroboration: for corroboration implies evidence of the persons not incriminated. They can merely be considered as confirmation, for they may be 'taken into consideration' (sec. 30, Evidence Act).

"So, if I am convinced of the guilt of these seven men, I shall not be going outside the law in convicting them. The next question is, is there any reason why the confessions made in the Committing Magistrate's Court by Lokman Bind, Subhan Gond and Maniraj Ahir should be disbelieved, or not looked upon as confirmation of the evidence given by the accomplices Sheonandan and Sobran? Lokman, Subhan and Maniraj have all made statements in this Court to the effect that they are innocent, that their confessions were false and tutored by the Police and that they have no defence witnesses. I have before me no primâ facie grounds, (unless the fact of retraction be taken as such), for holding that the confessions were not voluntary. They were made on the 30 h September, nearly four weeks after the submission of charge-sheet by the Police, and more than three weeks af er the opening of the Magistrate's enquiry.

* * * * *

"I hold that the statements of Sheonandan and Sobran can in this case be accepted, confirmed as they are by the three confessions, and answered as they are by most unconvincing statements. I hold that Dahari Nonia, Kunjan Kurmi, Siar Nonia, Ramrup Ahir and Saudagar Tewari committed the dacoity, and that Gothaul and Sobha Bania were guilty of abetment by conspiracy and aid. The two later joined and went with the gang and watched their clothes, knowing full well that the dacoity was in progress."

Mr. Bagram, Offg. Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an Appeal preferred by fifteen accused who have been convicted of dacoity by the Sessions Judge of Sarun agreeing with the opinion of both the assessors. The evidence principally is that of accomplices. An accomplice is a competent witness and there is no absolute rule of law which enacts that the conviction on the evidence of an accomplice is bad, but there is an es ablished practice founded on the judicial experience of generations which requires corroboration by some untainted evidence, and that this should be a corroboration in a material particular pointing not only to the crime but to the participation of the accused in that crime. This rule has been disregarded to a large extent by the Sessions Judge. Perhaps it was not known to the assessors. We do not feel at liberty to disregard this rule, and the result is hat as to seven of the accused it has to be conceded that there is not that evidence on which a Court of law, properly guided, would convict. Those accused are Siar Nonia, accused No. 7, Dabari Nonia, accused No. 8, Badal Ahir, accused No. 9, Kunjan Kurmi, accused No. 14, Ramrup Ahir, accused No. 17, Saudagar Tewari, accused No. 18, and Sobha Bania, accused No. 19. As against these seven accused the conviction and sentences must be set aside, they must be acquitted and we direct that they be released.

As against the other Appellants, there is some amount of evidence independent of the testimony of the accomplices, and we have been assisted in the consideration of that evidence by the learned Vakil who appeared for Pitambar Ahir and brought to our notice matters relating to the other accused. The first of these is Munessar Ahir, and as against him it appears to us that there is evidence which is sufficient to sustain the conviction if it is believed. Now, with regard to the belief of this evidence we are in this position that we merely have a written record of it. The testimony was actually given before the Sessions Judge and the two assessors, and we must pay some regard to their appreciation of the evidence. They have believed this evidence and we see no reason to question the propriety of this appreciation. What we have said here applies to all the rest of the accused with one exception. That exception is Khedari Nonia, for we feel that as against him it is not brought sufficiently home to him that he was present at the scene of the occurrence. It is true that he was seen but how far from the scene of occurrence does not appear. There is nothing to show that he was at any time so near it as to raise any presumption against him. We feel that as against him there is no such corroboration as the law requires. As against him the conviction and sentence must be set aside and we direct that he be released.

As against the others, and in saying that we include Pitambar Ahir, we think there is sufficient evidence, and so far as they are concerned, we accept the view of the Sessions Judge and the assessors, and the appeals of those seven accused, that is accused Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 15 and 16 are dismissed.

NOTES.

Proposed legislation regarding contempt of Court.

We publish in another column the statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure with a view to make contempt of Court a substantive offence under the Indian Penal Code and to make it punishable by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class subject to the sanction for prosecution being previously obtained from the Government of India or the Local Government. It is explained that the law of contempt as comprised at present in the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplates punishment of contempts committed ex facie, i.e., in the presence of the Court. The Chartered High Courts have power to punish contempts committed outside the precincts of the Court but a doubt is expressed whether they have any such power in respect of contempts committed outside the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the Court. We shall not for the present join issue with regard to the latter proposition, although we are of opinion that there is not much room for legitimate doubt with regard to this question. The question whether Presidency Magistrates and Magistrates of the first class should be invested with powers to punish people for publishing reports of pending proceedings which may not be strictly correct or criticism which may be considered derogatory to the dignity of judicial officers of all ranks and status or drawing public attention to supposed irregularities of procedure or objectionable conduct on the part of such officers or others concerned in any judicial proceeding or trial, is a matter for much more serious consideration. We are of opinion that the Bill as framed is so very wide in its scope that it would stifle criticism of judicial proceedings to an unreasonable extent and no less hamper publication of newspaper reports of such proceedings.

We have carefully read the speech of the Hon'ble Sir Reginald Craddock, the Home Member to the Government of India, explaining the scope and objects of the Bill. But we are unable to accept his exposition of the English law on the subject either as accurate or up to date. The judicial dicta of all the Superior Courts in England since the latter part of the last century up to the present day have been uniformly in favour of excluding what is called "scandalizing the Court itself," or in other words, criticisms derogatory to the dignity of the Court or a Judge, from the operation of the law of contempt. Reg v. Gray, (1900) 2 Q. B. 38, which the learned Home Member cites, is no doubt the last case of any moment of this kind and in all fairness to the Home Member, we must say, that he has not omitted to refer to the caution administered by Lord Russel of Killowen regarding the exercise of this extraordinary jurisdiction of the Courts of Record in England. We regret, however, that inspite of the severe judicial criticism to which this antiquated and almost obsolete power for committal for contempt has been subjected both before and after Lord Russel's dictum, the Indian Legislature should at this distance of time come forward to constitute the so-called contempt by "scandalizing the Court" as a substantive offence under the Indian Penal Code and further that its scope in India should be extended to any and every person who is authorised under any law to record evidence. Or, in other words, the definition is wide enough to include judicial officers of all ranks and status from a High Court Judge to a Sub-Registrar of Deeds and Assurances. We presume that to speak of his incompetence or irregularity in the discharge of his duty, or arbitrariness, would amount to "scandalizing" such Court and make one amenable to the Penal Code. We wonder if it struck the Indian Legislature that this would amount to introduction of the law of "les majestes" to India with this difference that it would be made applicable to only judicial officers of all ranks. The anomaly of it is too obvious.

So far as 'scandalizing' the Court is a form of contempt we would invite attention to the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of MacLeod v. St. Aubyn (3 C. W. N. cccxlvi: s. c. 1899, A. C. 549), where it was held that the power of committal for contempt was not meant for the vindication of the Judge as a person. He must resort to an action for libel or criminal information. Committal for contempt should be used sparingly and always with reference to the interests of justice. With regard to small colonies with a coloured population their Lordships, no doubt, made certain qualifications but observed that the power even there was to be execised sparingly and in a proper case. With regard to civilized people their Lordships observed, "Courts in this country were satisfied to leave to public opinion attacks or comments made derogatory or scandalous to them." As the intended legislation is directed against the newspaper press in this country, surely the law as it prevails in England ought to be applicable here. The Hon'ble the Home Member also says that he wishes to bring the law in India into line with the law as it is in England. The observations of the Judicial Committee above referred to obviously alludes to Mr. Justice Bruce's view expressed in 1898, in connection with an article headed "Nobbling Justice" in a Liverpool paper in which the learned Judge was grossly attacked. His Lordship's attention being drawn to it, he observed :—"It was quite immaterial to a Judge what newspapers said. Proceedings for contempts were taken, not to vindicate the dignity of the Court, but to prevent tampering with justice. We would assume that it was the most extravagant and ridiculous article ever written, but we should not take any notice of it." (See 2 C. W. N. cli—clii.)

We cannot do better than reproduce also in this connection the most authoritative pronouncement on this question and which commands uniform respect of the highest judiciary in England. Jessel, M. R. (Mellish, L. J., and Baggalay, J., agreeing) observed in Clement's case (46 L. J. 383).

It seems to me that this jurisdiction of committing for contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited should be most jealously and carefully watched, and exercised, if I may say so, with the greatest reluctance and the greatest anxiety on the part of Judges to see whether there is no other mode which is not open to the objection of arbitrariness and which can be brought to bear upon the subject. I say that a Judge should be most careful to see that the cause cannot be fairly prosecuted to a hearing unless the extreme mode of dealing with persons brought before him on accusations of contempt should be adopted. I have myself had on many occasions to consider this jurisdiction, and I have always thought that necessary though it be, it is necessary only in the sense in which extreme measures are sometimes necessary to preserve men's rights, that is, if no other pertinent remedy can be found. Probably that will be discovered after consideration to be the true measure of the exercise of the jurisdiction.

The Hon'ble the Home Member in explaining the scope of the Bill so far as it relates to its provisions regarding "scandalizing" a Court said :

The two new sections which the Bill will add to the Penal Code, as sections 228A and 228B, make it quite clear what kinds of acts are made punishable. Section 228 deals with what is known as scandalising the courts, that is to say, speaking or writing anything which brings or attempts to bring into contempt or lowers or attempts to lower the authority of any court of justice or of any person empowered by law to record or direct the proceeding of evidence on oath when exercising such power. By the exception to the clause, comments which are in substance true and made in good faith for the public good are saved, for, as has been well said, the law ought not to be astute in such cases to criticise adversely what under such circumstances and with such an object is published (per Russel, L. C. J., in R. v. Gray, (1900, 2 Q B, at p 41).

So far as the Bill relates to pending proceedings the learned Home Member observed :—

The second addition which the Bill will add to the Indian Penal Code deals with cases that are sub-judice and punishes reports of pending proceedings which are of a false or misleading character, and comments relating to such proceedings or to the presiding officers, parties, witnesses, assessors, jurors or pleaders, which may cause or tend to cause prejudice in the public mind, or which may prejudice the trial of cases. There are two explanations to this section. The first defines judicial proceedings for the purposes of this section and the second exempts true, full and fair reports of judicial proceedings from the penalties provided in the section.

Proceedings for these offences will only be made on complaint made by order or under authority from the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government, or some officer empowered by the Governor-General in this behalf. The imprisonment provided for these two offences is simple and subject to the maximum of six months. They will be bailable, but not compoundable, and triable only by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the 1st Class.

As regards the detailed provisions of the Bill, we reserve our comments for the present. We would only suggest, however, that the power to commit for contempt not committed in the face of the Court should be reserved to the High Court and, if necessary, its jurisdiction extended to protect the Mofussil Courts against comments which are likely to frustrate the ends of justice. We have recently given extracts from English legal journals (see our issue of the 7th March last and English Law Journal of the 7th February last) where expression is given to the prevailing professional and judicial opinion in England that comments not calculated to prejudice trials before a jury should not come under the category of contempt. We, however, agree with the view expressed by Jenkins, C. J., and Stephen, J., in the Amrita Bazar contempt case that where comments are likely to deter witnesses from deposing before a Court, they might constitute contempt. But it would be very undesirable to bring reports on comments drawing public attention to judicial irregularities within the category of contempt.

It is not always easy for the lay public to follow judicial proceedings with the care and caution of a trained lawyer. Lay journals will surely be justified in criticising arbitrary conduct of a judicial officer, or of others in connection with a case when no question of prejudice to any jury or witness is involved. To stifle comments or criticisms in these directions would practically amount to putting the judiciary above the law. Lord Shaw sitting in the House of Lords recently observed that the practice of administering justice before the eyes of the public was one of the greatest safeguards to the rights and liberties of the British subject. So, should the proposed law of contempt be passed and enforced, comments on judicial proceedings will be almost an impossibility and this surely will interfere with the proper administration of justice. In our view the public should be given at least as much liberty to criticise the acts and conduct of the judiciary as they enjoy with regard to the acts of the executive of all grades and ranks. The provision in the Bill that in respect of reports or comments impugned for contempt, the only defence would be truth and bonâ fides, is putting forward another impossible standard of justification. Reports or comments in the newspaper press may be and often are inaccurate but are published in good faith for public information. So comments in good faith for public good ought always to be a sufficient defence.

STATEMENTS OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

When the Penal Code became law in 1860, conditions in India were such that its framers were in a position to disregard that class of contempt which is known to English law as "scandalizing the Courts." But subsequent developments have demonstrated the necessity of affording greater protection to the Courts against attempts to lower their prestige and of checking the practice which has manifested itself to a serious extent in recent years, of commenting on cases pending before the Courts in a manner which constitutes a serious menace to the dispensation of public justice. Sec 228, Indian Penal Code, renders punishable an intentional insult or interruption to a public servant sitting in a judicial proceeding, but does not provide for the punishment of contempts of the authority of judicial officers not committed in their presence, or of improper comments on their proceedings in cases under trial. A recent decision of the Calcutta High Court In re The King-Emperor v. Girindra Mohan Das and others (see In the matter of Amrita Bazar Patrika, 17 C. W. N. 1253) read with the decision of the Madras High Court In re K. Venkata Rao (21 Madras Law Journal 832) has raised doubts how far a Chartered High Court can protect Subordinate Courts in respect of such contempts, and it is also at last questionable whether the unrestricted jurisdiction of any Court to punish contempts summarily is the best way of combating the evil. The trend of modern opinion is rather in the direction of dealing with contempts as a substantive offence and not as a matter to be dealt with summarily, and this is more particularly desirable where the contempt is not committed in open Court. The draft Bill accordingly proposes to make punishable by amendment of the Indian Penal Code (1) the contempt of the authority of Courts or persons empowered by law to record evidence on oath and (2) the publication of false or misleading reports of pending cases or of objectionable comments upon them. At the same time in order to safeguard the proper exercise of these powers, an amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure is provided for, so that prosecutions for the above offences shall be undertaken only upon complaint made by order of or under authority from the Governor-General in Council, the Local Government or some officer empowered by the Governor-General in this behalf, and that such cases shall be triable only by a Presidency Magistrate, or a Magistrate of the first class. Certain exceptions and explanations have also been inserted in the draft Bill which are designed to protect bonâ fide comments or reports.

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES BY THE POLICE.

The effect of sec. 162, Cr. P. C., on sec. 157 of the Evidence Act has been thus stated by Mr. Sundar Lal in his elaborate judgment in Bhulai Sing ante.

The section in the first place modifies the rule contained in sec. 157 of the Evidence Act in the following respects, viz.,

(1) As a general rule the written record of statements previously made by a witness to a Police officer which is referred to in the section as "such writing" in the course of an investigation cannot be used as evidence.

(2) Such written record of the statement cannot be used

(a) To corroborate the statement of a witness for the prosecution or

(b) To corroborate the statement of a witness for the defence or

(c) To impeach the credit of a witness for the defence.

(3) It may be used to impeach the credit of a witness for the prosecution if

(a) The accused person requests the Court to inspect the written record of the deposition and

(b) If the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice to allow a copy of such statement being granted to him.

It might also be noted in this connection that the accused has no right to inspect such writing; he can only inspect a copy of it. The record of such statement in writing being thus inadmissible in evidence except for a limited purpose as indicated above, the question arises whether the Police officer to whom such statement was made and who reduced it to writing can be permitted to reproduce the contents of the statement and can be allowed to refresh his memory by referring to the record made by him of such statement. The Calcutta High Court has however laid down in Fanindra Mohan Banerji, I. L. R. 36 Cal. 281: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 197, that sec. 162, Cr. P. C., does not override the general provisions of the Indian Evidence Act as to the proof of the statement of a witness taken under sec. 161, Cr. P. C, by oral evidence and such statement is admissible under sec. 157 of the Evidence Act in corroboration of the evidence of the witness given at the trial.

Besides the diary kept by the Police under sec. 162, Cr. P. C., there is another diary kept under sec. 172 and generally known as the special diary in which the Police officer is required to enter his proceedings day by day and there does not in the list of matters to be entered therein appear any oral statement of witnesses to be recorded. This diary is strictly privileged and may only be used by the Court not as evidence in the case but to aid it in the enquiry or trial. Neither the accused nor their agents are entitled to call for such diaries. By a curious ingenuity, as observed in Dadan Gazi v. Emperor, I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1023, it became the practice of the Police officers in the Mofussil to incorporate oral statements made to them by witnesses in this special diary under sec. 172 in the belief that by so doing those could be kept from the knowledge of the accused. The Calcutta High Court and the Allahabad High Court both held under the Code of 1882 (Sheru Shah v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 20 Cal. 642; Queen-Empress v. Nasiruddin, I. L. R. 16 All. 207) that mere entry in the special diary could not protect such statements from being called for and inspected by the accused. The question was however reconsidered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Munnu, I. L. R. 19 All. 390. The majority of the Court in that case held that they came under the protection of sec. 172, Cr. P. C. In view of this conflict of authority and the hardship which the ruling of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court might have imposed on the accused in some cases, sec. 162 was re-enacted in the present form.

It conferred on the accused a qualified privilege of using the statements recorded by the Police to impeach the credit of a witness for the prosecution. It gave the prosecution no right to use it for any purpose. The language of the section is however not happily worded and the true view of the law on the subject seems to be that laid down by Mitter and Holmwood, JJ., in Dadan Gazi v. Emperor, I. L R. 33 Cal. 1023: s. c. 10 C. W. N. 890. Their Lordships have laid down that oral statements of witnesses to a Police officer even though entered in the diary under sec. 172 are admissible under the provisions of sec. 162 and of that section only and the provisions as to the cross examination of the Police officer under secs. 161, 145 of the Evidence Act which refer to his own statements do not apply to the statements of the witnesses. The proper procedure is for the accused at the time the witness whose statement is so recorded appears before the Court to ask the Court to refer to such writing and if necessary furnish the accused with copies. It is open to the defence to ask the Police officer or any other person whether certain statements were made to him by the witnesses for the purpose of impeaching their credit under sec. 155 of the Evidence Act but the Police officer cannot be asked to refresh his memory from diaries which are inadmissible unless admitted under the provisions of sec. 162 and used in cross-examination of the witness. It would be quite improper to accept the Police officer's perfunctory reading of his diary as proof of the statements. It is only where they have been properly brought in under the provisions of the Evidence Act that they may be used if the witness denies making them. But this does not authorise their use for the first time for the purpose of refreshing the Police officer's memory.

In Emperor v. Narayan, I. L. R. 32 Bom. 111 (F. B.), a witness who had made a statement to a Police officer who recorded it under sec. 161 denied at the trial having made any such statement and the trying Judge admitted the statement in evidence both to discredit the witness and also as evidence against the accused in that it contained statements made to the Police corroborating confessions made by the accused.

It was held by Beaman, J., that the writing ought not to have been admitted at all or its contents to have been allowed to be used by the prosecution for the nominal purpose of contradicting the witness. Russell, C. J., was of opinion that the document might be used to contradict the witness not by putting in the statement but by putting it in the hands of the Police officer to refresh his memory to get him to contradict the statement of the witness. Chandavarkar, J., held that it was the statement contained in the writing which only could be used and that only to impeach the credit of such witness in the manner provided by the Evidence Act and Batty, J., was of opinion that the writing might have been used for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness cross-examined as to the fact of the statement either on behalf of the prosecution or on behalf of the defence provided that it was treated by the prosecution only for the purpose of impeaching the credit or in corroboration of the witness who made it.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Okura & Company v. Fosbacka Jernverks Aktiebolag. BEFORE THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE AND LORD JUSTICE BUCKELY AND LORD JUSTICE PHILLIMORE. 13th January 1914.

A foreign Corporation—When is it said to be carrying on business by an agent for the purposes of a suit.

This was an appeal from an order of Ridley, J. The question for determination was as to whether a foreign Corporation could be served with a Writ in England. It was found that the Corporation employed a person as an agent since 1899, but his duty was to place orders without any general authority to make contracts or to bind the Corporation in any way.

The Court below held that the Corporation were not carrying on business in London for the purpose of the suit and that order was affirmed on appeal. LORD JUSTICE BUCKLEY said :—

There were three factors to be considered in coming to a conclusion whether a foreign Corporation was carrying on business in this country. First, the business must be carried on for a substantial period of time, which was the case here ; secondly, the act of carrying on business must be done at some fixed place, which was also the case here ; thirdly, you must find that the Corporation has been doing business here by a person who has been doing business for them. It was not enough to show that they had an agent in this country. That involved the question when a person was carrying on business. Several cases had been referred to, but it would be sufficient to mention three of them. The first was the Dunlop case [(1902] 1 K. B., 342). That was a decision on the first of the three essentials—namely, time. There was no difficulty in that case. The next case was Saccharin Corporation v. Chemische Fabrik &c., ([1911] 2 K. B., 516). The point there was that the person representing the Corporation was an agent for sale without submitting orders to his principal, but he had authority to enter into contracts for the sale of the Defendants' goods, and therefore was properly served in an action against the Defendants. The third case was Grant v. Anderson and Co. ([1892, 1 Q. B., 108), which was not a case of a foreign Corporation, but of a foreign firm, the rule relating to which contained the word "carrying on business." It was therefore a direct authority. There the mere employment of an agent in England who had power to collect orders for the firm on commission, but who had no power to accept or reject such orders, was not carrying on business. The facts of that case were very close to the present.

Messrs. Montague Shearman, K. C., and McCardie for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. Leck, K. C., and Chaytor for the Defendants.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Jay's Furnishing Company v. Brand & Co. Before MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY AND MR. JUSTICE BANKES. 14th January 1914.

A hire-purchase agreement of furniture—Its termination.

This was an appeal from a County Court. The tenant hired some furniture under a hire-purchase agreement from the Plaintiffs. It provided that in case of default the agreement shall ipso facto be determined and the hirer shall at his own expense return the goods to the Plaintiffs. Finally the Plaintiffs sent a notice to the tenant that the agreement had been terminated and demanded the return of the goods.

The landlord distrained the furniture for rent. The Plaintiffs relied on sec. 1 of the Act of 1908, but the Defendants pleaded sec. 4 which provided that the Act was not to apply to goods comprised in any hire-purchase agreement made by the tenant. The Court below found for the Defendants. It was contended on appeal that the hire-purchase agreement had been determined prior to the date of the distress. The Court dismissed the appeal and Mr. JUSTICE RIDLEY said :—

The case of Hackney Furnishing Company v. Watts (28 T. L. R. 417) was on all fours with the present case, except that instead of the clause which existed in the present case there was a clause which said that in case the hirer should commit any breach of the agreement the owners should be entitled without formal demand to resume possession of the articles, and to enter any premises for that purpose. The Court in giving judgment said that that did not give the owners the power to determine the agreement, but only to determine the bailment. In the present case there was a stronger clause which said that in the event of a breach the agreement should ipso facto determine. They had had to consider whether that made any difference, and they thought it did not. Although the agreement stated that it was ipso facto to be determined, the same clause went on to say that the owners should be at liberty to enter Bray's premises and retake the furniture. If the owners took possession under that clause they would be treating the agreement as still in existence, and in fact they had tried to do so. They would have no right to enter the premises without the assistance of that clause. Patrick v. Colerickr (3 M. and W., 483) was a case of interest in connexion with this. It seemed to him that these goods were "comprised" in a hire-purchase ageement within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Act of 1908.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—Rex v. Ryan. Before LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND, MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY AND MR. JUSTICE BAILHACHE. 12th January 1914.

Medical practitioner "wilfully" giving false certificates of death.

The Appellant who was a medical practitioner was convicted of wrongfully making false certificates of death and sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment. He certified that he had attended each of the persons, giving the dates that he had found them suffering from certain diseases which were the cause of death. In fact he had never attended them, nor were the persons dead.

On appeal it was contended on his behalf that "wilfully" in sec. 4, Perjury Act, 1911, must refer not only to the wilfully making the false certificate but also to the purpose to which it was to be applied.

The LORD CHIEF JUSTICE said :—

Mr. Merriman had argued that the Judge's summing up was insufficient. He said that "wilfully" should "intentionally" under the statute [of 1874, form.

and that if the jury had taken the view that he had given these false certificates for the purpose suggested, and not for the purpose of being used under the Act of 1874, they could have found that he had not wilfully made any false statement under that Act. Notwithstanding its ingenuity, they were unable to accept that contention. They were of opinion that the view taken by Mr. Justice Avory was right—namely, that "wilfully" meant intentionally, which meant that at the time the Appellant gave these certificates he knew that he was making false statements in relation to documents which purported to be certificates under an Act relating to the registration of births and deaths, and which could be used under the Act.

[APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.	DAVID MACLAREN and another, Appellants,
LORD SHAW.	v.
LORD MOULTON.	THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, Respondent.
1914, 28, January.

Boundary described as extending to a river or highway—The presumption ad medium filum aquœ, application of.

In this appeal in the course of their Lordships' judgment delivered by Lord Moulton, the question was discussed as to how far the presumption —ad medium filum aquœ—is negatived by specific boundaries, in the following terms :—In some of the judgments in the Courts below the learned Judges have held that the presumption that the bed of the river ad medium filum aquœ was included in the grant is negatived by the fact that the metes and bounds of the parcels forming the townships as described in the Letters Patent make them terminate at the bank of the river. But their Lordships are of opinion that in so holding they are not giving full effect to the presumption or (as it should rather be termed) rule of construction which is so well established in English law. It is precisely in the cases where the description of the parcel (whether in words or by plan) makes it terminate at the highway or stream and does not indicate that it goes further that the rule is needed. If there is any indication of the parcel going further there is no place for its operation. The application of the rule is strikingly illustrated in the latest case in which the point was considered in the House of Lords (City of London Land Tax Commissioners

v. Central London Railway, 1913, A. C. 364). In that case the plots under consideration were described in language which undoubtedly represented them as plots terminating at the highway. In one instance the description was—

"Vacant ground formerly two houses and premises situate and known as Nos. 36 and 37, Newgate Street" and in another instance the description was—

"All those pieces of land now or formerly known as 85 and 86, Newgate Street, . . . more particularly delineated and described on the plan hereto annexed marked A and thereon coloured pink."

and on reference to that plan it was seen that the coloration stopped at the edge of the highway. Yet in all these instances their Lordships were unanimously of opinion that the rule ought to be applied, and that the lands up to the middle line of Newgate Street were included in the certificates of redemption of land tax.

In construing the parcels in a document affecting land, say for example a grant, the law treats the parties as describing the land of which the full use and enjoyment is to pass to the grantee. But in cases where the possession of the parcel so described would raise a presumption of ownership of the land in front of it ad medium filum aquæ or viæ the law holds that it is the exclusion of that land which must be evidenced by the terms of the grant and not its inclusion, and that if not so evidenced that land will be deemed to have been included in the grant if the grantor had power to include it. Hence it is settled law that no description in words or by plan or by estimation of area is sufficient to rebut the presumption that land abutting on a highway or stream carries with it the land ad medium filum merely because the verbal or graphic description describes only the land that abuts on the highway or stream without indicating in any way that it includes land underneath that highway or stream. This is precisely what we have here. The land is shown as abutting on the river and is described as bounded by the river, and again as bounded by a line following the windings and sinuosities of the river bank. This clearly makes it abut on the river and gives rise, according to English law, to the presumption in question.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before IMAM AND CHAPMAN, JJ. CIVIL RULE NO. 1378 OF 1913. HALIM alias JALISH PRAMANIK AND ORS., Petitioners, v. KUTISWAR PAL AND ORS., Opposite Party. 13th March 1914.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 23, r. 1, Sub r. (6)—Allowing Plaintiff to withdraw suit at appellate stage—Sufficient ground.

The Defendants, Opposite Party, obtained a rule on the Plaintiffs, Opposite Party, to show cause why an order allowing the Plaintiffs to withdraw the suit with leave to bring a fresh one unless barred by limitation made by the Subordinate Judge of Pubna should not be set aside.

The Plaintiffs brought a suit for declaration of their alleged title to and recovery of possession of the disputed lands after eviction of the Defendants therefrom. The Munsif dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge, in the course of the hearing thereof, passed an ex parte order permitting the Plaintiffs to put in additional evidence as prayed for. On the Defendants' objection the Subordinate Judge set aside this order. Thereupon the Plaintiffs applied to the Court of the said Subordinate Judge for withdrawal of the suit and the said Court made an order to that effect, although there was no formal defect or any other sufficient grounds as contemplated by Or. 23, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held—Setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, that mere vagueness in the written statement was not a sufficient ground as contemplated by Or. 23, r. 1, sub-r. (6) entitling the Plaintiffs to withdraw the suit at the appellate stage with liberty to bring a fresh suit in order to clear up the aforesaid vagueness by adducing additional evidence.

The Rule was made absolute and the Subordinate Judge was directed to reconsider the order refusing to adduce additional evidence.

Res judicata—Consent decree—Review, rejected—Suit on same ground as review, if maintainable.

The present Plaintiffs sued the Defendants and a compromise was alleged to have been effected. A decree was passed in accordance with that compromise. The present Plaintiff No. 1 subsequently came to Court not by way of appeal from an order made under Or. XXIII, but for a review of the decree and his application was based upon the allegation that he had not consented. The result of his application, however, was unfavourable to him, and it was dismissed. Subsequently this suit was brought, and the applicant for review as well as his co-Plaintiff in the former suit were the Plaintiffs in the present suit. There was the same allegation of no consent and it was further suggested that there was fraud. Fraud was negatived in the Courts below, so that the only ground of relief was the absence of consent.

Held, that as fraud was negatived, the suit should have been dismissed, for the only question on which a decision had been given in the suit in favour of the Plaintiffs was one which was decided adversely in the former litigation.

Limitation—Special plea taken in Appellate Court—Nature of tenancy.

The suit was for recovery of possession of immoveable property with mesne profits and was commenced on the 17th June 1899. The case for the Plaintiff was that she purchased the property at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent at the instance of the landlord, and that the Respondents who were the landlords kept her out of possession. The tenancy was sold in execution of a rent decree and the land in suit constituted a property held by the Plaintiff under the Defendants. The purchase was made by the Plaintiff on the 12th July 1887 and the sale was confirmed on the 14th February 1888. A question of limitation was raised in the written statement and it was stated explicitly that the suit was barred by limitation as delivery of possession had not been obtained within three years from the date of purchase. In the first Court reliance was placed upon Art. 142 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act and the Munsif held that as the suit had been instituted within 12 years from the date of confirmation of sale the suit was in time. On appeal it was argued before the Subordinate Judge for the first time that the property in suit constituted an occupancy holding and that consequently the suit was barred as it was not brought within 2 years of the date of dispossession by the landlord. It was found that the area of the property was more than 238 bighas. The Subordinate Judge held that although the presumption dispensed with the proof at the first instance, it did not relieve the Court from its duty to enquire into and ascertain the origin of the tenancy on the materials placed before it.

Held, that it was not competent to the lower Appellate Court to decide a question which was not in controversy between the parties. The suit was tried throughout on the assumption that the property constituted a tenure. It was not open to the landlord at a late stage of the suit to raise the question of the nature of the tenancy.

Will—Bequest to children, some unborn—Mahomedan family.

This was an appeal as to the rights of parties, under the Will of a testator who died in 1893.

By his Will, he gave certain annuities, and among them, an annuity of Rs. 60 a year to Fatima Begum. He then provided in effect that after her death it should go to the children born of her so long as they lived—that after her death it was to be divided among the children born of her: but in case there should be no children then the executor and his heir should not be bound to pay the amount fixed. Fatima Begum died in November 1908, and the claim in the suit was in respect of Rs. 25, a portion of the annuity that had accrued after her death.

Fatima had left three daughters her surviving, Jabeda and two others; of these Jabeda alone was born at the testator's death.

Held, that Jabeda alone was entitled to the annuity.

NOORIJAN SARDAR v. BIMOLA SUNDARI GUPTA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Second Appeal arises out of a suit for rent valued at 22 rupees. A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay, but we find that in both the Courts an issue was raised as to the amount of the annual rent and it was decided that the annual rent was 12 rupees. It is sought to be argued on the authority of the case in Baidya Nath Bahara v. Dhan Krishna Sirkar (1), that there must be some contest upon the point, but the law is perfectly clear and so is that decision, that it is only necessary that the Court should have decided the annual rate of rent whether directly or incidentally. In this case a direct issue was raised, so that there can be no doubt about the right of appeal.

The argument of the learned Doctor who appeared for the Appellant raised what is a new point in this country, although it was pointed out as long ago as 1881 by Mr. Justice Field in Pertab Chandra's case that such a defence might be taken to a rent suit in Bengal. The learned Doctor took the plea that in this case the Defendant had been evicted by a title paramount, by the Plaintiff's landlord, and that therefore he was not bound to pay any rent to the Plaintiff. Now, it has been laid down by the English authorities that to constitute a good defence in these cases three conditions must be fulfilled, the eviction must be from something actually forming part of the premises demised, the party evicting must have a good title, and the tenant must have quitted against his will. In this case the only difficulty was that there was no forcible expulsion, but this has been held by all English authorities to be unnecessary; all that is necessary is that the landlord should claim the rent and the tenant on such notice attorn to him because he is not entitled to resist the claim. We need only refer to the cases which are quoted in Foa on Landlord and Tenant, 4th Ed., p. 169. Hill v. Saunders (2) is the leading case, and we entirely agree with the legal doctrine which is here laid down and which is in accordance with common sense. But we find that as a matter of fact no such eviction by title paramount was ever pleaded by the Defendant, and that on the contrary he pleaded something totally different. He made an averment which has been found to be false that he had held this land under an amaldari for 12 years at a rent of 6 rupees. Now, it does appear that in the year 1894 there was some talk of amaldari but the learned Judge has said that there is no proof of it, and that even if it was given it would not help the Defendant as it was an unregistered document. Be that as it may, this is not the case which the Defendant has to prove.

He has to prove that in the year 1315, after he had himself admitted to the Settlement Officer that the Plaintiff was his landlord the zemindar's amla came to him and put pressure upon him and so he had to attorn to the superior landlord who holds the title paramount. It is found by the learned Judge that as a matter of fact after he had admitted his tenancy before the Settlement Officer under the Plaintiff he was approached by the amla of the zemindar, but the treatment far from having been in the nature of pressure appears to have been in the nature of a bribe. He argues that they told him he would get his rent reduced to 6 rupees if he would give them a kabuliyat, whereupon he proceeded to give them a kabuliyat. We would be reluctant to hold that this falls within the English law of quasi-eviction. We think that the argument in this Court has been based upon the finding of the learned Judge about this settlement proceedings, and that nobody, least of all the Defendant, ever thought of this question of eviction by title paramount before the case came into this Court. The Defendant cannot, we think, be allowed to make a new case of this kind, and at any rate as far as the rent now claimed is concerned the case must fail, for the kabuliyat in favour of the paramount title was not executed till the year 1315.

The Appeal therefore is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD SHAW. LORD MOULTON. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. 1913, Heard, 4, 5 and 6, November. Judgment, 10, December.	SRI RAJA VENKATA NARASIMHA APPA ROW BAHADUR ZEMINDAR, [since deceased (now represented by Meka Venkataramayya Appa Row Bahadur and anr., Appellants, v. SRI RAJA PARTHASARATHY APPA ROW SAVAI ASWA ROW BAHADUR ZEMINDAR, and another, Respondents.

Will of Hindu—Interpretation, fundamental principles of, common to Hindu and English Wills—Court's duty to give effect to intention as expressed, not to add to Will—Surrounding circumstances to be looked at as aid to interpretation only—Religious opinion and race, in what way relevant—"Liberal construction of native Wills," meaning of—Contemporaneous deed, referred to in Will, and interpretation by persons interested, if may be referred to—English rules of construction, if inapplicable—Joint power of adoption given to two wives—Joint discretionary power to donees personæ designatæ, if may be exercised by survivor alone—Power to adopt when discretionary, whether given for secular or religious purpose—Intention as expressed—Hindu Law—Joint power to co-wives to adopt, if legal and how to be interpreted—Child if may be received in adoption by more than one wife—Custom if may override logic.

Only one of several widows left by a Hindu can receive a child in adoption so as to step into the position of being its adoptive mother.

But because this is so it does not follow as a matter of necessity that a power given to more than one wife to adopt must be an invalid power, for in many matters custom solves difficulties which appear to be insoluble when the questions are considered from a purely logical point of view.

The Judicial Committee refrained from deciding, upon the imperfect materials on the record of this case, a question of such far-reaching importance as the validity and the interpretation of a joint power of adoption given by a Hindu by Will to his two wives.

When a discretionary power of adoption was given to the testator's two widows and the power had to be exercised by the joint donees in agreement it was clear law independently of any English legal doctrines or decisions that the death of one of the donees puts an end to the joint power.

When, on a proper construction of the Will, the words of the Will permitting adoption referred only to the period of time when both widows were living and to the choice and adoption of the two widows acting jointly, and when the Will was silent as to the period after the death of one of the widows, to hold that the surviving widow could adopt would be to provide for a period of time which the testator left unprovided for and unnoticed in the Will and to do so would be to make an addition to the testamentary dispositions.

The words used in the Will being "you (his two wives) should adopt a boy who is our sannihita (one closely related) whenever it strikes that our samastanam (family) should continue:"

Held—That the religious motive of procuring for himself an heir by adoption, did not, on the terms of the Will, appear to be so overmastering, that the Court must regard his intentions to be dictated by it alone, but that the language of the Will pointed rather to the predominance in the testator's mind of the secular motive.

When the exercise of a power is vested in the discretion of joint donees personæ designatæ the death of one of the donees puts an end to the joint power; the consequence is that the survivor cannot do the act because he has not the warrant of the agreement of his late colleague. The case is different when the power is vested not in the donees personæ designatæ but in occupants for the time being of a specified office such as executors or trustees, which is not the case here.

In construing a Will, a Court must consider the surrounding circumstances, the position of the testator, his family relationships, the probability that he would use words in a particular sense and many other things including the race and religious opinions of the testator and influences and aims arising therefrom—but all this solely as an aid to ascertaining the meaning of the language used by the particular testator in the particular Will. Once the right construction is settled, the duty of the Court is loyally to carry out the intentions as expressed and none other. This duty is universal, and is true alike of Wills of every nationality and every religion or rank of life. The Court is in no case justified in adding to testamentary dispositions. If they transgress any legal restrictions they must be disregarded. If any eventuality arises which the Will leaves unprovided for, there will be intestacy.

This fundamental principle does not clash with the principle that the Court will not necessarily apply English rules of construction to a Will of a Hindu like the present, nor does it clash in any way with what is sometimes called "giving a liberal interpretation to native Wills."

That native testators should be ignorant of the legal phrases proper to express their intentions or of the legal steps necessary to carry them into effect is one of the most important of the "surrounding circumstances" which the Court must bear in mind, and it is justified in refusing to allow defects in expression in these matters to prevent the carrying out of the testator's true intentions. But those intentions must be ascertained by the proper construction of the words he uses, and once ascertained, they must not be departed from.

It is legitimate in construing a Will to look at a contemporaneous document referred to in the Will which the testator wrote or caused to be written with the express intent to render clear his wishes with regard to his succession.

The interpretation placed on the power by the testator's widows was referred to "for what it was worth."

This was an Appeal from a judgment of the Madras High Court, reported in I. L. R. 29 Mad. at p. 437. There were cross-appeals to His Majesty in Council. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had decided one portion of the appeal, namely, that relating to the partibility of the Nidadavole Zamindari, in a previous judgment.

The remaining portion of the appeals related to Medur Estate. Several questions were involved in the determination of this appeal, but their Lordships of the Judicial Committee heard the parties on one question only, namely, whether the authority to adopt given in the Will, dated the 6th December 1864, to two widows jointly was valid and, if so, whether it could be exercised by one widow alone after the death of the other.

The Will was in the following terms :—

"As my illness increased and as I think I would not survive, you both should divide in equal shares my Zamindari Nidadavole and Baharjalli Pergannas and Amberpet Perganna, the cash in the upstair building and all other moveable and immoveable property. It has been arranged that my nephew (sister's son) Chiranjivi Vellanki Venkata Kristna Rao should enjoy hereditarily from son to grandson the profits of the village of Mundur attached to Amberpet Muttah and also of Nagulapalli and Rajupotepalli villages attached to the Taluqdari and that my brothers-in-law Vellanki Jagannadha Rao Garu and Sura Rao Garu should enjoy hereditarily the profits of the village of Undrajavaram attached to Nidadavole Perganna paying every year the peishcush fixed therefor at the Sub-Division according to the kistbund (instalments). You both should maintain our Samstanam servants—clerks, dasis, and other servants. You should for the most part live in harmony with my younger brother Chiranjivi Venkatadri Appa Rao. You should adopt a boy who is our sannihita (one closely related) whenever it strikes you that our Samstanam should continue. In all matters, you both should act without quarrelling. I have this day alone caused a petition to be written and sent to the Collector of Godavari in regard to this matter. You both should, without fail, act according to the aforesaid paddhalis (terms)."

Three Courts expressed their views upon the question. The Subordinate Judge of Kistna in his judgment, dated the 2nd December 1899, held that the surviving widow was competent to adopt. He said :—

"On the authorities quoted in the* margin the Plaintiff's Vakil contended that the 1st Defendant had no right to adopt after the death of her co-widow as the power granted was indivisible and one of the widows to whom it was granted had died before any adoption was made. He said that the Will does not say that, if one of the wives does not agree, the other can adopt and that the test is whether the 1st Defendant could adopt if her co-widow were alive and unwilling to adopt. The argument in fact presumes a dissent from one who had no occasion to dissent and who is no longer alive to dissent. The Vakil admitted, however, that he could not lay his hands on any case exactly in point, viz., one where the power was given by the husband as in F (a) and the adoption was made by one of the widows after the death of the other.

The case of Mondakini v. Adinath (1)

* I. L. R. 18 Cal. 69 (1890) Mayne's H. L. Art. 106.

seems inapplicable here. That was a case where a man died leaving two widows and having given either of them the power to adopt a son, and the younger widow, on the refusal of the elder one to adopt, adopted a son.'

"And there the said High Court held :—

"'That the estate which was in the elder widow was divested by the adoption and that the adopted son took all the estate of his adoptive father.'

"Passing to Art. 106 of Mayne's Hindu Law we find it runs thus :—

"'Where there are several widows, if a special authority has been given to one of them to adopt, she, of course, can act upon it without the assent of the others, and, I presume, she alone could act upon it. If the authority has been given to the widows severally, the junior may adopt without the consent of the senior, if the latter refuses to adopt. In Bombay, it is said that where there are several widows, the elder has the right to adopt even without the consent of the junior widow, but that the junior widow cannot adopt without the consent of the elder, unless the latter is leading an irregular life, which would wholly incapacitate her.'

"Even this does not seem to apply to the circumstances of this case because under F (a) power is given to both the widows and the senior exercised it after the death of the junior.

"The contention of the Plaintiff's Vakil seems to me to be quite untenable. So far as I can see all that the testator meant in F (a) was that, if the two wives he was leaving behind him should think of continuing the Zemin in his line, they should adopt a boy from amongst his near kindred without any disputes between them.

"If the senior wife alone was authorised the junior would be divested and vice versa; but that is not the case here as the permission was given to both and their signatures were secured to the Will containing the same. If only one of the widows adopted during the lifetime of the other and the latter dissented, then there would be kalatalu (disputes) as observed in F (a) because by such adoption the dissenting widow would lose her share in the estate. It is only in such a case that the adoption by one widow might be contended to be invalid. In the present case, however, one of the widows died long ago and so the first Defendant, the surviving widow, had none to act in harmony with or contend with. There is nothing in the language used in F (a) to prevent either widow from adopting a boy after the death of the other. There is no such prohibition or revocation of an authority in it ; nor is there anything therein to lead one to suppose that if the adoption was ever made it should be made by both and that during the lifetime of both and if not, not. The object the testator had in permitting the adoption being the continuance of the estate in his line, the language used in the Will well enables one widow to adopt a boy after the death of the other widow. Otherwise and if the surviving widow construed the Will as if it conferred no right on her to adopt after the death of her co-widow, effect could not be given to the intention of the testator at all regarding the continuance of the Samstanam in his line. In the absence, as here, of any prohibition to the surviving widow to exercise the authority, or of any special disqualification in the first Defendant to give effect to the intention of her husband, certainly it must be conceded and presumed that she has the right to adopt after the death of her co-widow and that that right did not die out with the co-widow.

"Then again the first Defendant was about 37 or 38 years of age when her husband died. If one of the widows died, the necessity to adopt would not cease on a proper interpretation of the intention of the testator. It is therefore idle to say that the authority to adopt would be at an end if either widow died. When one of the widows to whom the power was given is alive and capable of exercising it, how can the power die out as it is not one that could be divided between the two widows and no part of it would die with the death of either. With the death of one widow what was lost was the effect on the two widows of the provision in the Will to deal amicably and without disputes in making the adoption, and not the authority given to adopt.

"If the argument used by the Plaintiff's Vakil be adopted the first Defendant could not enjoy the estate of her husband after her co-widow's death whereas she has been enjoying the whole of it ever since the latter's death and none has objected to the same till now. If there could be no objection to the 1st Defendant's solely enjoying her husband's estate there could be none to her adopting a boy to take over that estate as desired by him. There can be no doubt that the authority survived to the surviving widow just as the estate survived. In fact the case of the power given to adopt is a much stronger one than the case of the estate because by making the adoption the 1st Defendant divests herself of the whole and not merely a moiety of the estate as the authority creates a full owner to the estate. It is only the widows of Narayya Appa Rao that could have adopted to him, and he could have authorised none else to adopt a son to him. Even in the absence of an authority from Narayya Appa Rao the 1st Defendant could have adopted a boy after her co-widow's death with the permission of his sapindas; and while so, to say that F (a) prevents her from adopting after her co-widow's death seems odd and idle.

"If under the will F (a) the authority to adopt did not survive to the 1st Defendant, their Lordships of the Madras High Court would have observed so in the case of Papamma v. Appa Rau (2) and not considered there the 1st Plaintiff's husband's step-mother's right to give the 1st Plaintiff's husband in adoption on the assumption that the 1st Defendant had the power to adopt him. Their Lordships have distinctly observed at page 396 of the said volume that 'Though Papamma Rao's authority to adopt was denied in the plaint, the Subordinate Judge considered it proved and there is sufficient evidence to warrant the finding.'

"This matter of the authority to adopt seems to be analogous to the survival of trust to the remaining trustees on the death of one of the trustees and the survival of the power to executors and administrators of an estate to administer it on the death of one of the executors or administrators thereof.

"I accordingly find that the first Defendant was quite competent to adopt a boy after the death of her co-widow."

The District Judge held that the joint authority was invalid and if valid, could not be exercised by one widow only.

The High Court (Davies and Benson, JJ.) reversed the decision of the District Judge. In the course of their judgment they said :—

(2) I. L. R. 16 Mad. 384 (1893).

"It is then contended on behalf of the Defendants that that authority was in itself invalid, because it was a power granted jointly to the two widows, whereas it was decided in the Uthumalai case, reported in Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (3) that only one widow can make an adoption and therefore an authority given to two must be illegal.

"To begin with, there is no such ruling in the case referred to. All that their Lordships have done is to notice with approval a Bengal case where three widows having been authorized to make an adoption, it was held that only one could take the given son in adpotion so as to constitute herself the mother. But so far from the authority given to more than one widow to adopt being held ipso facto invalid, the adoption that was actually made in that case by one of the three widows under that authority was not disputed, which it must have been if the authority to adopt was itself illegal. There is, therefore, no ground for this contention.

"The next contention is that the authority in this case being to the two widows jointly could not be exercised after the death of one by the surviving widow. There is no warrant for this proposition in the Will itself. It is true that no provision is made as to what is to happen if one widow dies, no adoption having been made during her lifetime. But there is no prohibition that one widow alone should not adopt after the death of the other. During the lifetime of both it might well be urged that both should combine in making the adoption. But that is no ground for holding that, when one had died, the authority given to both widows was exhausted and did not remain with the survivor. The intention of the testator clearly was that the widows should enjoy the estate so long as they liked. He required no immediate adoption, which would have ousted the widows from the enjoyment of the estate. But he leaves it to them to select their own time for making the adoption for the continuation of his line. He was, of course, anxious that, for this purpose, an adoption should ultimately be made. But this very object would have been defeated if, after the death of one widow, the other was not to exercise the power. We should not impose limits and conditions on a power which the giver of the power has not himself imposed either expressly or impliedly. A Hindu can authorise no one but his widow or widows to make an adoption. He cannot nominate any one else. He, in fact, has no choice in the matter. So that the authority given to the widows here could have been given to them in no other capacity than that they were his widows. It was by virtue of their status or position as widows that the authority was conferred, and the giving of the authority to both widows without any restrictions is tantamount to giving authority to each. The case is analogous to that of a power given to a person not in his individual capacity, but as holding a particular office, such as that of an executor. And in such a case, the law is that the power conferred on two is not extinguished by the death of one. The fact that the widows had a right of survivorship in regard to the property is a further good argument that the survivor of them also had the right under the husband's authority to appoint an heir to that property. This disposes of the second objection, and we hold that Papamma Row had full power to make an adoption after the death of her co-widow, Chinnamma Row."

Hence this Appeal.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. L. De-Gruyther, K. C., (with them Mr. A. M. Dunne and Mr. K. Brown) argued that the joint authority to adopt was invalid and if valid, the power could not be exercised by the surviving widow. The joint power to two widows was bad in itself. It was repugnant to have two mothers and mother's relations if both adopted one boy. The terms of the Will shew that it empowered a joint adoption. An authority to adopt with consent of an executor was held invalid, Amrita Lal v. Surnomoyee (4). An adopted son assumes the same status as a son begotten in the adoptive family. Mayne's Hindu Law (7th Edn.), p. 214; Kali Komul v. Uma Sankar (5). Adoptive mothers are unknown to the Hindu Law, only one mother adopts. The wife who associates with her husband in adopting would succeed to the adopted son in preference to the one not joining. Annapurni Nachiar v. Collector of Tinnevelly (6), Annapurni v. Forbes (3). The parties being Sudras the religious motive for adoption is not so strong as in the case of the twice-born Hindus. Stoke's Hindu Law, p. 588. Further, the power having been conferred upon two persons, it could only be exercised by the two jointly. Macnaghten's Considerations of Hindu Law, p. 171 and Appendix XI (note); Huradhun v. Muthoranath (7). The opinion of West and Bühler (Hindu Law, at p. 977) where Dinkar Sitaram v. Ganesh Shivram (8) is referred to that a husband may authorize both widows to adopt is not borne out by the ruling cited. Powers conferred must be strictly followed and where conferred on two persons jointly it cannot be exercised by one of them alone. Reference was made to the following authorities: Rakhmabai v. Radhabai (9), Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga (10), Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal Kunwar (11), Pudum Singh v. Oodey Singh (12), Mutsaddi Lal v. Kundun Lal (13), Montefiore v. Browne (14); Farwell on Powers, p. 434 (2nd Edn.); Mayne's Hindu Law, pp. 141, 145, 151; Steele's Local Custom, pp. 48 and 187. The view taken by the District Judge was right.

Sir Edward Clarke, K. C., and Sir Erle Richards, K. C., (with Mr. Ross, K. C., and Mr. T. Prakasam of the Madras Bar) for the Respondents contended that the decision of the High Court was right. There was no authority or reason for the Appellant's contention that a joint power was bad and invalid by itself. In Bombay a joint adoption is allowed and Madras differed from Bombay only in that authority to adopt was required there. A joint adoption could not be said to be impossible. The giving of authority to widows is to free them from the incapacity to adopt. None of them may adopt. The terms of the Will only impose one limitation and that is that the two widows are to concur in selecting a boy. She alone who actually receives the boy becomes his mother. Adoption means and includes selection of a boy and the actual ceremony of receiving the boy. The widows were required to consent to the selection only and not to the ceremony of receiving or adopting. The power in the Will was given to each widow to adopt but by implication one was to do so with the concurrence of the other. It was not joint but several authority.

The authority was there, and the Court should give effect to it. Such a construction ought to be put on the terms of the Will as will give effect to the natural meaning and intention of the testator. It is the natural wish of a sonless Hindu that an adoption should be made. The presumption is in favour of adoption. A broad and reasonable interpretation ought to be put on the Will of a Hindu made so far back as 1864. The English rules of construction had no application to India. Reference was made to Bhagabati v. Kali Charan (15), Annapurni Nachiar v. Forbes (3), Indar Kunwar v. Jaipal Kunwar (11); West and Bühler's H. Sir R. Finlay, K. C., in reply distinguished the cases cited on behalf of the Respondents. He referred to Hunter v. Attorney-General (23), Brassey v. Chalmers (24).

He submitted that the plain meaning of the Will was that one widow was not to adopt without the consent and concurrence of the other.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—The further question now for consideration in these consolidated appeals is the ownership of the Zamindari of Medur. It is common ground that at one time this zamindari belonged to Narayya Appa Row, the son of Venkataramayya Appa Row, who will for convenience be referred to as Narayya the younger. It is also common ground that Narraya the younger died intestate on the 4th August 1895. The points in dispute are whether at the time of his death Narayya the younger had become by adoption the son of Raja Narayya Appa Rao Bahadur Garu, who died on the 7th December 1864 (and who will for convenience be referred to as Narayya the elder), and whether if such adoption took place, it had the effect of divesting him of the Zamindari of Medur. In order that the Respondents in this appeal may sustain their claim to a share of the Zamindari of Medur, it is necessary that they should succeed on both these points, inasmuch as their claim by inheritance from Narayya the younger depends on his having been validly adopted into the family of Narayya the elder. Their claim must therefore fail if he was not validly adopted, or if, having been so adopted, he thereby forfeited his right to the Zamindari of Medur, which appears to have been ancestral property in his family of origin.

The alleged adoption took place after the death of Narayya the elder and was made by his widow Papamma. The Respondents claim that this adoption was a valid exercise of the powers given by the last Will of Narayya the elder. The Appellants, on the other hand, contend that the power of adoption which purported to be given by the said Will was in itself invalid, and that even if the power was valid as given in the Will the alleged adoption was not in accordance with that power, and was accordingly of no force or validity. If the Appellant succeed in making good either of these objections to the validity of the adoption, the whole claim of the Respondents admittedly falls to the ground, and their Lordships have therefore considered it desirable that these points should be fully argued in the first instance as preliminary points, and that they should express their opinion on them before considering the other portions of the case.

The Will of Narayya the elder is dated the 6th day of December 1864, i.e., immediately previous to his death. He was a member of the Velama branch of the Sudras caste. He had two wives named respectively Papamma and Chinnamma. So much turns upon the language of this Will that it is advisable to cite it in full. It reads as follows :—

" As my illness increased, and as I think I would not survive, you both should divide in equal shares my Zamindari Nidadavole and Bahargalli parganas and Amberpet pargana, the cash in the upstair building and all other moveable and immoveable property. It has been arranged that my nephew (sister's son) Chiranjivi Vellanki Venkatakrishna Row should enjoy hereditarily from son to grandson the profits of the village of Mandur attached to Ambarpet Muttah, and also of Nagulapalli and Rajupotepalli villages attached to the Taluqdari, and that my brothers-in-law Vellanki Jagannadha Row Garu and Vellanki Sura Row Garu, should enjoy hereditarily the profits of the village of the Undrajavaram attached to Nidadavole pargana paying every year the peishcush fixed therefor at the sub-division according to the kistbund (instalments). You both should maintain our samastanam, servants, clerks, dasis and other servants. You should for the most part live in harmony with my younger brother Chiranjivi Venkatadri Appa Row. You should adopt a boy who is our sannihita (one closely related) whenever it strikes you that our samastanam should continue. In all matters both should act without quarrelling. I have this day alone caused a petition to be written and sent to the Collector of Godavari in regard to this matter. You both should without fail act according to the aforesaid paddhalis (terms)."

The Will is signed by the testator and witnessed by four witnesses, and under their names come the words :—

" We both have agreed to act according to the aforesaid terms."

and this is signed by Papamma and Chinnamma.

Chinnamma died in 1881. It was not until the year 1895 that any steps were taken with regard to the adoption of a boy, but in that year the surviving wife Papamma purported to adopt Venkataramayya, the father of Narayya the younger. This so-called adoption of Venkataramayya was declared by the Court to be invalid, and thereupon in the year 1890 Papamma purported to adopt Narayya the younger.

The Appellants contend that the proper construction of the language of the Will is that, it gives a joint power of adoption to the two wives to be exercised when they shall think it desirable that the testator's samastanam should continue. They contend that such a joint power of adoption is in itself invalid, inasmuch as only one wife can adopt, and they further say that, even if this be not so, the occasion for the exercise of the power is when the two wives should jointly decide that it was desirable that the family should be continued, and the act must then be the joint act of the two wives. If this be so, it follows that the power could not be exercised after the death of one of the two wives, since thereafter there could be neither agreement nor joint action.

It is somewhat difficult to set out precisely the contentions of the Respondents on these points. Their Counsel admit that while both the widows were living no adoption could take place without the consent of both. But they contend that the proper interpretation of the language of the Will is that when the two widows should agree on the desirability of adoption taking place and on the person to be adopted, the adoption should be carried out by one of the widows (preferably the first wife) who would thereby become in law the mother of the adopted child. They contend that a joint power of adoption is valid by Hindu Law and must be interpreted in the above sense, and further, that on the death of the one widow the power both of choice and adoption would, under the terms of the Will, pass to the survivor.

Before examining the validity of these contentions it will be well to clear up one or two points upon which their Lordships are of opinion that no reasonable doubt can exist.

In the first place, there could be no power of adoption by either or both of the widows in the present case excepting such as might be derived from the powers given by the Will. In this part of India, at all events, a widow has no power to adopt a son to a deceased husband excepting by express authority given by him in his lifetime or by Will. In the next place, only one wife can receive the child in adoption so as to step into the position of being its adoptive mother. This is evident from the cases which establish that the receiving mother acquires in the eye of the law the same position as a natural mother to such an extent that her parents become legally the maternal grandparents of the child. To hold that a child could bear such a relationship to more than one mother would be entirely contrary to settled law and would produce inextricable confusion in the law of inheritance.

But it does not follow as a matter of necessity from these considerations that a power given to more than one wife to adopt must be an invalid power. In many matters custom solves difficulties which appear to be insoluble when the questions are considered from a purely logical point of view. In the very question that is before their Lordships there are indications in the cases cited that in some parts of India such a power might perhaps be interpreted as giving a preferential right of adoption to the first wife. But their Lordships are of opinion that the validity of a joint power of adoption and its interpretation are questions of far-reaching importance in Hindu law and that in the present case the materials for deciding them are very insufficient. They would greatly regret to find themselves compelled to decide such questions on imperfect materials and inasmuch as in the view which their Lordships take of this case it is not necessary that these points should be decided they desire to express no opinion upon them, and will assume for the purposes of their decision that the Respondents are right in their contention that such a joint power of adoption given to the two widows was, if properly interpreted, a valid power, and that if they had agreed to a person to be chosen for such adoption they could have validly executed the power.

There remains the second point, i.e., whether the power given by the Will was exerciseable by the surviving widow alone after the death of the other.

The arguments of the Appellants on this point are that upon a proper construction of the Will it gives a joint power to the two wives to be exercised when they jointly come to the conclusion that it is desirable that it should be exercised, and that it should then be exercised only in case of a boy to be chosen by them jointly. As a mere matter of construction their Lordships are of opinion that the Appellants are right in this contention and in an ordinary case of the giving of a a joint power to two donees the legal consequences claimed by the Appellants would follow.

But the Respondents claim that this must not be treated as a mere question of construction. They submit that the continuation of the line of the testator must be taken to have been for religious purposes in order that he might have the advantages of an heir who could perform the religious ceremonies affecting his future life. They therefore contend that this Board should put aside all rules of law prevailing in England with regard to joint donees of a power and should, as a matter of judicial duty, give effect to the intention of the testator with respect to procuring for himself an heir by adoption, and not permit that intention to be defeated by its becoming impossible of execution by the two donees jointly by reason of the death of one of them.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this reasoning is unsound. In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain from the language of the testator what were his intentions, i.e., to construe the Will. It is true that in so doing they are entitled and bound to bear in mind other matters than merely the words used. They must consider the surrounding circumstances, the position of the testator, his family relationships, the probability that he would use words in a particular sense, and many other things which are often summed up in the somewhat picturesque figure—"The Court is entitled to put itself into the testator's armchair." Among such surrounding circumstances which the Court is bound to consider none would be more important than race and religious opinions, and the Court is bound to regard as presumably (and in many cases certainly) present to the mind of the testator influences and aims arising therefrom. But all this is solely as an aid to arriving at a right construction of the Will, and to ascertain the meaning of its language when used by that particular testator in that document. So soon as the construction is settled, the duty of the Court is to carry out the intentions as expressed, and none other. The Court is in no case justified in adding to testamentary dispositions. If they transgress any legal restrictions they must be disregarded. If they leave any eventuality unprovided for, the estate must, in case that eventuality arises, be dealt with according to the law which provides for succession of property in the absence of testamentary directions applying thereto. But the Court never adds to a Will anything which needs to be done by testamentary disposition. In all cases it must loyally carry out the Will as properly construed, and this duty is universal, and is true alike of Wills of every nationality and every religion or rank of life.

This fundamental principle does not clash with the principle that the Court will not necessarily apply English rules of construction to such a Will as we have here to deal with. These rules of construction amount in many cases to nothing more than saying that a special phrase which may be used in more than one sense shall primâ facie be deemed to be intended to bear one particular meaning, unless from the consideration of the context or the surrounding circumstances, the Court can come to the conclusion that it is there used in a different sense. In other cases the rules are the expression of such tendencies in the Court as the desire to avoid an intestacy or the presumption in favour of immediate vesting of an estate. Such rules are purely an English product based on English necessities and English habits of thought, and there would be no justification in taking them as our guide in the case of Indian Wills. Nor does this fundamental principle clash in any way with what is sometimes called "giving a liberal interpretation" to native Wills. That native testators should be ignorant of the legal phrases proper to express their intentions, or of the legal steps necessary to carry them into effect, is one of the most important of the "surrounding circumstances" which the Court must bear in mind, and it is justified in refusing to allow defects in expression in these matters to prevent the carrying out of the testator's true intentions. But those intentions must be ascertained by the proper construction of the words he uses, and once ascertained, they must not be departed from.

Applying these principles, their Lordships have to ascertain the true intentions of the testator from the language used in the Will. The words are "You should adopt a boy who is our sannihita (one closely related) whenever it strikes you that our samastanam (family) should continue." Such an adoption would have effects of two very different kinds. In the first place it would provide someone who would offer the customary oblations for the good of the soul of the testator, and in the second place it would change the succession of the property. The devolution after the death of the widows would no longer be to the persons entitled to succeed on an intestacy, but to the heirs of the person adopted. Counsel for the Respondents would have us regard the religious motive as the overmastering one, so that the intentions of the testator must be treated as if they were dictated by it alone. Their Lordships fully appreciate how strong such a motive may be expected to be in the mind of a Hindu. But in their Lordships' opinion the language of the testator points to the predominance of the secular motive. He does not direct that there should be an adoption, as he would naturally have done had he wished in all events to secure that there should be a son to perform the due religious rites. He makes it depend on the opinion of his widows whether and when an adoption should take place. It is common ground that the occasion for an adoption would not arise in the lifetime of the two widows unless they both agreed to use the power, and there is nothing which indicates any intention to interfere with their freedom of choice in the matter, whether the true interpretation be that the power was joint or several.

But this does not exhaust the materials which we have for arriving at the testator's true intentions. In judging of the light in which the directions of the testator are to be regarded, it is legitimate to look at the contemporaneous document referred to in the Will which he wrote or caused to be written with the express intent to render clear his wishes with regard to his succession. This document has, of course, no testamentary effect, but it is legitimate to look at it as one of the surrounding circumstances in order to test the soundness of the principle of interpretation pressed upon us by Counsel for the Respondents. In the Will the testator writes: "I have this day alone caused a petition to be written and sent to the Collector of Godavari in regard to this matter." This petition, which is signed by the testator and bears the same date as the Will, is substantially a repetition of it, though the language is not precisely the same. The passage relating to adoption reads thus: "That, if it should strike them (i.e., his widows) to continue the samastanam, they should adopt a boy who is my sannihita." This language emphasizes that which is expressed also in the Will, viz., that the adoption should only take place if and when the widows thought it desirable that such should be the case, or in other words, if and when they thought it desirable that the succession to the property should be changed. Had the testator been moved by an overmastering religious motive to secure that there should be someone to act as his son after his death, it is inconceivable that he would have used such language or made such provisions relating to the future adoption of a son. He would have directed that an adoption should take place and not left it to depend on the problematical concurrence of his widows in their views as to its desirabilty.

For what it is worth, it is clear that this was the interpretation put upon the Will by the widows themselves. It will be remembered that they signed the Will at the date of its execution and promised to act according to its terms. Three days after this they write to the Collector of Godavari referring to these provisions of the Will in the words "and that if it should strike us that the samastanam should continue we should adopt a boy who is our sannihita." The testator died in 1864 His widow Chinnamma died in 1881 leaving Papamma surviving her. It is not until 1885, four years after the death of Chinnamma, that any steps to adopt a boy are taken It is clear therefore that the widows who were acquainted with the provisions of the testator's Will at the time and undertook to carry them into effect did not interpret them as doing more than leaving them quite free to adopt or not as they might think desirable.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that in the present case there is nothing which requires or justifies them in interpreting the provisions of the Will with regard to the adoption in any special way arising from the fact that the testator was a Hindu. They must adhere to the plain meaning of the language used. So construing it they are of opinion that it gives to the widows jointly the power to adopt a son should an occasion arise which in their opinion makes it desirable so to do. The power is a joint power and the occasion on which it is to be exercised depends on their joint opinion. In other words, the exercise of the power is vested in the discretion of the joint donees. Now, it is clearly the law that in such a case the death of one of the donees puts an end to the joint power. This is not by virtue of any peculiar doctrine of English law or of any series of English decisions. It flows from the nature of a joint power. If power is given to A. and B. personæ designatæ to do an act if and when they think it desirable the occasion cannot arise nor can the power be exercised unless they are both living and in agreement as to the act. This cannot be the case after the death of one of them and the consequence is that the survivor cannot do the act because he has not the warrant of the agreement of his late colleague nor can he then do the act, seeing that the authority to do it is only given to the two acting jointly. The case is different when the power is vested not in personæ designatæ but in the occupants for the time being of a specified office such as executors or trustees, but that is not the case which we have to consider here.

The point may perhaps be put in a simpler form not involving any appeal to legal doctrines as to joint donees of a power. Their Lordships are of opinion that the words of the Will, when properly construed, relate to choice and adoption by the two widows acting jointly. Hence those words refer only to the period of time when both widows are living. The Will is silent as to the period after the death of one of the widows and if their Lordships were to hold that Papamma could adopt a son after Chinnamma's death they would be providing for a period of time which the testator left unprovided for, and unnoticed in his Will, i.e., they would be making an addition to his testamentary dispositions which is a thing that no Court is entitled to do.

It follows therefore that at the death of Chinnamma the power to adopt given to his widows by the testator came to an end, and therefore the alleged adoption of Narayya the younger is of no validity.

On the consolidated Appeals (judgment in one of which has already been delivered on the 24th July 1913) their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty to affirm the Decree of the High Court of Madras, dated the 20th November 1905, so far as it dismissed with costs Appeal No. 32 of 1904 and to reverse the said Decree and the Decree of even date therewith so far as they dismissed with costs Appeals Nos. 122 and 123 of 1900, and allowed with costs Appeal No. 41 of 1904, and that it ought to be declared that the adoption of Narayya Appa Row, the son of Venkataramayya Appa Row, the Zamindar of Medur, and Venkataramayya Appa Row, his wife, by Papamma, the widow of Narayya Appa Row, the Zamindar of Nidadavole, was invalid, and that on the death of Venkayamma Row, Rangiah Appa Row and Venkata Narasimha Appa Row, both now deceased, became entitled as reversionary heirs to the estate of Medur and the lands and moveable properties appertaining thereto, and further that the said estate and the lands with mesne profits and the moveable property appertaining thereto, ought to be divided into moieties between the Appellants, viz.: (1) Venkatadri Appa Row, the only son of the said Rangiah Appa Row, as to one such moiety, and (2) Meka Venkataramayya Appa Row and Sobhanadri Appa Row, the two sons of Venkata Narasimha Appa Row, as to the other moiety.

With regard to the costs, their Lordships think that as to the Nidadavole estate there ought to be no costs in the Privy Council, and as to the Medur estate there ought to be no costs either in the Privy Council or in the Courts below.

Agreement for purchase and sale of immoveable property—Condition for return of earnest-money, on non-approval of title by purchaser's solicitor—Non-approval must be reasonable and not mala fide—Title, approval or rejection, condition as to, in agreement of sale.

Where an agreement for purchase and sale contained a condition for the return of the earnest money on the vendor's title not being approved by the purchaser's solicitor and the solicitor disapproved of the title on the ground amongst others that one of the former owners had mortgaged the property pending a partition suit at which the property was sold by auction under directions of Court and purchased by the present vendor's predecessor in title for value and the vendor was unable to furnish any information regarding the mortgage but urged that it was inoperative and that his title being derived from a purchaser without notice was not open to objection:

Held—That it cannot be said that the solicitor was unreasonable in refusing to accept the title inasmuch as he cannot be expected to go into any question of evidence as to whether the purchase was without notice or not; and, further, there being nothing to show that he acted in bad faith or was unreasonable in advising his client to reject the title, the intending purchaser was entitled to get back from the vendor the earnest money and his solicitor's costs for investigation of title as was stipulated for in the contract.

This was a suit instituted by the Plaintiff against the Defendant for the recovery of the earnest money of Rs. 1,001 paid by the Plaintiff to the Defendant for the purchase of the premises No. 13, Marsden Street. Cl. 5 of the agreement of sale provided that unless the purchaser's attorney approved the title the sale was not to be completed and the vendor moreover was to pay his costs and to refund the earnest money. The Plaintiff's solicitor was not satisfied with certain particulars of title produced by the Defendant's solicitor. These were principally that the Defendants were unable to furnish particulars as to whether a certain mortgage was subsisting or not and further that an order obtained from the District Judge of Lahore for the sale of an infant's share for the highest price available was indefinite. The Defendant's solicitor offered to get the order of the District Judge amended but could not furnish any information regarding the mortgage but contended that the title of his client was good inasmuch as his predecessor had purchased the property at a sale held under the directions of the Court for value and without notice. The Plaintiff's solicitor would not, however, accept the title and demanded the return of the earnest money and his costs in connection with the investigation of title. The cls. 3, 4 and 5 of the agreement for purchase Defendant that he had advised his cilent not to accept the title. He asked for the return of the earnest money and for the payment of his bill of costs. In that letter the attorney said that the answers to his requisitions were not satisfactory and he specified the following items: that when this property was sold in a partition suit there was no proof of the payment of the consideration money by the purchaser at the sale directed in the partition proceedings to the commissioner of partition; that he was unable to get any proof of such payment from search in the record of those proceedings; that the order of the Lahore Court authorising the Defendant No. 1 to sell the infant's share was insufficient and unsatisfactory, and an amendment of that order was necessary; that no explanation had been given regarding a mortgage deed affecting this property which he had discovered during his search for encumbrances, the deed appearing to have been executed by one Radha Nath Sircar. In the first requisition on title, the Defendants were called upon to produce certain original documents or authenticated copies thereof. The Defendants said that they had not any in their possession, and they asked Plaintiff's attorney to inspect the records of Suit No. 342 of 1879 in which the partition proceedings had taken place. A search was thereupon made by the Plaintiff's attorney and an objection was taken by him that although the conveyance whlch was the source of the title of the Defendant's father recited that a certificate was to be appended to the conveyance shewing payment to the Registrar of the money derived from the sale of the property directed by this Court in the partition proceedings, yet such a certificate was wanting. It seems that in the records he searched he was unable to find any proof of such payment to the Registrar. No doubt the circumstances showed that the amount must have been paid to the Registrar. Since the institution of the suit and in fact after the first day's hearing upon further time being obtained by the Defendants and upon a search being made by them, the Registrar's Sale Book has been found in which an entry appears shewing payment of the money which the conveyance recited had been paid. Since the attorney searched the records and had taken upon himself the duty of making the search, I do not think that his failure to obtain this evidence was by itself sufficient ground for rejecting the title.

The second objection relates to the Lahore District Judge's order. The order authorised the adult Defendant to sell to the person who offered the highest price. This order seems to me insufficient. There was no difficulty in mentioning the substance of the agreement to the District Judge and getting his sanction to the proposed sale to the Plaintiff and the position taken by the Defendant's attorney, that as the terms of the agreement between the parties were vague, and the actual amount to be paid by the Plaintiff remained undetermined, the agreement to sell to him could not be mentioned in the application for the Judge's sanction. This position does not appear to me to be reasonable. The agreement was for a particular sum liable to deduction at a particular rate, for deficiency, if any, in the quantity of land mentioned in the agreement. The terms are in no way vague, and I cannot say that it was not a just objection on the part of the Plaintiff's attorney that the order authorising the sale was unsatisfactory.

W. P. ABRO v. PROMOTHO NATH MUKERJEE.

The next point relates to the mortgage which the Plaintiff's attorney found outstanding upon the search made by him and which appeared to have been executed by one Radha Nath Sircar for Rs. 10,000 in favour of one Ram Gopal Bose. When the Plaintiff's attorney asked for further information about the matter, the Defendants' answer was as follows :—"The vendors have no knowledge whatsoever of the existence of any such mortgage. If Radha Nath executed any such mortgage during the pendency of the Suit No. 342 of 1879, the sale would not be binding upon the purchaser for value without notice at an auction sale ordered in the said suit." They asked whether the mortgage in question was in respect of the premises purchased by the vendors. It appears that the mortgage covered the premises in suit and also other properties. The answer to the Plaintiff's requisition by the Defendants is unsatisfactory. The Defendants suggested that as their father was the purchaser for value without notice, the mortgage was inoperative. Now, the question as to whether the purchase was without notice or not, is matter of evidence, and I am not prepared to say that the Plaintiff was not justified in requiring satisfactory explanation. In the absence of such explanation I do not think he could be forced to take the title offered.

In addition to the grounds taken on the requisitions, two other grounds which do not appear to me of much value have been taken by the Plaintiff's Counsel, namely, that there was nothing to show that the vendors fully represented the interest of Soshi Bhusan Mukerjee. A further ground was taken about the absence of the Trust Deed which was the subject-matter of litigation in the suit above-mentioned and also the absence of other title-deeds. Now, so far as the title-deeds are concerned, they appeared not to be in the possession of the Defendants and they did not even offer to give any copies or procure any copies for the Plaintiff.

In the agreement for the sale to the Plaintiff the express provision was that the title was to be subject to the approval of the Plaintiff's attorney therein named. It seems quite clear from paragraph 4 of the agreement that what was intended was that the title was to be found good and approved of by the purchaser's solicitor. Although in the written statement the rejection of title by the Plaintiff's solicitor was charged to be mala fide and unreasonable, learned Counsel for the Defendants stated that he did not make any charge of mala fides against the Plaintiff or his attorney but that he rested his case solely on the ground that their rejection was "unreasonable." It is clear that the agreement expressly stipulated for a person therein designated to approve the title on behalf of the Plaintiff. In Bartlett v. Greene (1), Lord Coleridge, L. C. J., said that such a stipulation was a reasonable stipulation; that it could not be treated as having no meaning; that it was not correct to say that the stipulation for the approval of the solicitor puts into the contract no other terms than what the law would have implied. It was an express stipulation, and therefore effect was to be given to it. Justice Brett in the same case said that the stipulation was an ordinary and important one, and unless the approval of the solicitor was withheld unreasonably or mala fide (which was not alleged in and sale, which are material to this case, are as follows :—

"3. The vendors shall make over to the purchaser's solicitor all the title-deeds relating to the property on the day following the execution of these presents and the purchase shall be completed within the 15th day of December 1911 provided the title be approved of by the purchaser's solicitor."

"4. If the title be found good and be approved of by the purchaser's solicitor then the vendors will execute a proper conveyance in favour of the purchaser or his nominee or nominees in which the vendors shall make all necessary parties join and the purchaser shall be entitled to the possession of the property from the date of the purchase, all outgoings prior thereto being borne and paid by the vendors."

"5. If the title be not approved by the purchaser's solicitors the vendors shall on demand refund the earnest money and shall pay the costs of the investigation of title and if after the title being approved of, the purchaser fails to complete the purchase he shall forfeit the earnest money as liquidated damages and the vendor shall be entitled to enforce specific performance of his agreement."

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment.

The Defendants alleged that in rejecting the title the purchaser's solicitor did not act bonâ fide and that in doing so he acted unreasonably.

Mr. N. Sircar (with him Mr. P. N. Chatterjee) for the Defendants.—If I show that the purchaser's attorney was unreasonable that is enough. I do not go into the question of mala fides. I say that the disapproval was unreasonable.

CHAUDHURI, J.—Some meaning must be attached to a clause of that character?

Mr. Sircar.—We have made out a good title by amendment of order for sale of infant's share. We can get the order amended.

CHAUDHURI, J.—Until that order is forthcoming have you any title to sell?

Mr. Sircar.—Pending the suit Radhanath mortgaged his share in 10 properties.

CHAUDHURI, J.—What has happened to that mortgage?

Mr. Sircar.—I do not know. It is not necessary for us to know. There was a partition of family properties. It may not have been by a suit. It may have been an amicable partition. (Reads conveyance.)

Mr. Sircar.—We have been in possession since 1840. There is a clear admission by the parties. Everything showing that the money was paid.

CHAUDHURI, J.—On the date you entered into an agreement to sell had you any right to sell on behalf of the infants?

Mr. Sircar.—The question whether the person who bought was the highest bidder is a matter which may be difficult to prove. That does not affect my authority to sell. Rejection must not be an unreasonable one. Fry on Specific Performance, p. 143. Treacher & Co., Ltd. v. Mahomedally Adamji Peerbhoy (6).

Mr. H. D. Bose (with Mr. S. K. Mullick) for the Plaintiff contended that when the vendor is able neither to convey himself nor has the power to compel a conveyance from any other person, the purchaser as soon as he finds this to be the case may repudiate: and he is not bound to wait to see whether the vendor can induce some third person who has the power to join in making a good title to the property. Halsbury, Vol. 25, p. 403. Conditions of sale must be construed strictly against the person making them [Greaves v. Wilson (8)]. Our disapproval of the title was reasonable. There was the outstanding mortgage. The purchaser must have the legal estate and cannot be compelled to take an equitable estate only. [Abel v. Heathcote (9), Freeland v. Pearson (10)]; Williams, p. 472. A vendor cannot make a good title if he is unable to pay off an existing mortgage or procure the mortgagees to release their charges. (Williams, p. 166). Requisitions as to whether there are incumbrances remaining unsatisfied are requisitions as to title. (Halsbury, Vol. 25, pp. 355-6). It is not merely a matter of conveyancing. Purchaser must get such a title as he can force upon a re-purchaser from him. A marketable title is one which at all times and under all circumstances may be forced upon an unwilling purchaser, [Pyrke v. Waddingham (11)] and to force a title upon a purchaser the opinion of the Court must be so clear that it does not apprehend that another Judge would form a different opinion. [Rodgers v. Waterhouse (12)]. If purchaser has paid the purchase-money or any part of it and the purchase ultimately goes off without any default on his part he is entitled to a lien on the land for the amount he has paid. This rule extends to costs also. Halsbury, Vol. 25, p. 367; Kitton v. Hewett (13), In re Furneaux and Airds Contract (14). Reference was further made to Freer v. Hesse (15) and to Nottingham Patent Brick & Tile Co. v. Butler (16), Greenslade v. Dare (17); Williams, pp. 131, 134, 143, 166; Banning v. Griffin (18), Greaves v. Greenwood (19), Re Jackson (20), Weston v. Savage (21), Brewer v. Broadwood (22), Lee v. Soames (23), Halkett v. Dudley (24), (discussed as bad law in Williams, p. 186).

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CHAUDHURI, J.—This is a suit for the refund of earnest money paid in view of an intended purchase by the Plaintiff of the premises mentioned in the plaint, with interest and costs. There was an agreement on the 10th November 1911 for the sale by the Defendant to the Plaintiff of the said premises subject to the approval of title by Mr. B. Sreemany, solicitor for the purchaser. Cls. 3 and 4 of which run thus "The vendor shall make over to the purchaser's solicitor all the title-deeds relating to the property on the day following the execution of these presents and the purchase shall be completed within 15th day of December 1911 provided the title be approved of by the purchaser's solicitor—" (Cl. 3). "If the title be found good and be approved of by the purchaser's solicitor then the vendors will execute a proper conveyance in favour of the purchaser or his nominee or nominees in which the vendor shall make all necessary parties join, and the purchaser shall be entitled to the possession of the property from the date of the purchase, all outgoings prior thereto being borne and paid by the vendors"—(Cl. 4). Requisitions of title were sent in. Answers were received, and eventually the Plaintiff's solicitor, Mr. Sreemany, by his letter of the 22nd December 1911, informed the

DARBARI PANJARA and others, Petitioners,
v.
BHOTI ROY and another, Opposite Party.

Indian High Courts Act, 1861, sec. 15—Sonthal Perganas Act (XXXVII of 1855), sec. 1, cl. 2, sec. 2—Sonthal Perganas Justice Regulation (5 of 1893), secs. 7, 9, 15, 27—Regulation 2 of 1886, sec. 25—Regulation 3 of 1872—Bengal Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), sec. 12, 14—Statutory rules for the guidance of Civil Courts in Sonthal Perganas—Eviction of tenant in execution of decree for rent—Proper court to determine eviction—Sanction of Deputy Commissioner, meaning and effect of—Constitution of Courts in Sonthal Perganas—Jurisdiction of High Court to revise orders of Sub-Deputy Collectors, Sub-Divisional Officers and Deputy Commissioners in Sonthal Perganas.

On the application of the decree-holder landlord for execution of a decree for arrears of rent amounting to less than one hundred rupees by ejectment of the tenants the Sub-Deputy Collector of Deoghur in the Sonthal Perganas by whom the decree was made held that the judgment-debtors might be ejected from a portion of the holding and submitted the record to the Sub-Divisional Officer who recorded his opinion that the tenants should be evicted from the entire holding and with this recommendation forwarded the record to the Deputy Commissioner for orders. The Deputy Commissioner sanctioned eviction from the entire holding:

Held—That the eviction in execution can be effected only by the Court executing the decree and the proceedings for ejectment of the tenants were not taken in conformity with the provisions of the Regulation and the statutory rules on the subject, inasmuch as the question of ejectment of the tenants from the entire holding never came under the consideration of the Court executing the decree, namely, the Court of the Sub-Deputy Collector.

That sec. 25 of Reg. II of 1886 which was framed for the protection of the raiyat was never intended to be used to his detriment in the manner in which it had been applied in the present case.

But it was not competent to the High Court to interfere under sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. The power of superintendence under that section can be exercised only over Courts which are subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court; and the Courts of the Sub-Deputy Collector, the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Deputy Commissioner were not Courts subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court inasmuch as under sec. 15 of Reg. 5 of 1893 the Court of the Commissioner is constituted the High Court in relation to all suits tried in the Courts of officers appointed under sec. 2 of Act XXXVII of 1855.

The fact that the same person was appointed to act as Sub-Divisional Officer and Subordinate Judge and the same individual was appointed to discharge the duties of the Deputy Commissioner and District Judge did not make their orders as Sub-Divisional Officer or as Deputy Commissioner subject to the superintendence of the High Court in the same manner as orders passed by them in their capacity as Subordinate Judge or District Judge.

That the suit being valued at less than one thousand rupees was rightly tried in the Court of the Sub-Deputy Collector and the execution proceeding was properly commenced in the Court in which the suit had been brought and the decree made, and in relation to that Court the Court of the Commissioner was the High Court. The fact that the market value of the land from which the Petitioners were ejected might be proved to exceed one thousand rupees in value, was immaterial for the determination of the question whether the High Court had jurisdiction to revise the order of the Sub-Deputy Collector.

This was a Rule issued on the 11th of February 1913 against an order of H. Allanson, Esq., Deputy Commissioner, Sonthal Perganas, dated the 11th of July 1912, confirming that of B. A. Guest, Esq., Sub-Divisional Officer, Deoghur, da ed the 14th of June 1912.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

One Bhoti Rai, mustagir of a village in the Sonthal Pergunnahs, got a decree against one Darbari Panjara for arrears of rent in respect of a raiyati holding. The decree not being satisfied, the Sub-Deputy Collector recommended eviction of the tenant from a portion of the holding. On the 17th February 1911, the Deputy Commissioner sanctioned eviction of the tenant from the entire holding. On the 21st December 1911, this holding was settled by the Sub-Divisional Officer with one Beni Roy. Darbari Panjara applied before the Sub-Divisional Officer on the 10th June 1912 for payment of the decretal amount and for getting back possession of the holding. This application was rejected and an appeal preferred against the order of rejection to the Deputy Commissioner was dismissed on the 11th July 1912. The rule was issued to show cause why the said orders should not be set aside.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose (with him Babu Naresh Chandra Sinha) for the Opposite Party.—The High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere. Refers to sec. 15 of the Charter, and secs. 15 and 17 of Reg. V of 1893.

Babu Nares Chandra Sinha followed. The orders were passed according to law. Refers to Sonthal Pergunnahs Civil Rules, sec. 29 and sec. 25 of Reg. II of 1886. The High Court has no Appellate Jurisdiction or power of superintendence over the Deputy Commissioner, Sub-Divisional Officer and the Sub Deputy Collector. Refers to Part II of Reg. V of 1893. The test is, whether the Court in question is subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court in respect of any class of cases. If not, the High Court cannot interfere under the Charter. The Deputy Commissioner and the other officers concerned are not subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court in respect of any class of cases. Refers to Abdul Karim v. Municipal Officer (1), Municipal Officer v. Ismail (2), Rhimbai v. Mariam (3), Khoja Shivji v. Hasam Gulam (6) and In re Thompson (4).

Babus Surendra Nath Ghosal and Pankaj Kumar Ganguly (amicus curiæ) in reply.—The order for total eviction, when the recommendation was for partial eviction is without jurisdiction. Refers to r. 25 of Reg. II of 1886. The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere, as (1) the land is worth more than Rs. 1,000 (refers to the proviso to sec. 2 of Act 37 of 1855) and as (2) the Deputy Commissioner and the Sub-Divisional Officers in respect of suits valued at over Rs. 1,000 are subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court. that case), a contracting party was entitled to be excused from the contract on the ground of that approval being withheld. It seems that his Lordship used the expression "unreasonable" there as an alternative for the expression "mala fide," and practically as co-extensive with it for purposes of the decision in that case. The leading case in this Court is that of Sree Gopal Mullick v. Ram Charan Nuskar (2). It was decided by Wilson, J., after a careful consideration of the leading English cases up to that date, including Hudson v. Buck (3), Hussey v. Horne-Payne (4), containing the dictum of Lord Cairns. His Lordship Mr. Justice Wilson held that the decision of the attorneys was conclusive unless there was some want of good faith, or unless their objections were distinctly unreasonable. In Hudson v. Buck (3), Lord Justice Fry held that the disapproval to be of no avail must be shewn to be "utterly unreasonable objections to the title." Sir George Jessell, M. R., in that case expressed his approval of the observations made by Lord Justice Fry. In this Court the decision in Sree Gopal Mullick v. Ram Charan Nuskar (2) has been followed on several occasions; see Cohen v. Sutherland (5). My attention has been called to the judgment of Mr. Justice Davar in Treacher & Co., Ltd. v. Mahomedally Adamji Peerbhoy (6), where his Lordship follows the decision in Black v. Wood (7) after discussing the case of Sree Gopal Mullick v. Ram Charan Nuskar (2) and the other cases I have mentioned. In Black v. Wood (7), Lord Justice Lindley held that in order for the vendor to succeed in a suit asking for specific performance of such a contract, it was necessary for him to show that the purchaser's attorney had approved the title, or that such a title had been tendered as made it unreasonable to disapprove it. The way that the cases have dealt with the question of unreasonableness seems to me as almost meaning the same thing as mala fide. The expressions "distinctly unreasonable" and "utterly unreasonable" and the juxtaposition of the expressions "mala fide" or unreasonable" lead me to that conclusion.

I cannot hold in this case that there was such unreasonableness on the part of the Plaintiff's attorney. It might be that the order from the District Judge of Lahore could have been amended, or that there would have been no difficulty in getting it amended, but the order as tendered to the other side was clearly not an order authorising this particular sale. It may have been the highest value offered for the premises, but there was nothing to show it was. It may also be that so far as Radha Nath Sircar's mortgage was concerned the predecessor of the Defendants purchased the property without notice of the mortgage, but I do not think that I can compel an unwilling purchaser to take title which is dependent upon evidence whether the purchase was with or without notice. An offer was made on behalf of the Defendants that they were ready to reduce the price stipulated for, in order to safeguard the interests of the purchaser in respect of any likely claims against him arising upon the mortgage. But a purchaser cannot be compelled to accept an indemnity or a reduction. It was argued that the facts of the case showed that the mortgage was of no value and that in any event it did not affect the title, but was merely a question of conveyancing. The mortgage was one of the year 1886. There is nothing to skew as to what had happened in respect of that mortgage. It may very well be that there are no claims outstanding in respect of that mortgage; but I cannot hold that it is unreasonable for the attorney who had the approval of the title in this case, upon the facts placed before him that he unreasonably rejected the title offered. I notice that he did not receive much help from the Defendants' side. I may add that learned Counsel when he was opening the case for the Defendants was instructed to make statements relating to this mortgage which have since transpired to be utterly incorrect. Up to the date of the hearing of the suit nothing was apparently known by the Defendants about this mortgage. They had taken no trouble to find out anything about it. Even on the day of the hearing they had no information relating to it, although in their letter of the 4th January they said that they would make enquiries and inform the Plaintiff, they had apparently made no enquiries and certainly gave the Plaintiff no information. On the first day of the hearing Defendants' Counsel opened that Radha Nath Sarcar had, pending the Suit No. 342 of 1878, mortgaged his 1-6th undivided share in ten properties including the one in suit. He was instructed that in a partition suit, the number of which he could not give, this property had been dealt with: that he was not certain that there had been any partition suit at all; but, as there were 10 properties, the Defendants would be entitled to require specific performance of the agreement in suit by offering a reasonable reduction in the value. The case was then adjourned to allow further search which however elicited nothing further about the mortgage, except that in the conditions of sale the mortgage was not disclosed nor anything mentioned about it in the notification of sale under which the sale was held in 1887. Reference was made on behalf of the Defendants to their letter of the 13th January in which they had said that they wanted to clear up the title, to which the Plaintiff did not reply. But at no time had the Defendants, up to the time of the suit and even up to the date of the first hearing, given any assistance to the Plaintiff or his attorney. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, the suit must be decreed, namely, the sum of Rs. 1,001 is directed to be refunded to the Plaintiff with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of payment until suit. The Plaintiff is also entitled to the costs of investigating title amounting to Rs. 57-3-9. He is also entitled to the costs of the suit on Scale No. II. The parties having agreed that no evidence was to be given in the counter action and that it was to be governed by the decision in this case, I dismiss that suit, but do not award the Plaintiff in the first suit any further costs except the costs of filing his written statement in the counter suit. I will allow the costs of the written statement and the preparation of three briefs. Interest at 6 per cent. on the decree.

This Rule raises a question of first impression as to the true scope of sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. The solution of the question raised is by no means free from difficulty, which has been enhanced by the circumstances that the Petitioners appeared in person in support of the application. But we have received considerable assistance from Babu Surendra Nath Ghosal who acted as amicus curiæ, and not only placed before us a full and clear statement of the facts of the case but also drew our attention to the legislative provisions applicable to the matter.

The facts, so far as it is necessary to state them for the elucidation of the question of law involved, may be briefly narrated. The Petitioners were tenants under one Bhoti Roy in Rohini within the Sonthal Perganas. On the 1st April 1910, the landlord obtained a decree for Rs. 82-8-0 which was the arrear of rent due for the year 1315 and the first three quarters of the year 1316. This decree was made by the Sub-Deputy Collector of Deoghur. On the 16th January 1911, the decree-holder applied to the Sub-Deputy Collector for execution by ejectment, on the allegation that the judgment-debtors had no moveable property and previous applications to realise the judgment-debt by attachment and sale of moveables had failed. The Sub-Deputy Collector held that under these circumstances the judgment-debtors might be ejected from a portion of the holding and submitted the record to the Sub-Divisional Officer for orders on the 16th January 1911. On the 4th February 1911, the Sub-Divisional Officer recorded his opinion that the tenants should be evicted from the entire holding, and with this recommendation forwarded the record to the Deputy Commissioner for orders. On the 17th February 1911, the Deputy Commissioner sanctioned eviction from the entire holding. The records were then returned to the Sub-Divisional Officer who proceeded to eject the judgment-debtors and called upon the Sub-Deputy Collector to arrange for resettlement of the lands. No tenant, however, came forward to take settlement upon payment of the arrears due. The judgment-debtors also expressed their inability to pay the arrears. The Sub-Divisional Officer thereupon ordered that the decree-holder might keep possession for one year after which the lands should be returned to the judgment-debtors. Subsequently one Beni Roy offered to take settlement, and his application was granted. The judgment-debtor thereupon objected substantially on the ground that this Beni Roy was no other than the decree-holder himself but their objection was overruled both by the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Deputy Commissioner, although they offered to pay up the judgment-debt in full. We are now invited to set aside these proceedings for eviction as irregular and without jurisdiction. There is little room for controversy that the proceedings have been throughout irregular.

Rules for the guidance of Civil Courts in the Sonthal Perganas issued by the Local Government on the 18th August 1905 under sec. 27 of Reg. V of 1893 read with sec. 1, cl. 2 of Act XXXVII of 1855, a tenant whose right is not saleable may, in execution of a decree for rent, be with the Deputy Commissioner's consent evicted, and the land may then be resettled. It is plain that the eviction in execution can be effected only by the Court executing the decree. This view is not affected by sec. 25 of Reg. II of 1186, which provides for the exemption of raiyats from liability to ejectment except by order of the Deputy Commissioner. In the case before us, the question of ejectment of the tenants from the entire holding never came under the consideration of the Court executing the decree. Sec. 25 of Reg. II of 1886 which was framed for the protection of the raiyat, was never intended to be used to his detriment in the manner in which it has been applied in the case before us. The procedure contemplated by the Legislature is that the Execution Court determines whether or not the decree is to be executed by ejectment, and the safeguard is provided that if the Execution Court decides in favour of ejectment, the order is not to be carried out until it has been sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner. It could never have been intended that the scope of the order as made by the Execution Cou t should be widened by the Deputy Commissioner ; as a matter of fact, this has been done in the present case without any notice to the raiyat. It is further plain that even after the Deputy Commissioner has given his sanction, there may be no ejectment in fact, because, if the decree is satisfied, it is open to the Execution Court to terminate the proceeding. In these circumstances, we are opinion that the proceedings for ejectment of the Petitioners have not been taken in conformity with the provisions of the Regulation and the Statutory Rules on the subject.

The question now arises whether it is competent to this Court to interfere in the exercise of the powers conferred on it by sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. This power of superintendence can be exercised only over Cours which are subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court. The question is consequently reduced to this, viz., whether the Courts of the Sub-Deputy Collector, the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Deputy Commisssioner are Courts subject to the App llate Jurisdiction of this Court. To determine this ques ion, we must examine the constitu ion of these Cour s as defined in Reg. V of 1893 which was framed wi h a view to make provisions for the administration of criminal and civil justice in the Sonthal Perganas. Sec. 7 of this Regulation provides for the establishment under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, of two grades of Courts, viz., the Court of the District Judge, and the Courts of the Subordinate Judges. Sec. 12 provides for the establishment by the Local Government under the Sonthal Perganas Act, 1855 (Act XXXVII of 1855) of four grades of Courts, viz., the Court of the Commissioner, the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, the Courts of the Sub-Divisional Officers and the Courts of the Depu y Collectors not in charge of a Sub-Division, and Sub Deputy Collectors. Sec. 9 of the Regulation defines the jurisdiction of the District Judge and of the Subordinate Judges, and restricts it to suits of which the value exceeds one thousand rupees, and which are not

excluded from their cognizance by Reg. III of 1872. Sec. 14 similarly deals with the question of the jurisdiction of the Court of Deputy Collectors or Sub-Deputy Collectors, Sub-Divisional Officers or the Deputy Commissioner. It is sufficient to state for our present purpose that a Sub-Deputy Collector has jurisdiction to try suits of the value of one hundred rupees, provided such suits are not cognizable either by a Court established in the Sonthal Perganas under the Bengal Civil Courts Act or by a Settlement Officer under the Sonthal Perganas Settlement Regulation. It is consequently plain that there is a fundamental distinction made in the Regulation between the two classes of Courts, namely, the Courts established under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, and the Courts established under the Sonthal Perganas Act. This distinction is accentuated by two circumstances. In the first place, sec. 2 of the Sonthal Perganas Act, 1855, read with sec. 9 of the Sonthal Perganas Justice Regulation, 1893, provides that in the trial of civil suits in Courts established under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, the general laws and Regulations are to be applied, whereas by sec. 1, cl. 1, of the Sonthal Perganas Act, 1855, the trial of suits in the Courts of officers appointed under the Sonthal Perganas Act is removed from the operation of the general laws and Regulations and by sec. 1, cl. 2 is governed by "directions" issued by the Lieutenant-Governor. In the second place, under sec. 15 of Reg. V of 1893, the Court of the Deputy Commissioner is constituted the District Court and the Court of the Commissioner is constituted the High Court in relation to all suits tried in the Courts of officers appointed under sec. 2 of Act XXXVII of 1855. The position plainly is that the Legislature contemplated the establishment of two entirely distinct series of Courts in the Sonthal Perganas, each invested with jurisdiction over specified classes of cases to be tried according to the procedure prescribed for each class. In the case before us, as already stated, the suit for rent was valued at less than one thousand rupees, and was rightly tried in the Court of the Sub-Deputy Collector. The execution proceeding was properly commenced in the Court in which the suit had been brought and the decree made. In relation to that Court, the Court of the Commissioner is the High Court, and it is impossible for us to hold that the Court of the Sub-Deputy Collector is a Court subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this High Court. In has been contended that the market value of the land from which the Petitioners have been ejected may be proved to exceed rupees one thousand in value. But this is a circumstance obviously immaterial for the determination of the question raised before us. The Sub-Deputy Collector had unquestionably jurisdiction to entertain the suit for rent, to make a decree therein, and to execute that decree, if need be, by ejectment of the judgment-debtors from their holding. The Court of the Sub Deputy Collector in this matter is subordinate to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer, the Deputy Commissioner and the Commissioner; it cannot in any sense be deemed subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this Court. It has finally been argued that inasmuch as the same person is appointed to act as Sub-Divisional Officer and Subordinate Judge, while the same individual is appointed to discharge the duties of the Deputy Commissioner and the District Judge, their orders as Sub-Divisional

DARBARI PANJARA v. BHOTI ROY.

Officer or as Deputy Commissioner are subject to the superintendence of this High Court precisely in the same manner as the orders passed by them in their capacity as Subordinate Judge or District Judge. This argument is obviously fallacious. We are concerned not with the individuals who preside over Courts, but the Courts as Institutions or Tribunals empowered to hear and determine controversies between parties litigants. From this point of view, the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer is entirely distinct from the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The case before us has no analogy to the cases to which our attention was drawn on behalf of the Petitioners, namely, Abdul Karim v. Municipal Officer (1), affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Municipal Officer v. Ismail (2) ; Rhimbai v. Mariam (3) in which the question arose as to the status of the Resident and Assistant Resident at Aden, and In re Thompson (4), where the question arose as to the status of the Court of Record of Moulmein. No useful assistance can be derived from these cases, as the question raised before us must be determined in view of the nature of the constitution of the Courts in the Sonthal Perganas established under sec. 2 of the Sonthal Perganas Act, 1855. The view we take is in accord with that adopted in Gholam Najaf Mian v. Panchanon Gupta (5).

The result is that this Rule is discharged, but we make no order as to costs.

MANINDRA CHANDRA GHOSE, Petitioner,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 306, 439—Indian Penal Code, secs. 34, 307—Quashing of proceedings—Verdict of not guilty on charge of conspiracy in favour of co-accused at previous trial—Effect on accused in supplementary trial on charge under sec. 307 read with sec. 34, I. P. C.—Recalling of warrant after acquittal of co-accused—Jurisdiction of District Magistrate to issue fresh warrant on same materials—Verdict of jury, repugnancy in, effect of, in Indian law—Opinion of Judge and jury, weight to be attached to—Sec. 34, I. P. C., necessary elements in.

In a previous trial two persons were tried for having conspired with one B (against whom a warrant had been issued but who was not before the Court) and two others named and others unknown to kill one M or to cause grievous hurt to him. They were acquitted by the unanimous verdict of the jury whereupon the warrant against B was recalled, but subsequently the District Magistrate issued a fresh warrant against B and proceedings were started against him under sec. 307 read with sec. 34, I. P. C.,

Held (on an application by B for the quashing of the proceedings)—That the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case and issue fresh warrant without further materials or enquiry if he was of opinion that the evidence brought the accused within the purview of the law.

As to the contention that the case for the prosecution in the previous trial being one of conspiracy between the accused then before the Court and the present accused and that charge having failed, the present proceeding could not go on :

MANINDRA CHANDRA GHOSE v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Held, agreeing with the view expressed in ROMESH CHANDRA BANERJEE v. THE EMPEROR (1)—That the repugnancy in the verdict of a jury in India is not in itself sufficient to justify the quashing of a conviction; and the technicalities which are borrowed from the English law and founded on ideas as to the sacred character of a verdict by a jury whose findings of fact are unknown, cannot be imported so as to give to verdicts of juries in India a character which by the express provisions of law does not attach to them.

Where two of the accused at the previous trial were acquitted by the Judge agreeing with the jury on account of the evidence of their identification being weak:

Held—That this did not affect the evidence of identification of the present accused even by the same witnesses, as the question of his identification was not before the jury at that trial.

That, in the circumstances, where the Judge had expressed a clear opinion and the jury had expressed none, the High Court ought not to interfere with the ordinary course of justice by quashing the proceedings against the present accused.

In this country the opinion of the Judge is to be weighed by the High Court in exactly the same balance as the opinion of the jury.

Sec. 34, I. P. C., does not involve abetment and therefore does not imply any conspiracy and does not require proof that any particular accused was responsible for the commission of the actual offence and the present proceeding under sec. 307/34, I. P. C., could not be quashed on the ground that there was no suggestion at any stage of the previous trial that any particular accused was responsible for the offence.

(1) 18 C. W. N. 498 (1913).

This was a Rule to show cause why the proceedings taken against the Petitioner pending in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Hughly should not be quashed.

The Petitioner with two persons, named Netai Ghosh and Laloo Ghosh, was accused of complicity in an alleged attempt to kill by shooting one Monmohan Ghosh. Nitai and Laloo alone were sent up for trial, although a warrant had issued against the Petitioner. These two persons were convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hughly agreeing with the verdict of the jury but on appeal to the High Court a re-trial was ordered.

In the re-trial which was held before the Sessions Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, the jury returned a verdict of 'not guilty' on all the charges and the Sessions Judge accepted the verdict and acquitted the accused. The charge against the accused generally was that they with the Petitioner who was not before the Court were concerned in an attempt to kill by shooting one Monmohan Ghose in British Chandernagor. The first set of charges were that the two accused, Netai and Laloo with Binoo (the Petitioner), Kanti, Koilash and others unknown conspired together to kill Monmohan Ghose or to cause grievous hurt to him and in pursuance of that conspiracy Monmohan Ghose was shot. The other two charges in the alternative were the same except that Kanti, Koilash and others unknown were omitted.

After the acquittal of the two accused, Netai and Laloo, the warrant against the Petitioner was withdrawn but subsequently the District Magistrate of Hughly issued a fresh warrant against the Petitioner who surrendered before the District Magistrate and proceedings under sec. 307 read with sec. 34, I. P. C., were started against the Petitioner. The case was then transferred to the file of the Deputy Magistrate. The Petitioner moved the High Court for the quashing of the proceedings.

Mr. Norton, Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Hughly to show cause why further proceedings for conspiracy to commit murder against the Petitioner, Manindra Chandra Ghose alias Binoo, should not be stayed on the ground that the two alleged co-conspirators having been acquitted there is no possibility of a conviction being obtained against the alleged conspirator who now stands alone, and upon the other grounds mentioned in the petition.

As regards the specific ground which is first mentioned in this Rule it has not been argued before us and it is clear that there is no charge of conspiracy at present against the Petitioner, and the fact that there was an acquittal of the other two would not conclude the matter inasmuch as there are two persons named as conspirators who have not yet been tried and it is stated that others unknown also conspired, so that the ground that the Petitioner is the only alleged conspirator remaining can no longer be sustained.

We therefore turn to the grounds which were actually taken by the learned Counsel in the petition. The first was that the warrant against the Petitioner having been recalled and there being no fresh materials or enquiry in the matter the issue of warrant again against the Petitioner was illegal, that is to say, that the proceedings are without jurisdiction. The answer to that is that the proceedings are not, as the Petitioner appears to have imagined from paragraph 14 of the petition, re-instituted by the complainant Monmohan Ghose, but they were re-instituted by the officer in charge of the Hughly Police station under the direction of the District Superintendent of Police who could not appear himself but who had been instructed by the District Magistrate on the advice of the law officers of the Crown that this case can go on on the evidence. We do not desire to express any opinion upon this evidence whether it is sufficient or not, but it certainly gave jurisdiction to the District Magistrate to take cognizance of the case if on taking legal advice he was of opinion that the evidence brought the accused within the purview of the law. Of the jurisdiction of the District Magistrate to take these proceedings there can be no doubt, and it is the District Magistrate and not the complainant who has re-instituted these proceedings.

Then as regards the second ground that the case for the prosecution in the previous trial was one of conspiracy between two youths who have been acquitted and the present accused, and that charge having failed the present proceeding ought not to be allowed to go on, this has been argued by the learned Counsel from the point of of view that the opinion of the Jury in this country necessarily covers the whole of the indictment and has the same sacrosanct character that such a verdict has in England. This doctrine has very recently been dealt with in an unreported case of this Court by Woodroffe and Beachcroft, JJ., in Romesh Chandra Banerjee v. The Emperor (1), and we may express our concurrence with the view expressed by Mr. Justice Beachcroft where he says :—" The repugnancy in the verdict of a Jury in India is not in itself sufficient to justify the quashing of a conviction and that the technicalities which are borrowed from the English law and founded on ideas as to the sacred character of a verdict by a Jury whose findings of fact are unknown cannot be imported so as to give such a character which by the express provisions of law does not attach to Jury verdicts in this country." However that may be, the Jury certainly did not and could not have formed any opinion much less expressed it as regards the case of the present Petitioner who was not before them. But it is argued that the evidence is precisely the same against him as against the others. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer appearing for the Crown has shown us that this is not so. There is distinct evidence against the present Petitioner, and the fact that the wounded man did not satisfactorily identify the two youths does not in our opinion in any way affect the identification which he made or may not have made of the present Petitioner, because that was a matter which was not in any way before the Jury and has never been adjudicated upon. It may be, as the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has told us, that he had better knowledge of the present accused, or he had better opportunities of seeing him. We have not purposely gone into the evidence because we do not wish in any way to prejudge the case. But it is clear that the evidence as regards identification of one person may be quite different to that as regards the identification of two others, even although it proceeds from the mouth of the same witness, and the learned Judge clearly stated that the identification of these two youths showing that the crime was committed by these two youths appeared to him to be weak, and on that ground he agreed with the Jury in acquitting the accused. In this country the opinion of the Judge is to be weighed by this Court in exactly the same balance as the opinion of the Jury. Where the Judge has expressed a clear opinion and the Jury has expressed none it would be in our opinion an unwarrantable thing for us to interfere with the ordinary course of justice in a case of this nature.

(1) Since reported, 18 C. W. N. 498 (1913).

MANINDRA CHANDRA GHOSE v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Then the further ground that is taken is that there being no suggestion at any stage of the two previous trials that any particular accused was responsible for the offence the present proceeding ought not to be allowed to go on. This particular ground has not been urged before us by the learned Counsel, but it is necessary to glance at it, for this reason that at present the proceedings against the Petitioner to which he has to answer come under sec. 307 read with sec. 34, I. P. C., and sec. 34 does not involve abetment and therefore does not imply any conspiracy and does not require proof that any particular accused was responsible for the commission of the actual offence.

The fourth ground stated in the petition refers to the unanimous verdict of the Jury of 'not guilty' on all charges against the two youths who were formally on their trial, and the Judge having held that the evidence of identification was weak and there being no suggestion that any new or further evidence would be available the proceedings are fit to be quashed. We have already dealt with this above and there is no need to say anything further.

The last ground is as to the nature of the evidence which we decline now to go into and also upon the opinion of the Civil Surgeon which is referred to in the petition and which we may at once say relieves the Petitioner of any necessity of showing that he had not certain marks of injury on his person which might have been caused by the explosion of a gun. That portion of the evidence, if it was ever seriously put forward, seems to have entirely broken down and no doubt will not again be revived ; but this is a very minor point and has nothing to do with the other considerations which we have already set out.

Having given this case our most careful consideration we are of opinion that it would not be in any way justifiable to interfere with the ordinary course of justice at the present stage of the proceeding. We therefore direct that this Rule be discharged and the proceedings do continue from the point they had already reached. The Petitioner will remain on the same bail.

Rule discharged.

Constitutional crisis—Authority of Civil Government over the Military.

The resignation of army officers in connection with the orders of the Government in England to serve in Ulster forebodes a grave constitutional crisis in England. The question, under what circumstances the Civil Government can order troops to fire on citizens is also one of great constitutional moment. But the Common Law of England as interpreted by eminent English Judges may be said to furnish a safe guidance to the question. If His Majesty's Ministers turn troops against citizens arbitrarily and cause destruction of life or property, their conduct may be called in question before the law Courts and it will rest with an English jury to say whether the Ministers have transgressed their powers. Nor is a soldier or officer who carries out the orders of the Ministers in such a case protected by such orders; it is thus no doubt a difficult question to say whether and when he would be justified in refusing to carry out the orders of the Civil Government. Ordinarily such refusal would mean an end of Civil rule and the ascendency of the Military over Civil Government. In any settled form of Government, when the Ministers take full responsibility for ordering troops and for the consequences of their acts before the judicial tribunals, they may rightly urge that it is not for the Military to question the propriety of their orders. Even in times of civil commotion the Civil Government have the legal and the constitutional right to insist that their orders be implicitly obeyed by the Military. It is also clearly within their rights to order the immediate dismissal of officers or men who refuse to carry out their orders, put them under arrest and appoint a Court Martial for their trial.

It is not within the province of the Military to question the propriety of any order passed by the Civil Government. The Civil Government under the English constitution rests with the King in Parliament. But the executive authority for the time being rests with the Ministers of the Crown. Although all executive acts and orders are done and issued under the seal of His Majesty, the responsibility for them rests with the Ministers. These Ministers are primarily responsible to the House of Commons for their acts. The moment their acts are opposed to the views of the House of Commons, they go out of power. But so long as the Ministers command the confidence of the House it is as much obligatory on the Military as it is on the Civil authorities to obey their orders implicitly. Only the judiciary are not under their commands and for the improper use of force against citizens, as we have already said, they may be made responsible before a Judge and a jury. Even to His Majesty the King they are not directly responsible, since they are primarily responsible to the House of Commons and also indirectly to the judicial tribunals of the country. They are ultimately responsible to the people of the country and not to the King. His Majesty, however, has this control and authority over them that if any of their acts, measures, or policies seem to His Majesty to be opposed to the popular view or likely to prove oppressive to his subjects or any section of it he can dismiss his Ministers and by dissolving the Parliament bring about a General Election to determine whether the policy or measure has the approval of the country. These are the limits of the constitutional powers of the King and that is why the form of Government in England is styled a Constitutional Monarchy.

It is therefore absurd to suggest that His Majesty had in any way interfered in reinstating the officers or did anything to supersede the orders of his Ministers to the army. His Majesty would be quite within his constitutional powers, if he was of opinion that the orders of his Ministers would lead to civil war in any part of the Kingdom, to call upon his Ministers to reconsider the order and to avoid a civil commotion. If the Ministry cannot enforce their measure or policy, without resort to force, against people who are opposed to the measure, but are otherwise loyal, it is their bounden duty not to enforce the measure against their opponents at the point of the bayonet but to appeal to the country and abide by its decision. But all the same we must say that although His Majesty may get the Ministers to countermand their orders in this mrnner at a moment of such national crisis, yet no officer or soldier would be justified in disobeying the orders of the Ministers of the Crown suo motu or impose on the Civil authorities the conditions and limitations under which they would perform their military duties. So long as "Do or die, never question why" continues to be the motto of British soldiers, Great Britain will continue to be the mistress of the world and it wil be an evil day for her when soldiers begin to dabble in politics. The resignation of officers or men under orders practically amounts to forcing a revolution. If they disobey orders for political reasons and the Civil Government cannot reckon upon their support with regard to the enforcement of any measure, Civil Government is practically superseded by Military rule and the Military virtually become the dictators of the country. The vital issue which has thus been precipitated before the country is of much graver constitutional importance and is fraught with much more serious consequences than the question of Home Rule in Ireland or the inclusion or exclusion of Ulster.

AGRARIAN RIOTS—RIGHT OF PRIVATE DEFENCE.

I.—INTRODUCTORY.

Agrarian riots are of rather frequent occurrence in this province and cases of such riots constantly come before the Criminal Courts. In these cases the usual plea is that the accused were acting in the exercise of a right of private defence of property. It will therefore not be unprofitable to discuss the law on the subject, with special reference to the law of private defence.

II.—TITLE, WITHOUT POSSESSION, NO DEFENCE.

It is clear from the wording of cl. 4 of sec. 141, I. P. C., that the forcible exercise of a right by a party not in possession falls within the purview of that section. Even where the accused's party have a clear and perfectly valid right to the possession, and the other party are manifestly in wrongful possession, they are not justified in taking the law in their own hands. There is no question of a right of private defence in such cases and their action would clearly fall within the meaning of the words "enforce a right or supposed right" as used in cl. 4, sec. 141, I. P. C.

This view is supported also by the following rulings:—

In Moher Sheikh, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 392 (1893), there was a fight between two parties regarding the right to fish in a beel. Two of the accused and partners fished in a khata in the beel throughout the whole of the year, until 5 days before the occurrence. The complainant's party were in possession of the khata during this period of 5 days. When complainant's party were fishing, accused's party went there to turn them out by force. It was held that there was no question of a right of private defence, as the other side were in possession, though it may have been wrongful possession.

In Jairam, I. L. R. 35 Cal. 103 (1907), the accused went with 3 ploughs on land of which complainant was in possession. The land was complainant's ancestral raiyati holding. The accused claimed it under a thika from the zemindar and alleged that it was landlord's khudkhast or private land, that the lease in favour of complainant had already expired and that, therefore, the zemindar had a right to re-enter the land on expiry of the lease. Held, that though the accused had a right to the land, they were not justified in taking the law into their own hands. In Bepin Behari Guha v. Pranakul Majundar, 11 C. W. N. 176 (1906), where two persons were jointly entitled to possession of land, but one party was in sole possession and the servants of the other party went out armed and succeeded in obtaining possession, without having had to use any force, it was held that the conviction under sec. 143, I. P. C., was right.

In this connection, the following remarks made by Mayne in explaining the scope of cl. 4 of sec. 141, I. P. C., are worth quoting:—"Under this clause it is immaterial whether the possession or enjoyment sought to be recovered was claimed under colour of title, or without it, and whether the right which is asserted is a valid or invalid one. The object of the clause is to prevent breaches of the peace, by compelling every one who desires to enforce a disputed right, to do so under the authority of the law. The principle is the same as that under which the Magistrate is authorised, in cases where the breach of the peace is apprehended, to maintain the party in possession, or to restore to possession one who has been dispossessed by criminal force. . . . . . . This provision is one of those rare instances in which an act, which, though, in the view of the Civil law, is legal and gives no right of action to the person affected by it, is still punishable criminally on account of its injurious consequences to the public peace."

III.—IS POSSESSION ALWAYS A GOOD DEFENCE? CONFLICTING RULINGS.

But the question as to whether the section applies only to cases in which a claimant being out of possession of the right in question seeks to oust the person in possession, or it also extends to cases in which a party in peaceful possession of the disputed right uses the necessary force to prevent being dispossessed, does not appear to be so simple. It is held, on the one hand, that the expression "to enforce a right or a supposed right" cannot apply to a party in possession, as a construction of that section so as to include maintenance of possession would be inconsistent with the right of private defence which is permitted by law. This view is supported by the earlier rulings on the subject. In Mitto Singh, 3 W. R. Cr. 41 (1865), where there was an affray respecting land, in the course of which a man of complainant's party was killed and there had been litigations between the parties about the land in which the right and possession of Sankar (one of accused's party) had been legally decided in his favour, it was held that "the latter provision (to enforce a right or supposed right) applies to an active enforcement of a right not in possession." In Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lal, 19 W. R. Cr. 66 (1873), the complainant's party attempted to cut a bund, which the accused's party attempted to prevent. His Lordship Couch, C. J., observed as follows:—"The Magistrate seems to have considered that it was the duty of the Rajapur people (accused's party) to offer no opposition to the cutting of the bund; that they were to go away and seek the Magistrate who migh be at a great distance and obtain an order from him, and if they failed in that, they were to be left to a Civil suit to recover compensation for injury to their crops whom it might be difficult to identify as those who actually committed the mischief and from whom, if identified, it might not be possible to recover the amount of the compensation. I think this is a view which cannot be supported. This Petitioner was, so far as the evidence goes, doing nothing more that what he might properly do to prevent mischief being done to what was found to belong to his village and to have an old bund." There is another old case, viz., Sankar Singh (Pachgachia people) v. Burmah Mahto (Amba people), 19 W. R. Cr. 25 (1875), in which the accused were acquitted on the ground that they were in possession. The High Court made the following observations in the case:—"Every one has a right to protect himself in the actual enjoyment of his property and in the actual exercise of his rights, unless the case be such that the third clause of sec. 99, I. P. C., applies, i.e., where there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, in which case there is no right of private defence. The Magistrate, no doubt, says as regards the right of private defence of property: 'I don't think, considering the Police outpost was only 2 miles distant, that the danger was sufficient to justify the resort to force.' But he comes to no finding as to how long the Pachgachia people (accused's party) were aware of the intention on the part of their opponents to interfere with the passage of the water, which they went to prevent if necessary. Although the outpost was only 2 miles off, it might be that the parties had not time to send for and get the assistance of the Police, soon enough to anticipate the coming of their adversaries. They had, at any rate, the right to go to the ground themselelues and at most, they would be bound to refrain, even in their own defence, from using force against the other side until the Police authorities would come up, provided the circumstances were such that the Police might have been brought upon the spot in time. They were not bound, under all circumstances, to stand quietly by, while their opponents wrongfully and by force committed serious mischief. On this part of the case, there is no finding as would be needed to take away from the Pachgachia people the right to protect themselves, while they were actually in enjoyment of an undoubted right."

It will be seen from the quotation just made that it recognizes the fact that the right of private defence is subject to a very important qualification, namely, that there was no time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, and (by implication) further, that the fact of the accused's party being in actual possession of the right claimed is not always a good defence in a case of rioting. Instances are not wanting among the old cases in which a conviction for rioting was upheld by the High Court, in spite of the fact that the accused were in actual possession of the subject of the right in question, vide Joe Lal, 7 W. R. Cr. 34 (1867), Mana Singh, 7 W. R. Cr. 103 (1867), Kalu Bepari, 1 C. L. R. 521 (1878). In each of these cases, both parties to the dispute were convicted.

It was, however, the well-known case of Ganouri Lal Das, 16 I. L. R. Cal. 206 (1889), that demolished the old view that the words to "enforce a right" cannot apply to a party in actual possession of the subject of the dispute. This decision brought the Indian law in line with the English law on the subject. Their Lordships who decided that case observed as follows:—"We apprehend that there can be no doubt that, according to English law, the assembly in this case would be an unlawful assembly, or, that executing their purpose as they did, there would have been a riot, for which every member of the assembly would be liable."

The facts proved in this case were that a party of persons, consisting of 5 peadas and a number of coolies sufficient for the work to be done, went to a spot on a river flowing through the lands of M for the purpose of either repairing or renewing a bund across it to cause the water to flow down a channel on to the lands of their master T. The river at the time was almost dry and the party did not go armed ready for a fight. Having arrived at the spot at 10 A.M., they proceeded to work at the bund until the afternoon. At about 4 P.M., a body of men, consisting of about 1200 in all, many of them armed with lathies and headed by the accused who were servants of M, which had been seen collecting together during the day proceeded to the spot and about 25 or 30 of them attacked T's men, some 5 of whom were more or less severely wounded. It was held that the accused, the servants of M, had been rightly convicted of rioting.

As regards the question as to whether an act of "defending a right" can be called "enforcing a right," their Lordships observed as follows:—"It is dangerous to attempt to lay down any general rule and there may perhaps be cases in which an assembly to defend a right may not be unlawful; at least we shall not now affirm that there cannot be. But to accept the general proposition enunciated would be a very difficult matter. There are many rights of which it may be affirmed that when they are interfered with, the defence of them consists in exercising them in despite of the interference, that is or may be, in enforcing them. There are modes of enforcing a right which are not prohibited by sec. 141, I. P. C., what it prohibits is the enforcement of a right or supposed right by criminal force or show of criminal force by an assembly of 5 or more persons. And rights the defence of which can only be effected by enforcing them may come within its provisions." Then as regards the question whether the words "to enforce a right" can apply to a party in possession, their Lordships made the following observations:—"The section refers to 'right or supposed right.' This would make a division into (1st) rights in actual enjoyment when interfered with, (2nd) rights claimed though not in actual enjoyment, when interfered with. And this would again indicate that the section in some cases, at any rate, makes unlawful an assembly which by force, etc., defends the right by restoring the status quo ante and with it the actual enjoyment. If the proposition contended for be true, then not merely the right to the actual occupation of property in physical possession, but a right of way, a right to draw water from a well, a right to enjoy ancient light, and many others, if interrupted, may be vindicated by force or show of force. So long as they are uninterrupted, they are in possession, so far as such rights can be. To defend them by force against interruption is to enforce them, and this, if done by five or more, is in many, if not in most, cases, forbidden by the law."

[The contrary view is that the expression "a right," as opposed to "a supposed right," means a real right, i.e., a right or title claimed about the validity of which there can be no doubt; and that the expression "a supposed right" means a right or title claimed which is of doubtful validity, i.e., a title claimed which may or may not be valid.]

All the three old cases which are regarded as conflicting authorities were considered in this case. The case of Mitto Singh, 3 W. R. Cr. 41, was expressly dessented from; and as regards Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lal, 19 W. R. Cr. 66, and Sankar Singh v. Burmah Mahto, 19 W. R. Cr. 25, it was held that in the special circumstances of those cases, there was the right of private defence. In the case under consideration, it was found that there was no right of private defence and that for two reasons:—(1st) that there was time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities; (2nd) that as T's men were acting in the exercise of a boná fide claim of right, their action in going to the spot did not amount to criminal trespass but only to civil trespass which did not occasion the exercise of the right of private defence.

After the decision in this case, the pendulum seems to have at once swung to the other extreme. For it seems to have created the impression that it has practically done away with the right of private defence in riot cases. This impression seems to have arisen from that case having laid down the law that there is no right of private defence against acts of aggression done in the exercise of a boná fide claim of right. In a case on the subject from Bombay, namely, Bana Punja, I. L. R. 17 Bom. 260 (1892), Ganouri Lal's case was cited with approval, with the following observations:—"The accused were members of an unlawful assembly the common object of which was to enforce a right to take earth from a dry tank by show of force and it is immeterial in point of law whether the right existed or not."

The authority of Ganouri Lal's case has, however, been much weakened by the decision in Pach Kauri's case, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 686 (1897), in which the accused, receiving information that complainant's party were about to take forcible possession of a plot of land which was found by the Court to be in the possession of the accused, collected a large number of men, some of whom were armed and went to the land in question and while they were engaged in ploughing, the complainant's party came up (some of them being armed) and interfered with the ploughing and a fight ensued, in the course of which one of complainant's party was grievously wounded and subsequently died and two of accused's party were hurt. It was held, on the authority of Narsing Pathabai, I. L. R. 14 Bom. 441 (1890), and the three old Calcutta rulings, viz., Mitto Singh, 3 W. R. Cr. 41, Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lal, 19 W. R. Cr. 66, Sankar Singh v. Burma Mahto, 19 W. R. Cr. 25, that if the accused were rightfully in possession of the land and found it necessary to protect themselves from aggression on the part of another body of men, they were justified in taking such precautions as they thought were required and using such force or violence as were necessary to prevent the aggression and that, therefore, they could not be held to be members of an unlawful assembly. Though this case does not expressly dissent from Ganouri Lal's case (their Lordships merely professed to distinguish Ganouri Lal's case), it has thrown a great doubt on the correctnees of the proposition that there is no right of private defence against a mere civil trespass, i.e., a trespass committed in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right.

Mayne maintains in sec. 220 of his commentary, that there is no right of private defence against mere civil trespass, where the injured party would obtain sufficient redress by an appeal to law. In order to illustrate his remarks, he has cited two reported cases, viz., Guru, 14 W. R. Cr. 29, and Gour Chand, 18 W. R. Cr 29. In the former case the accused were found to be justified in using force to prevent the other party from cutting paddy grown by the accused on land of which they had been in peaceful possession. But in the latter case, where the accused's party came out armed to prevent the ploughing of their land by the opposite party and after a few words of remonstrance killed two of that party and wounded a third, it was held that the acts were not justifiable. The act of ploughing under the circumstances did not harm and could have been redressed by an appeal to the authorities. On this principle he has suported the finding in Ganouri Lal's case. Since then there have been cases both ways.

In the following cases, the conviction was upheld inspite of the fact that the accused were in actual possession of the subject-matter of the disputed right :—

Prag Datta, I. L. R. 20 All. 459 (1898), where the dispute was over a strip of waste land and where the complainant's party, one of whom was armed with a gun and the others with lathies, went to the land and gave orders for the demolition of a mud-wall, about 3 feet high, round a neem tree, and the accused's party, one of whom had a gun, interfered and begged that the matter might be referred to Court and a fight ensued and the gun was fired from the side of the accused, killing a man on the complainant's side, it was held that there was no right of private defence, as the dispute was practically over the removal of a mud-wall which could have at any moment been reconstructed at a nominal cost and the demolition of which would not dissipate all possibilities of recovery of possession, if recourse had been had to the Courts of law. Their Lordships who decided the case observed :—"When a body of men are determined to vindicate their rights or supposed rights by unlawful force and when they engage in a fight with men who, on the other hand, are equally determined to vindicate, by unlawful force their rights or supposed rights, no question of self-defence arises. Neither side is trying to protect itself; but each side is trying to get the better of the other."

Ananto Pandit v. Madhu Sudan Mandal, I. L. R. 26 Cal. 874 (1899), where the party of the accused accompanied by R went armed with lathies to fish in a tank in which R had 2 as. share and the complainant who with some other co-sharers representing 11 as. share in the tank went and protested that R had no share in the tank and a fight ensued, in the course of which some of the complainant's party received slight injuries, it was held that though R was in actual possession of 2 as. share in the tank, the law applicable to this case was that laid down in Ganouri Lal's case, rather than in Pach Courie's case.

Kaliji alias Kali Singh, I. L R. 24 All. 143 (1901), where the accused's party sowed a crop in a field, to the possession of which apparently they were entitled, and the other party, claiming the field and the crops as theirs, entered upon the land and began cutting the crop whereupon the accused's party attacked them and in the fight grievous hurt was caused, it was on the authority of Prag Datta, I. L. R. 20 All. 459, held that it was not open to the accused to plead that they were acting in the exercise of their right of private defence, it being found that they had resorted beforehand to make an assault under the pretence of cutting their crop. The case of Pach Courie, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 686, was relied upon in defence but it was not followed by their Lordships and the case of Narsingh Pathabhai, I. L. R. 14 Bom. 441, was distinguished.

Kabiruddin, I. L. R. 35 Cal. 368: s. c. 12 C. W. N. 384 (1908), where a large body of men belonging to Chero (accused party) went armed to the Pathari Pyne to throw up an alang, taking earth from the dry channel for their purpose and while they were so engaged, the opposite party came up similarly armed and inspite of the remonstrances of two constables who had been sent from the thana (4 miles from the place of occurrence and 1 mile from Chero) on the information of two chowkidars, a fight ensued in the course of which one man was killed and several others wounded, it was held that on the date of the occurrence there was no pressing necessity to throw up any earth on the Chero side of the pyne, the rainy season being some months after the occurrence and that consequently there was no right of private defence in circumstances such as those of this case and so it was unnecessary to attempt any adjudication of the question as to the respective rights of the parties.

In the following cases the accused were acquitted on the ground of being in actual possession of the subject of the disputed right.

Pares Nath Sircar, I. L. R. 33 Cal. 295

(1905). In this case, Rampini and Mookerjee, JJ., came to altogether two different findings as to the facts. The case was therefore referred to Woodroffe, J., who agreed with Mookerjee, J., both on points of fact and law. The facts as found by them are that sometime ago, there was a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., about the possession of a chur between A and some of the accused in which the Magistrate found the latter party in possession of the chur, except the homestead of complainant Arshed, which he was found to have occupied for more than two months before the date of the proceedings. The accused's party afterwards managed to get possession of the homestead when it was vacant and Arshed then attempted to recover possession by force, which led to the disturbance. Held, that the case fell within the rule laid down in Pach Couri's case.

Ram Khelawan Singh, I. L. R. 36 Cal. 827: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 827 (1909), where some tenants, who held their lands on the batai system under which harvested crops should be taken to the village khalihan, went in a large body, armed with lathies, with the avowed intention of removing them to their own houses and were making up the crops already cut into bundles, whereupon the zemindar's watchmen remonstrated and a number of their amlas went to the spot, armed with lathies, and a fight ensued, in the course of which some of the tenants were wounded, and it further appeared that 4 days before the occurrence, the zemindar's people had sent an urgent appeal to the Police for protection against serious breach of peace which seemed imminent. Held, that the common object of the accused was to protect the zemindar's rights over the crops and that, therefore, they were not guilty of rioting.

Silajit Mahto, I. L. R. 36 Cal. 865: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 801 (1909). There was a long standing dispute and litigation between two parties about the possession of some lands. The accused were in possession, but the complainant's party claimed the land from time to time, though they never succeeded in obtaining possession. On the date of the occurrence, the accused went in a large body, armed with lathies, and prepared in anticipation for a fight, and began reaping the paddy grown by them, when complainant's party came up and a fight ensued, in which a man was seriously wounded and died subsequently. Held, that the common object of the assembly was not to enforce a right but to maintain undisturbed the actual enjoyment of a right.

Meher Sirdar, 16 C. W. N. 46 (1911), in which it was held that the accused being in possession of the disputed land, were justified in using sufficient force to prevent the other party from removing their crops and the fact that the Police station was only 9 miles off did not take away the right of private defence, for the right of private defence commences, when reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences, and when persons have begun to cut and carry off your paddy, it cannot be said that you are bound to go 9 miles off to fetch the Police, and the same consideration applies to the remedies in the Civil Court. Kunja Bhuiya, I. L. R. 39 Cal. 896 (1912), where a body of about 10 men, including the accused, went on behalf of the decree-holder with a Civil Court peon upon a plot of land in the joint possession of the judgment-debtors to take symbolical possession thereof and the drummer was assaulted by one of the latter whereupon the decree-holder's party, replied by an attack on their opponents, in the course of which one of the decree-holder's party not before the Court, fractured the skull of the drummer's assailant and the accused continued to beat him, after he had fallen helpless on the ground. Held, that the accused had, under the circumstances, the right of private defence that their common object was, therefore, not unlawful and that the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C., was bad, but that the accused having beaten the wounded man after he had fallen helpless on the ground, they were guilty under sec. 325, I. P. C.

Jhalku Tewari, 17 C. W. N. 1081 (1913), in which there was a riot owing to a dispute about the possession of a plot of land admittedly belonging to M. C. The complainant's party alleged to have received settlement of the lands from some relations of M. C. whilst the accused's party alleged that they received settlement from M. C. herself and it was found that the accused's party were in possession, had grown the paddy and were entitled to harvest and remove the crops. Held, conviction under sec. 148, I. P. C., was not sustainable.

In most of the cases noted above where the accused were convicted inspite of their being in possession of the subject of dispute, the main ground,—I may say, the only ground,—for disallowing the plea of self-defence was that there was sufficient time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities; and it seems to me, on a careful analysis of the reported cases, that it is upon the answer to the question as to what is meant by "sufficient time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities," rather than upon the interpretation of the words "to enforce a right," that the divergence in the judicial decisions in riot cases mainly turns. In those cases in which the accused were convicted inspite of their being in possession, the view taken of the provisions of cl. 3 of sec. 99, I. P. C., is, in effect, this, that if the injury intended to be caused by the aggressors to a person is such as can be repaired by subsequent litigation, it cannot be said that there is any pressing necessity for the person to take the law in his own hands and that therefore there can be no right of private defence under such circumstances. Mayne seems to have accepted this view of the law. According to him the use of force by a party for the purpose of resisting the wrongful cutting of paddy is not unlawful, but the use of force by a party for the purpose of resisting wrongful ploughing of their land is unlawful, for whereas paddy, if not protected, is likely to be irrecoverably lost, no harm is done to a land by ploughing it. But this is putting too narrow a construction on the provisions of the law. A more liberal and reasonable view of the provisions of that section of the law seems to have been taken in those reported cases where the accused have been acquitted on the ground of being in possession of the disputed rights. There are some very apt observations, which have already been quoted, on the subject in Birjoo Singh v. Khub Lal, W. R. Cr. 66 (1873) and Sankar Singh v. Burmah Mahto, 19 W. R. Cr. 25 (1875) and Meher Sirdar 16, C. W. N. 46 (1911). The following observations on the same subject in Sohun, 2 W. R. Cr. 59 (1865), are also worth quoting:—"It never was intended that a man should submit to the deprivation of his property in his possession without exercising any right of self-defence and trust to recover it by the tedious operation of a case in the Civil Court, with all the weight of possession, onus of proof, &c., against him. Generally this point is neglected. . . . . Now, a future remedy in a Civil Court is a very different thing from possession and there are no Courts or authorities which would have protected the possession of the accused if they had not helped themselves." In Narsingh Pathabhai, I. L. R. 14 Bom. 441 (1890), one of the accused received information one evening that the other party intended to go upon his land on the following day and uproot the seed sown on it. On the following morning, at 3 A.M. he received information that the other party had entered on his land and were ploughing up the seed. He then proceeded to the land with the other accused and a fight ensued in which both sides received serious injuries and the leader of the other party killed. Held, that the 3rd clause of sec. 99, I. P. C., should be read with the 1st clause of sec. 105, I. P. C., that the right of private defence of property commences when reasonable apprehension of danger to the property commences, that before such apprehension commences, the owner of the property is not called upon to apply for protection to the public authorities, that the apprehension which justifies a recourse to the authorities ought to be based on some information of a definite kind as to the time and place of the danger threatened, that as the accused had no reason to apprehend a night-attack on the property, they were not bound to act on the information received on the previous evening and seek protection of the public authorities. In Fuzarali, 14 C. W. N. ccxix (1910), it was held that when one's property is actually invaded, he is not bound to remain inactive and send for Police help, leaving his property to be destroyed in the meantime and the fact that the Police station is near by does not deprive him of his right of private defence.

This liberal spirit of interpretation of the law of private defence, which is illustrated in the judicial decisions noticed above, is particularly in evidence in the latest decision on the subject in the case of Ram Nandan Prasad Singh, 17 C. W. N. 1132 (1913), in which the complainant's party, without permission of accused, constructed a dam across a pyne exclusively belonging to the accused who had obtained injunction from the Civil Court restraining the complainant's party from interfering with the accused in their use and occupation of the pyne and the accused's party in attempting to cut the dam were opposed by complainant's men, two of whom were struck by the accused's party. It was held that after the Civil Court decree and injunction, the presence of the complainant's party in opposing the accused was a criminal trespass which entitled the accused to a right of private defence and so the accused could not be held to be "enforcing a right" within the meaning of sec. 141 (4), I. P. C. It was further observed in the case that the phrase "to enforce a right" could only apply when the party claiming the right have not possession over the subject of the right, that therein lay the distinction between "enforcing a right" and "maintaining a right" and that the party in possession was entitled to resist and repel an aggression and his action in so doing would be in the maintenance of his right. This is reverting to the old law on the subject laid down in Mitto Singh, 3 W. R. Cr. 41 (1865), which was expressly dissented from in the leading case of Ganouri Lal Das. It has already been pointed out that Ganouri Lal's case laid down the law too widely when it ruled that there was no right of private defence against acts of aggression done in the exercise of a bonâ fide claim of right. But the decision in that case, in so far as it laid down that when there was time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities, there could be no justification for the use of force to maintain one's possession, has always been accepted as a sound exposition of the law. This decision is apparently in conflict with the statement of the law as contained in the recent decision in the case of Ram Nandan Prasad Singh. But if we accept the more liberal and rational interpretation of the provisions of cl. 3 of sec. 99, I. P. C., it would be found that there is very little scope for the application of Ganouri Lal's case and that the rule as laid down in the other case, is, for all practical purposes, a quite sufficient statement of the law; for it must be in extremely rare cases, that a party can apply for the protection of the public authorities in time to prevent an aggression on his property by the opposite party.

Though an assembly, the common object of which is to maintain possession, is lawful, the right of private defence may be exceeded by (1) the use of excessive violence by one or more members of the assembly, i.e., by violation of the provisions of cl. 4 of sec. 99, I. P. C., or (2) by continuing to use force, even after the danger to the property has ceased, i.e., by violation of the provisions of cls. 2-5 of sec. 105, I. P. C. In such cases whether the whole assembly becomes unlawful by reason of the right of private defence being exceeded by some individual members of it, will depend upon the particular facts of each case. If the whole assembly aid and abet those who inflict unnecessary violence, then the whole assembly becomes unlawful. Baijnath Dhanuk, I. L. R. 36 Cal. 296: s. c. 9 C. W. N. 677 (1908). But if the excessive violence be merely the acts of individual members of the assembly for which the assembly itself was not responsible, then the assembly does not become unlawful, by reason of such excessive violence; Kalu Mandal, 10 C. L. R. 278 (1882), Ram Khelwan, I. L. R. 36 Cal. 827: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 827 (1909), Runja Bhuia I. L. R. 39 Cal. 896: s. c. 16 C. W. N. 1053 (1912). Where the assembly continue in their acts of violence on the other party, even after the latter had stopped their operations and began to retreat, then the whole assembly, though not unlawful in the beginning, became so afterwards. Ambica Lal, I. L. R. 35 Cal. 443 (1908). It may be added here that in cases where the complainant's party are the aggressors, it is often alleged that they were chased by the accused's party after they had begun to retreat. Such allegations should always be received with very great caution, as in such cases, this is the only way to incriminate the other party.

Next arises the question as to whether the party in actual occupation of the subject of the dispute, for the time being, should always be regarded as being in possession thereof so as to be entitled to a right of private defence against the other party. In deciding this question, the length of time during which a party has been in occupation of the subject of the dispute, seems to be of some importance. In Jairam, I. L. R. 35 Cal. 103 (1907), it was held that where the disputed land had all along been in the possession of the complainant, the fact that the accused were ploughing the land and were thus in occupation of it for a few hours before the [illegible]rence, did not constitute possession of the [illegible]fied in [illegible] as to entitle them to a right of private [illegible] other party. Meher Shekh, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 392 [illegible] held that possession for 5 days only, though manifestly a wrongful one, by the complainant's party, of a katha in a beel which had all along been in the possession of the accused's party, deprived the accused of the right of private defence.

IV.—Cases in which neither party in possession.

We have hitherto been dealing with cases in which either the complainant's party or the accused's party are in exclusive and peaceful possession of the subject of dispute. There may, however, be cases in which the respective rights of the parties are in an undefended state and neither party is in exclusive and undisturbed possession. In such cases, neither of the parties is justified in using force in the assertion of his rights and whichever party uses force to secure the right he claims would be punishable. the Magistrate but to pass judgment and he could not avoid this duty merely on account of the absence of one of the parties."

Babu Baikuntha Nath Mitter in showing cause against the Reference submitted that sec. 247, Cr. P. C., lays down that if the summons has been issued on complaint and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused or on any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned the complainant does not appear the Magistrate shall acquit the accused unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day. The direction under this section is imperative and the Magistrate was bound to act under this section. This procedure has been approved of by the High Court in Mudoosoodun v. Hari Dass (1).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference by the Officiating District Magistrate of Sarun asking for the setting aside of an order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Gopalgunj under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., on account of the absence of the complainant at the time of the hearing of the argument in the case. The case that was before the Sub-Deputy Magistrate was a summons case and therefore governed by the procedure laid down in Chap. XX of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The principal point on which the District Magistrate has asked for our interference with the acquittal is that the Code makes no provision for argument in a case governed by Chap. XX, and therefore the presence of the complainant at that stage was not required by law. It is true that

(1) 22 W. R. Cr. 40 (1874).

Chap. XX of the Code makes no provision for argument in a summons case, but we are not prepared to say that the hearing of a case is concluded with the examination of the witnesses for the parties. As a matter of fact the case had been adjourned by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate to be heard again for the purpose of the documentary and oral evidence being explained to him. In that view the hearing of the case did not end and therefore sec. 247 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had application to the circumstances of the case.

In the case of Mudoosoodun v. Hari Dass (1), it was laid down that "under sec. 208 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1872, (sec. 247 of the present Code), the Magistrate may dismiss the complaint if the complainant does not appear on the day to which the hearing has been duly adjourned, even though the complainant and his witnesses have been examined and their further attendance seems unnecessary." Regard being had to the authority of the case we have just now cited we are unable to interfere with the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate.

Reference discharged.

Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 148—Suit for redemption of mortgage by conditional sale, limitation—Time, running of, from end of term or from time of payment where there is option to pay before end of term—Possession, right to recover, accrual of.

Ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property.

So where in a case of mortgage by conditional sale there was a condition that the mortgagors were to be entitled to recover the property within nine years on the liquidation of the debt with the usufruct of the property, and the Plaintiff mortgagors brought a suit for redemption and stated that the mortgage debt had been satisfied by the usufruct eight years after the mortgage but the suit was brought just within sixty years computed from the end of the said term of nine years but after more than sixty years from the time of the satisfaction of the mortgage as aforesaid:

Held—That the time ran from the time of satisfaction of the mortgage debt, the right to recover possession having accrued then; the suit was, therefore, barred by limitation.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment of the Allahabad High Court, dated the 11th November 1907, reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore. The suit brought on the 6th January 1899 was to recover possession by redemption of property mortgaged on the 6th January 1830. The mortgage by conditional sale was for a term of 9 years although redeemable before the expiry of the term. The main provision of the mortgage is quoted in their Lordships' judgment. The defence contended that the suit was barred by 60 years' limitation starting from the date of the mortgage. Reliance was placed upon paras. 2 and 8 of the plaint (quoted in their Lordships' judgment) which showed that according to the allegations of the Plaintiffs themselves the mortgage was redeemable within and before the expiry of the term of 9 years.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred. He said in his judgment:—

"The mortgage was no doubt for a term of nine years; but it is admitted by the Plaintiffs in the plaint that there was a distinct provision authorizing the mortgagors to redeem the property on payment of the mortgage money before or after the stipulated period, and that there was also a provision that the mortgage would be redeemed in case the mortgage money was paid off before the stipulated period out of the usufruct, and the Plaintiffs have come into Court on the allegation that the debt was actually satisfied out of the usufruct before the expiry of the stipulated period of nine years. The Defendants accordingly argue that "the right to redeem or to recover possession" within the meaning of Art. 148, Sch. II to the Limitation Act, accrued on the date of the mortgage (16th January 1830) and at all events before the expiry of nine years from that date. This argument is supported by the following remarks in The Maharaja of Benares v. Sita Ram Naik (1), viz., 'If in this case it could be shown that the mortgage of the 27th March 1819 was under conditions such as to enable the mortgagor, whom the Plaintiff now represents, to come and redeem at any time before the lapse of the ten years' term fixed therein, I should have had no hesitation in holding that this present suit which was not instituted till the 1st December 1885, was a suit barred by the imperative order of the Legislature' (p. 136). The present suit is on all fours with the hypothetical case referred to in the above extract.

"Moreover, it has been repeatedly held that where time is not of the essence of the contract the mortgagor can redeem even before the expiry of the stipulated period, Chaturbhuj v. Raghubar Dyal (2), and thus when it is optional with the mortgagor to redeem whenever he likes, the period of limitation will run from the date of mortgage, Anwari Husain v. Lalmir Khan (3). Having regard to the terms of the mortgage in this case and to the Plaintiff's allegations I am bound to hold following the above rulings that the period of limitation in this case will run from the date of the mortgage, viz., the 6th January 1830, and consequently the suit was beyond time on the 6th January 1899 when it was instituted.

"The learned pleaders for the Plaintiffs attempted to argue that the mortgagors had no power to sue for redemption before the expiry of nine years from the date of the mortgage. But this argument is opposed to the express and unequivocal language of the plaint itself."

But the High Court (Sir John Stanley C. J., and Burkitt, J.) held otherwise. In the Course of their judgment they said:—"If the meaning of this contemporaneous agreement was that the mortgagors might redeem at any time within the period of nine years, the Plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. If, on the other hand, the intention of the parties was that the debt should remain outstanding for a period of nine years certain, then the right to redeem only accrued at the expiration of that period. Ordinarily a mortgagor cannot, before the time limited for payment to the mortgagee expires, take proceedings to redeem. The reason for this is, that it was the agreement of the parties that the mortgage should, during the intervening time, remain as security for the money advanced, and therefore it is not competent for either party to disturb that relation [Brown v. Cole (4)]. Westropp, C. J., in his judgment in Vadju v. Vadju (5) says, 'The general principle as to redemption and foreclosure is that in the absence of any stipulation expressed or implied to the contrary the right to redeem and the right to foreclose must be regarded as co-extensive.' In that case the stipulation in the mortgage-deed was that the mortgagor would pay the debt within ten years and redeem the mortgaged property, and it was held that a suit for redemption instituted within the ten years was premature; the mere use of the word 'within' not being a sufficient indication of an intention that the mortgagor might redeem in a less period than ten years. So in Raghubar Dayal v. Bhudhu Lal (6), in which the stipulation was that the principal and the interest should be paid at the promised time (that was in ten years), it was held that the advance by the mortgagee to the mortgagor was for a period of ten years certain, and that the mortgagor was not entitled before that period had expired to redeem the property. The principle acted upon in these cases is embodied in the Transfer of Property Act. Sec. 60 provides that 'at any time after the principal money has become payable,' the mortgagor may redeem. Sec. 62 prescribes in the case of an usufructuary mortgage, that the mortgagor has a right to recover possession of the property where the mortgagee is authorised to pay himself from the rents and profits the interest of the mortgage debt, 'when the term (if any) prescribed for the payment of the mortgage money has expired and the mortgagor pays or tenders to the mortgagee the principal money, etc.' Also in sec. 67 in which the right of foreclosure or sale is prescribed, the language is as follows:—'In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee has at any time after mortgage money become payable to him, etc.,' a right to obtain an order for foreclosure or sale. The principal money only becomes payable when the payment becomes obligatory upon the mortgagor. Lindley, M. R., in the case of De Braam v. Ford (7), commenting on the meaning of the words 'time of payment' contained in a bill of sale, observes:—'To my mind the expression is unambiguous; it means the time at which payment is to become obligatory, the time at which the borrower must pay and after which if he does not pay he can be sued for payment.'

On the evidence afforded by the proceeding before the Collector, we are of opinion that the agreement of the parties was that the advance made by Ataullah Khan was to be left outstanding for a period of nine years, and that within that period the mortgagee could not foreclose the mortgage, nor could the mortgagor redeem it. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have been of this opinion also, for he says in his judgment: 'The mortgage was no doubt for a term of nine years,' but then he holds that by reason of the statement by the Plaintiffs in the plaint, that the debt was actually satisfied out of the usufruct within the period, the Plaintiffs could not rely on this fact. He also seems to hold that it was optional with the mortgagor to redeem whenever he pleased, and that therefore the period of limitation ran from the date of the mortgage. After referring to some rulings he says, 'having regard to the terms of the mortgage in this case and to the Plaintiff's allegations, I am bound to hold, following the above rulings, that the period of limitation in this case will run from the date of the mortgage, viz., the 6th January 1830, and the suit was beyond time on the 6th January 1899, when it was instituted.' We are unable to agree with him as to this. The time began to run, we think, from the expiration of the term of nine years, and the mere fact that the Plaintiffs alleged that the mortgage debt was satisfied within this period, does not affect the question."

Hence this Appeal.

MUSAMMAT BAKHTAWAR BEGAM v. MUSAMMAT HUSAINI KHANAM.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhagwandin Dubè for the Appellants submitted that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge was right. The suit was clearly barred on the case as made in the plaint itself under Art. 148 of Act XV of 1877. Paras. 2 and 8 left no doubt that the Plaintiffs had a right to redeem the mortgage before the expiry of the term of nine years. The period of limitation commenced to run from the date of the mortgage. In any case the Plaintiffs in the accounts attached to the plaint stated that the whole mortgage-debt was satisfied out of the profits realized by the mortgagee in 1245 Fasli (i.e., September 1837-38). In other words the Plaintiffs meant that their right to recover possession of the mortgaged property accrued in September 1838 at the latest. Even then the suit was clearly barred. The plaint ought to have been rejected on the face of it under cl. (c), sec. 54, Civil Procedure Code, 1882.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Ross, K. C., for the Respondents submitted that the term of nine years was fixed and certain and that the mortgage was really not redeemable before the expiry of the term. The mortgage-deed was in the possession of the Appellants but they withheld it. The High Court was right in finding that according to the true meaning of the mortgage it was not redeemable before the end of the nine years. The accounts filed with the plaint were incorrect. The Appellants themselves asserted that for the first two years they were out of possession. The statements in the plaint were after all pleadings drawn up by pleaders and they were really inferences incorrectly drawn from certain papers. The Respondents were not absolutely bound by the words of the plaint.

The Plaintiffs' cross-appeal was not argued.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The Suit which has given rise to these consolidated Appeals from a Decree and Judgment of the High Court of Allahabad was instituted by the Plaintiff-Respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore for the redemption of a mortgage executed so long ago as the 6th of January 1830. The Suit was brought on the 6th of January 1899, and the only and vital question presented at the Bar for determination in this case is whether the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitation (Indian Act XV of 1877).

The Plaintiff, Husaini Khanam, alleges that on the 6th of January 1830 her farther, Aga Fateh Ali, in conjunction with another relative named Aman Ali, executed a mortgage by way of conditional sale in respect of 12 villages lying within the district of Cawnpore in favour of one Ata Ullah Khan, since deceased. The other Plaintiffs are persons who have acquired title from Husaini Khanam. The principal Defendant in the action was one Ali Husain Khan, who was the representative of Ata Ullah. He died since the decision by the High Court in the Appeal from the Decree of the Subordinate Judge, and he is now represented by his widow, Bakhtawar Begam, the Appellant. The remaining Defendants are assignees of interests created by the original mortgagee or his representatives in the mortgaged premises.

The mortgage deed is not forthcoming, but both the Courts in India have found that the contract between the parties to the transaction is, for all material purposes, substantially set forth in the Proceeding of the Collector's Court, dated the 18th of September 1830, on an application for mutation of names in the Revenue Register.

The contract of mortgage by conditional sale is a form of security recognised throughout India, and its incidents have been embodied in sec. 58 of Act IV of 1882 (the Transfer of Property Act). The form it usually takes is for the mortgagor to execute a deed of sale in respect of the mortgaged property in favour of the mortgagee who on his side executes an agreement covenanting that on the liquidation of the debt, according to the terms of the contract, the sale would be cancelled, and he would re-convey the property to the mortgagor. On the breach of the condition relating to repayment the contract executes itself, and the transaction becomes one of absolute sale.

The Proceeding which contains the contract in this case is set out in full in the judgment of the High Court. The only material part to which their Lordships need refer is the clause relating to repayment, which runs as follows :—

"On being asked Sital Parshad, attorney of Ataullah Khan, stated that his client had executed and made over to Mirza Aman Ali and Fateh Ali an agreement to the effect that the sale would be cancelled on payment of the amount of consideration in nine years, and that, therefore, the sale was not an absolute but a conditional sale."

The period of limitation under the Indian Statute for suits for redemption or for recovery of possession of mortgaged property is sixty years from the date of the accrual of the right to redeem or to recover possession (Art. 148, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877). The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that limitation began to run from the date of the contract, and accordingly held that the suit was barred. The High Court of Allahabad on appeal have taken a different view. The learned Judges considered inter alia that the right to redeem in respect of the seven villages which were in the possession of the mortgagee's representatives accrued only on the expiration of the period of nine years for which the contract was made, but that as regards the five villages which had been transferred by the mortgagee to third parties the claim was barred. They accordingly decreed the Plaintiffs' claim in respect of seven villages and dismissed it with regard to the rest.

The Defendants have appealed from the first part of the High Court decree, against which there is a cross-appeal on the part of the Plaintiffs.

The first question to determine is whether the Plaintiffs' right to redeem is affected by 60 years' limitation, for in that case her claim must fail in toto. The learned Judges dealing with this point give expression to their opinion in the following passage in their judgment :—

"If the meaning of this contemporaneous agreement was that the mortgagors might redeem at any time within the period of nine years, the Plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation. If, on the other hand, the intention of the parties was that the debt should remain outstanding for a period of nine years certain, then the right to redeem only accrued at the expiration of that period. Ordinarily, a mortgagor cannot, before the time limited for payment to the mortgagee expires, take proceedings to redeem. The reason for this is, that it was the agreement of the parties that the mortgage should, during the intervening time, remain as security for the money advanced, and therefore it is not competent for either party to disturb that relation."

And they refer to a number of cases in support of their conclusion. Ordinarily, and in the absence of a special condition entitling the mortgagor to redeem during the term for which the mortgage is created, the right of redemption can only arise on the expiration of the specified period. But there is nothing in law to prevent the parties from making a provision that the mortgagor may discharge the debt within the specified period and take back the property. Such a provision is usually to the advantage of the mortgagor. In the present case had the matter depended only on the construction of the contract as given in the Proceeding of the Collector, much might be said in support of the High Court's conclusions. The expression that "the sale would be cancelled on payment of the consideration in nine years" is certainly ambiguous.

But here the Plaintiffs' case is that the mortgagors were entitled to recover the property within the period of nine years on the liquidation of the debt with the usufruct of the property. In the second paragraph of the plaint the Plaintiffs state as follows :—

"The terms of the mortgage as agreed were that the mortgagee should remain in possession of the said mortgaged villages . . . that the amount of profits, if any, which shall remain after paying the Government revenue, interest, and pay of the persons making the collections would be owned by the mortgagors and applied in the payment of the principal, and that whenever the mortgage money would be satisfied (out of the usufruct) or paid (by the mortgagors) before or after the stipulated time the mortgaged property should be redeemed."

And the fact is emphasised in para. 8 which is in these terms :—

"The whole amount of the principal mortgage money with interest mentioned in the mortgage-deed was paid up at the end of the year 1245 Fasli according to the account which is annexed to this Plaint and forms part of it. No portion of the mortgage money, interest or any other demand is now due; on the other hand, there is a surplus amount due to the Plaintiffs."

In their Lordships' judgment this is not a case of a wrong construction of a clause or condition in the contract. It is a distinct allegation of fact on which the right to recover possession is founded. But the matter does not rest there. The Plaintiffs produced with the Plaint a statement of accounts in respect of the 12 villages based on the settlement records to show the amounts realised by the mortgagee from 1830 to 1897. In this document it is clearly stated that the whole debt was satisfied in 1245 Fasli (4th September 1837—4th September 1838). From that time the balance of the realisations by the mortgagee after deduction of the legitimate outgoings is treated by the Plaintiffs as sums retained by him without any right.

If the fact be, as the Plaintiffs allege, that the mortgage debt became satisfied under the contract in 1838, the right to recover possession accrued then, and the suit is clearly barred.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the Decree of the High Court partly decreeing the Plaintiffs' claim should be set aside, and the suit dismissed, which will involve the dismissal also of the cross-appeal.

With regard to the costs their Lordships think that Jamna Narain, who represents the original assignee of the five villages in respect of which the Plaintiffs' suit has been dismissed by both the Courts in India, is entitled to the costs decreed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and in the High Court, and to the costs of these Appeals to His Majesty in Council. As regards the other parties, their Lordships think that the Plaintiffs should bear the costs decreed against them in the First Court, but that each of the parties should bear their respective costs of these Appeals and of the Appeals

Admissibility of evidence of prior transactions between the parties to the contract and to prove customs of trade tacitly incorporated in the contract, discussed.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on 12th of April 1912, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 15th of March 1912, passed in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 89 of 1910, which had been preferred against a decree of Babu Hari Prasanna Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 5th of October 1909, modifying a decree of Babu Madon Mohan Saha, Munsif of Chandpur, dated the 27th of February 1909.

This appeal arose out of a suit for rent based on a kabuliyat. The original kabuliyat could not be obtained and secondary evidence was given of it. The only point that arose in the appeal related to the rate at which the landlord Plaintiff was entitled to recover interest on the arrears of rent found due to him from the tenant Defendants.

The stipulation in the kabuliyat which relates to interest was that in the event of default in the payment of rent the tenant should pay interest at the rate of $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. After the words six and a quarter, came another word which had been penned through; and another word had been substituted. This last word could not be deciphered. The document itself did not show for what period this rate of $6\frac{1}{4}$ was. The landlord's case was that this rate was the rate per mensem and that the ordinary rate of interest in this country was the rate per mensem.

The Munsif allowed oral evidence to be given as to whether the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat was the rate per annum or the rate per mensem, and came to the conclusion on the evidence that it was the latter and gave the Plaintiff a decree accordingly. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the document was ambiguous but oral evidence of the character was inadmissible under sec. 93 of the Evidence Act. In the result he gave the Plaintiff damages at 25 per cent. on the arrears found.

On Second Appeal by the Plaintiff, Coxe, J., held as follows :—

"As to the contention that the rate of interest in any vernacular document in this country must be presumed to be a rate per mensem, that is certainly not a presumption of law which I am bound to take for granted. It is a matter which will have to be proved by evidence like any other fact.

"It was held in the case of Monmotha Nath Chowdhury v. Nabin Chandra Sanyal (1), that extraneous evidence can be given to clear up an ambiguity of the nature and it appears in this case that evidence of that kind was given. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has not considered that evidence but has proceeded exclusively on the document itself. It appears to me that in this the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law. If the document itself was ambiguous and extraneous evidence could be given to clear up the ambiguity the Subordinate Judge should in my opinion have considered that evidence and on the strength of that evidence should have arrived at some conclusion as to what was the intention of the parties, that is to say, whether the rate of interest agreed upon by them was 6¼ per mensem, or per annum, or per kist or any other rate. The case must, I think, go back to him for a finding on this point. It has also been argued that the rate claimed, should not be allowed as it is a hard and unconscionable rate. No doubt, it was held in Narendra Kumar Ghose v. Gora Chand Poddar (8) and Kalinath Sen v. Trailakhya Nath Roy (9), that a stipulation for excessive interest need not be enforced by the Courts if it is thought to be exorbitant. The rulings on this point, however, were not necessary for the purposes of the decisions and I find some difficulty in understanding how the Courts could decline to enforce such stipulations in the absence of any proof of undue influence or fiduciary relations. But I think that I need not go into the point because it was not raised apparently in the Courts below. In the Subordinate Judge's Court, of course, the Defendant succeeded, and it was not necessary for him to raise this point. But in the Munsif's Court he failed and the rate claimed by the landlord was decreed. It is clear from the judgment of the Munsif that it was not pressed before him and no evidence was given to show that this rate was one that ought not to be enforced, even if it had been agreed to by the tenant. I think therefore that it is undesirable to make any further inquiry on that point.

"Accordingly the appeal will be allowed and the case will go back to the learned Subordinate Judge in order that he may come to a finding after consideration of all the evidence in the case as to what was the intention of the parties with reference to the rate of interest the tenant was to pay and the case will be disposed of according to that finding.

"Costs will abide the result."

The Plaintiff preferred this further appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff landlord under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe in a suit for rent. The substantial question in controversy between the parties is as to the rate at which interest is payable upon the amount of rent in arrears. The contract between the parties is embodied in a kabuliyat executed on the 20th of June 1872. This document recited that interest would be paid by the tenant upon rent in arrears at the rate of 1 anna per rupee: The document does not expressly state whether interest at this rate was payable monthly or annually.

The Court of first instance allowed evidence to be given as to what was intended, and came to the conclusion that the interest intended to be payable was at the rate of 1 anna per rupee per month, that is 75 per cent. per annum. A decree was made accordingly in favour of the landlord. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the document was ambiguous, and that evidence could not be admitted to show what was really intended, in view of the provisions of sec. 93 of the Indian Evidence Act. In this view, the Subordinate Judge allowed damages at the rate of 25 per cent. upon the amount in arrears. The landlord then appealed to this Court and upon his appeal Mr. Justice Coxe has set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the case for reconsideration upon the evidence. The learned Judge has held upon the authority of the decision in Monmotha Nath v. Nabin Chandra (1), that evidence is admissible to show that the words used in the contract of tenancy were intended to provide that interest at the prescribed rate should be calculated monthly. The Plaintiff is not satisfied with the order of remand which has been made in his favour and has preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent. His contention is that upon a true construction of the contract of tenancy, interest ought to be decreed in his favour at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum. He has convinced us that the order of remand is erroneous, but he has failed to satisfy us that the interpretation he puts upon the contract is correct.

In view of the provisions of secs. 92 and 93 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is plain that oral evidence was not admissible to show what was intended by the parties: the intention must be gathered from the language used by them in the instrument. The case of Monmotha Nath v. Nabin Chandra (1) is really of no assistance. The learned Judges who decided that case did not specify the evidence which would be admissible to interpret the instrument: they relied merely upon the decision in Mahomed Sumsooddeen v. Abdool Huq (2), which was decided before the Indian Evidence Act was placed on the Statute Book. In that case Mr. Justice Campbell held that where money had been advanced on an agreement to pay interest at 5 per cent., evidence was admissible to show, on the basis of a previous transaction between the parties and the custom of the country, that what was intended was that interest at 5 per cent.

was payable per month and not per annum. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine whether evidence of this description would be admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. It may be pointed out, however, that evidence of previous transactions between the parties or of the custom of the country may be admissible for a limited purpose. Thus to take one illustration—it has been held that evidence may be allowed to be given in anticipation of some obvious defence, for instance, evidence of prior transactions between the parties, to construe a term in a contract, in rebuttal of a possible customary meaning ; Bourne v. Gatliff (3) ; similarly in Robinson v. Mollette (4), it was held that though a writing is conclusive as to the terms of the contract expressed thereby, and though what is not in the writing cannot be part of the terms, yet evidence may be given of customs of trade tacitly incorporated in the contract, provided that the express terms of the writing are not so inconsistent with the custom as to exclude it. In the case of Cumming v. Shand (5), evidence was allowed to be given, of course of dealing between a person and his Bank, to prove that the Bank had agreed to honour the customer's cheques drawn against the cash part of his account, notwithstanding that the balance of account of cash and goods was against him. To the same effect is Garnett v. M'kewan (6), where it was assumed that evidence of usage or course of dealing would be admissible to show that when a person has accounts at two branches of a Bank, the bankers had undertaken to cash cheques at one branch, though the whole account showed that the customer had no sufficient balance. Again in Rowcliffe v. Leigh (7), evidence of custom as also of previous transactions between the parties was allowed to be given for a limited purpose. In the case before us, however, no such consideration arises, because the only evidence upon which the Plaintiff relies is direct oral evidence to the effect that at the time the parties entered into this contract of tenancy they agreed that interest would be payable at the rate of 1 anna per rupee per month, although in the contract itself all that was inserted was that interest would be payable at the rate of 1 anna per rupee. In our opinion, evidence of this description is clearly not admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. This view is fortified by ill. 6 to sec. 93 of the Indian Evidence Act which is to the following effect : A deed contains blanks. Evidence cannot be given of facts which would show how they were meant to be filled. If, for instance, in this particular case the contract had said that interest would be payable at the rate of 1 anna per rupee per, and there was a blank, it would not be permissible to the parties to show whether the word intended to be inserted in the blank space was "year" or "month." We are therefore clearly of opinion that the order of remand ought not to have been made by the learned Judge.

The result is that the Appeal is allowed, the order of Mr. Justice Coxe set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored.

We are not in a position to consider the propriety of the judgment of the

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2920 OF 1909.

NEWBOULD, J. RAY, J. 1913, Heard, 14, and 15, August. Judgment, 15, August.	MONMOHAN GHOSH, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. EQUITABLE COAL COMPANY, LIMITED and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 42—Assignee from tenant, if may sue landlord for recognition of his tenant rights and declaration of incidents of tenancy—Landlord and tenant.

The Court has power to pass a declaratory decree in a suit by an assignee of a lease against the lessor to have it declared that the lease is a permanent, heritable and transferable one, that the rent was fixed in perpetuity and that the lessor was bound to recognise the Plaintiff as tenant of the leasehold.

The law laid down in earlier rulings to the contrary has been modified by sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 6th of December 1909 against the decree of D. H. Kingsford, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, dated the 25th of August 1909, reversing the decree of Dr. V. Rai, Munsif of Giridih, dated the 23rd of December 1908.

The suit out of which this appeal arose purported to have been instituted under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The Plaintiff's case was that Defendant No. 2 obtained a lease of the land in suit, measuring more or less 12 cottahs according to local measurement, from Defendant No. 1 and executed and registered a kabuliyat in Asar 1290 (July 1883); that the lease was a permanent, heritable and transferable one and was obtained for building purposes; that Defendant No. 2 erected a pucca building thereon and owned and possessed the land till June 1889, when he sold the land with the buildings to the husband of Defendant No. 3; that Defendant No. 3's husband who was recognized by Defendant No. 1 as tenant held and occupied the leasehold till his death, and after his death, his widow, the Defendant No. 3, sold the property in July 1905 to the Plaintiff's father who occupied the land and houses to the knowledge of the Defendant No. 1 and made considerable additions and alterations to it; that the Plaintiff's father died in Bhadra 1312 and his rights vested in the Plaintiff as the sole executor of his estate, that through the influence of designing persons the Defendant No. 1 sued the original lessee, Defendant No. 2, for rent ignoring the subsequent purchasers and occupiers and got an ex parte decree, that the Plaintiff coming to know of the decree, deposited the decretal amount, the rent having been really in arrears, and in his application he put forward his right and the decree was entered as satisfied; that Defendant No. 1 having failed in his attempt to wrest the property from the Plaintiff's hand, instituted an enhancement suit against the same original lessee and that Plaintiff applied to be made a party in that suit, but his petition was rejected as being made too late and likely to delay the decision of the case and as the decision in that suit could not bind the Plaintiff; that the above decrees having thrown a cloud on Plaintiff's right he gave formal notice to the manager of the Defendant No. 1, a limited Company and remitted the amount of rent in arrears ; that the rent was refused and no notice was taken of Plaintiff's formal notice. That in consequence the Plaintiff brought the suit for a declaration, (1) that the lease of 14th July 1883 created a permanent, heritable and transferable leasehold and that the rent thereof was fixed, (2) that Defendant No. 1 was estopped from denying the permanant hereditary character of the leasehold, (3) that the Defendant No. 1 was bound to recognize the Plaintiff as tenant of the leasehold, (4) that the decrees for arrears of rent and for enchancement of rent were not binding on the Plaintiff, and (5) that the latter decree was not binding on the leasehold. The Plaintiff also claimed costs and asked that any other relief to which he might be found entitled, might be granted to him.

The Defendant No. 1 contested the suit and denied that there was any cause of action against them, asserted that the rent-suit and the enhancement suit were entirely proper and denied that they were instituted from wrong motives. They denied the transfers and all knowledge of the transfers and urged that transfers without their knowledge were not binding on them. They stated that the lease was of 12 cottahs of land according to standard measurement and that the tenancy now comprised 1 bigha 18 cottahs of land, that the tenancy was bound by the enhancement decree, that none of the alleged successors of the original lessee made any attempt to have his or her name registered in their sherista, and that they had sent a reply to the Plaintiff's formal notice. They further asserted that Plaintiff had wrongly described the eastern and the western boundaries of the land originally leased out. They denied that the lease created a transferable tenancy or one with fixed rent.

Several issues arose out of these pleadings, of which the following two are material for the purposes of this report :—

"First—Has the Plaintiff any cause of action.

"Fifth—What is the standard of measurement according to which the area of the lease has to be calculated."

The Munsif decided all the issues in favour of the Plaintiff and decreed the suit in terms of the prayer in the plaint. On the fifth issue, he held that the standard of measurement was as the Plaintiff alleged "6 cubits to a cottah" and not "4 cubits to a cottah" as contended by the Defendant No. 1.

On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner held that the standard of measurement was "4 cubits to a cottah" as alleged by the Defendant and that worked out the rent to Rs. 19 which was the rent decreed in the enhancement suit. On the first issue, he agreed that the Plaintiff had a cause of action, but he was of opinion that on the facts the Plaintiff was not entitled to any declaration and that if he sent the Company a proper notice of assignment and agreed to pay the rent of Rs. 19, the Company were ready and willing to recognise him. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

Plaintiff preferred this Second Appeal.

Mr. B. C. Mitter and Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiff in this suit is an assignee of a lease which was granted by the first

Defendant to the second Defendant. The Plaintiff brought this suit to have it declared that the lease was a permanent, heritable and transferable one, that the rent was fixed in perpetuity and also that Defendant No. 1 was bound to recognise the Plaintiff as tenant of the leasehold in dispute and for other reliefs.

It is now admitted that the lease created a permanent, heritable and transferable tenancy and that the transfer to the Plaintiff is a valid transfer. But it is contended that the circumstances of the case are not such as would justify granting a declaratory decree. The learned Standing Counsel who appears for the first Defendant-Respondent has cited several rulings in support of this contention. But all these rulings were before the passing of the Specific Relief Act. Illustrations to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act show that it has introduced a considerable change in the law on this point. We have no doubt in our mind that we have the power to grant a declaratory decree in this case. The granting of such a decree is discretionary. We think that it is desirable to grant such a decree so that there may be a final decision on the points in dispute about which the parties have been litigating. As a Court of Second Appeal we are bound to accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the word "cottah" in the lease means a cottah of four cubits and also the finding that the rent payable by the Plaintiff is Rs. 19 annually. That is to say, the Plaintiff has succeeded in his claim that he is entitled to recognition; but he has failed so far as he has tried to avoid payment of rent at a higher rate. For this reason we allow this Appeal by granting the Plaintiff a decree declaring that the lease of the 14th July 1883 granted by Defendant No. 1 to Joynarayan Sarkar, Defendant No. 2, created a permanent, heritable and transferable tenancy and that the rent thereof is a rent at a fixed rate per cottah of four cubits and that the annual rent is now Rs. 19. And it is also declared that the Defendant No. 1 is bound to recognise the Plaintiff as the tenant holding the tenancy.

Having regard to the success and failure of the parties we direct that each party will bear its own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed in part.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 52 (1), (b), 180 (1)—Diara land, tenant holding—Reduction of rent upon diluviation, if may be claimed by him.

A raiyat who holds diara land cannot until he has acquired occupancy right in his holding by twelve years' continuous possession demand a reduction of rent under cl. (b) of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

"Holding" in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 180 of the Act means the holding as the tenant received it from the landlord.

(1) 14 C. W. N. 470 (1910).

SRINIBASH PROSHAD SINGH v. RAM RAJ TEWARI.

Judge of Zillah Arrah, dated the 1st of December 1909.

The two rent suits out of which these appeals arose were based on two registered kabuliyats, dated the 10th November 1903 and 8th March 1905, respectively. Suit No. 197 was based on the first kabuliyat and the Suit No. 108 on the second kabuliyat. The first kabuliyat was executed for 200 bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 1,443-12 annas. The second kabuliyat was executed for 229 bighas 9 cottahs 19 dhurs of land at a rental of Rs. 1,689-4-6 pies. The amount claimed was Rs. 7,218-12 annas, including damages, in Suit No. 107, and Rs. 8,446-6-6 pies, including damages, in Suit No. 108, for the years 1312 to 1315.

The Defendants pleaded reduction of rent on the ground of diluvion as also under an alleged village usage under which no rent is payable for sandy unculturable lands.

A commission was issued for the purpose of ascertaining by what quantity of land, if any, the Defendants' holdings had been diluviated and what quantity, if any, was sandy unculturable land.

According to the report of the Commissioner, the Plaintiff's agents pointed out two plots of land measuring 100 bighas 6 cottahs 8½ dhurs, as appertaining to the holding which was the subject-matter of Suit No. 107, out of which 8 bighas were partly culturable and 9½ bighas 6 cottahs 18½ dhurs were purti and jungle.

In Suit No. 108 the Plaintiff's agents pointed out 6 plots measuring 113 bighas 3 cottahs 13 dhurs, as appertaining to the holding of the Defendant of this suit, out of which 38 bighas 3 cottahs 4 dhurs were culturable and 75 bighas 9 cottahs were purti and bijmar.

It appeared from the report of the Commissioner that out of the holding, which was the subject-matter of Suit No. 107 about 110 bighas 10 cottahs 3 dhurs had been diluviated and 92 bighas 6 cottahs 18½ dhurs are purti and jungle and out of the holding which was the subject-matter of Suit No. 108, 115 bighas 16 cottahs 7 dhurs had been diluviated and 75 bighas 9 cottahs were purti and jungle.

The Subordinate Judge held that the Defendants were entitled to a proportionate reduction of rent on account of the lands which had been diluviated and also that it was clearly proved by the evidence adduced on behalf of the Defendants that according to local usage, no rent was payable for sandy unculturable lands; that there was no doubt a stipulation in the kabuliyats of the Defendants to the effect that no objection as to any usage or custom should be allowed; and under proviso 5 to sec. 92 of the Evidence Act, evidence of usage or custom by which incidents not expressly mentioned in any contract are usually annexed to such contract may be given, if such usages or customs are not expressly mentioned in the contract. But the kabuliyats were in a printed form usually used in the Raj estate, and the stipulation in question was in such vague and general terms that it ought not to preclude the Defendant from claiming reduction of rent on the ground of usage. The Subordinate Judge added that the lands were diara land: of which the culturable area varied according to the nature of the silt deposited during the rainy seasons, and it was therefore very reasonable that tenants holding agricultural leases should be made liable for the culturable lands only.

SRINIBASH PROSHAD SINGH v. RAM RAJ TEWARI.

In the result he held that Defendants were liable for the rent of the culturable areas only which were in their possession, viz., in Suit No. 107, on 8 bighas and in Suit No. 108, on 38 bighas 3 cottahs 4 dhurs. The Defendants, he held, were liable for the rent of these lands only, and the rent payable for these lands would bear the same proportion to the entire jumma as the culturable areas found bore to the entire area.

The Plaintiff appealed.

Babus Provash Chandra Mitra and Susil Madhub Mullick for the Appellant.

Babu Tarakeshwar Pal Chowdhury for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These Appeals arise out of two decrees in two suits which were tried together. The Plaintiff sued on two kabuliyats, one executed on the 10th November 1903 and the other on the 8th March 1905. They were couched in similar terms.

The defence set up by the Defendants is that a great portion of the land which they took under the kabuliyats has either been washed away by the river or rendered unfit for cultivation by reason of the accumulation of sand and other matters upon it. Looking into the case from the point of view of facts it is necessary for the Defendants to prove that the land became unculturable during the whole or part of the period in respect of which the Plaintiff is suing for his rent. This, the Defendants have, in our opinion, failed to do. Their case, as made out in the written statements as amended by their subsequent petition, and by their evidence, is that the damage was done to the land referred to in the kabuliyats in 1311 which is equivalent to 1904, that is to say, at all events after they had executed the first kabuliyat and before they had executed the second. If the land had been so damaged it is impossible to suppose that they would have executed the second kabuliyat after the damage was done. We therefore cannot place any reliance on the evidence given by the Defendants or that of their witnesses as to the date of the damage caused. They have therefore failed to prove that the damage was caused during the period in suit. The land was investigated by an officer of the Court below after the actions had been brought, at a reasonably early opportunity and there is no doubt that in a holding of 200 bighas there were then found only 8, culturable, and in another holding of 229 bighas there were only 28 bighas found culturable. The damage therefore must have been caused before them, but the Defendants have failed to prove, as they should have proved in order to establish their case, when the damage did actually occur. The Defendants' case therefore must fail in point of fact. Nor would their case be any better if the contention advanced as to the date of the damage to the land in question were allowed to prevail. The two kabuliyats which are in the same form contain clauses which we read as providing that neither celestial or terrestrial disturbances nor any village practice or usage not specified in kabuliyat shall be allowed as a ground for non-payment of the full rent reserved. No custom or usage of the village is so specified. In the first place the Defendants set up before the lower Court a plea that there was a custom in the village that when lands were damaged by the river, reduction should be made in the rent : and this contention was allowed by the Court below. In this, we think the lower Court was wrong; for, in the first place, such a claim is met by the specific provision in the kabuliyat which we have just quoted. In the second place it is met by the fifth proviso to sec. 92 of the Evidence Act. The Defendants therefore can make no case on the point of custom in the village.

In the next place, the Defendants rely on the provisions of sec. 52, cl. (1), sub-cl. (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and say that they are entitled to a reduction of rent, on it being proved that there is a deficiency in the holding which they took under the kabuliyats. The answer, however, to this contention is to be found in sec. 180 of the Bengal Tenancy Act wherein it is provided, that notwithstanding anything in the Act, a raiyat who holds diara lands (and these lands are admitted to be diara lands) does not acquire any right of occupancy till he has occupied them for 12 continuous years; and that until he acquires such right he is liable to pay such rent for his holding as may be agreed upon between him and his landlord. In this section the words "his holding" must be taken to mean the holding as he received from his landlord, and consequently the provisions of sec. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to which we have referred, do not apply. After a careful consideration, we are of opinion that this is the effect of the words of the section as they stand. There is no direct authority on the point, but the view which we have expressed is consistent with the application of the section which was given effect to in a decision in the case of Jahander Baksh Mullik v. Ram Lal Huzra (1).

The result is that these Appeals must be allowed and the landlord is entitled to his full rent for the two holdings for the period in suits, that is to say for the full amount claimed in the plaint.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and also in the Court below.

Appeals allowed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the second Defendant in an action in ejectment. The subject-matter of the litigation consists of nine parcels of land, which, the Plaintiff alleges, are comprised in a tenancy held by the thirteenth Defendant under him. The case for the Plaintiff is that in 1903 the tenant unlawfully transferred a portion of the holding to the contesting Defendants, that thereafter, on the 27th May 1908, the tenant surrendered the holding in his favour, and, that consequently, he is entitled to recover possession thereof. The Court of first instance found with regard to two of the plots, namely, the first and the third, that they were not included in the tenancy of the thirteenth Defendant. As regards the surrender, the Court found that it was fictitious, as notwithstanding the execution of the deed of release, the tenant had continued in occupation of the remainder of the land. In this view, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, that decree has been reversed by the Subordinate Judge. On the question of the genuineness of the surrender, the finding of the Subordinate Judge is ambiguous. He states that even if the deed be collusive and intended to cheat the transferee, the latter has his remedy against the transferrer. In the opinion of the Subordinate Judge the Plaintiff is entitled to re-enter even though there has been no real surrender in his favour. The second Defendant has now appealed to this Court, and on his behalf the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that the Plaintiff cannot succeed inasmuch as there is no real surrender in his favour ; and, secondly, that the Plaintiff is not entitled to re-enter, because even if the surrender represents a real transaction, it does not affect the interest or prejudice the position of the transferee.

In so far as the first point is concerned, it is plain that the Subordinate Judge has not reversed the clear findings of the Court of first instance. That Court found that notwithstanding the execution of the deed of surrender, on the 27th May 1908, the tenant has continued in occupation of the homestead and a portion of the remaining land of the tenancy. That finding is not displaced by the Subordinate Judge. On the other hand, the Subordinate Judge holds that the tenant, no withstanding the execution of the deed of relase, has continued in occupation with the permission of the landlord. In our opinion, there is no room for doubt that the alleged surrender was collusive. It has been argued, however, that even if the surrender was collusive, the Plaintiff is entitled to re-enter. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this contention. If the surrender was collusive, the tenancy of the thirteenth Defendant has not yet terminated, and, so long as that tenancy subsists, the Plaintiff is not entitled to eject the transferee. It has been ruled in a series of cases of this Court, amongst which may be mentioned those of Chandra Mohun v. Bisseswar (1), Durga Prosad

(1) 1 C. W. N. 168 (1892).

ASKAR ALI v. GOUPEE MOHAN CHOWDHURY.

Sen v. Doula Gazee (2) and Kabil Sardar v. Chandra Nath Nag Chowdhury (3), that as long as the tenancy subsists, the landlord is not entitled to eject the transferee of a portion of the holding. The first ground must consequently succeed.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, reliance has been placed by the Respondent upon the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (4) to show thar a purchaser of a portion of a holding is not protected under sub-sec. (6) of sec. 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the view we take of the rights of the parties with reference to the first question raised before us, it is not necessary to decide whether the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (4) furnishes a correct exposition of the law. We may point out, however, with regard to that decision that there are at least four points which require consideration. In the first place, the learned Judges adopted, for the purposes of the interpretation of sec. 86 which finds place in Chap. IX of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the definition of the term 'incumbrance' given for the purpose of Chap. XIV alone. In the second place, the decision of this Court in the case of Chandra Sakai v. Kali Prasanna (5), shows that an exchange is an encumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and in relation to the question raised before us, there does not appear to be any real distinction between an exchange and a sale. In the third place, the effect of the decision is to place the purchaser in a worse position than a mortgagee or lessee under sub-sec. (6) of sec. 86. In the fourth place, it may be a question, whether there can be a surrender effective for the purposes of sec. 86 when the conditions mentioned in sub-sec. (5) cannot be fulfilled. But as we have already said it is not necessary for us to determine, whether the case of Tamizuddin Khan v. Khoda Nawaz Khan (4) was correctly decided, and we reserve our opinion upon the question involved in that litigation.

It has finally been urged that the case of Gagan Chandra Chowdhury v. Alek Chand Saha (6) assists the contention of the Respondent. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable. There, it was ruled, upon the authority of the earlier decisions in Badan Chandra Das v. Rajeswari Debya (7) and Rajendra Kishore Adhikari v. Chandra Nath Dutt (8), that when there has been a surrender of a part of a holding by a tenant the landlord is entitled to re-enter, even though he is aware that there is some one else in possession claiming under a title derived from the tenant. But it has been overlooked by the learned Vakil for the Respondent that in Gagan Chandra Chowdhury v. Alek Chand Saha (6), there was no encumbrance secured by a registered instrument within the meaning of sub-sec. 86.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance. restored. This order will carry costs, both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1037 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
27, February.

PARBATI and another, Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
TOOLSHI KAPRI and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 106, 107—Suit dismissed for default of Plaintiff, after evidence of Defendants taken and examined—Formal decree drawn up—Order of dismissal if appealable—"Decision," meaning of, if excludes dismissal for default.

The decision of a Settlement Officer to which the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court is given by sec. 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not include an order of dismissal of a suit under sec. 106 of the Act for default, the word 'decision' implying an adjudication on the merits.

Where in such a suit, the Plaintiff being absent, the Court received the evidence of the Defendants, expressed an opinion on the merits but ultimately made an order of dismissal for default under r. 8 of Or. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code :

Held—That the order was, as it could only have been made, under r. 8 of Or. 9. The Court should not have received the Defendants' evidence or examined the merits of the case.

That a formal decree which was unnecessarily drawn up did not alter the nature of the order which was not a decree and was not open to appeal.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 4th of May 1911 against the decree of J. C. Twidell Esq., District Judge of Zillah Bhagalpore, dated the 16th of January 1911, affirming the decree of Babu Suresh Chandra Chackrabartty, Assistant Settlement Officer of Monghyr, dated the 13th of August 1910.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Mitra and Jogendra Nath Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal against an order by which the Court of Appeal below has dismissed an appeal as incompetent. The Appellant was the Plaintiff in a suit under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which was dismissed for default on the 13th August 1910. The Court in the absence of the Plaintiff, received the evidence of the Defendants, expressed an opinion on the merits of the case, but ultimately made an order of dismissal for default under r. 8 of Or. 9 of the Code of 1908. The Plaintiff did not apply under r. 9 for restoration of the suit, but preferred an appeal to the Special Judge who dismissed the appeal on the 16th January 1911. We are now invited to set aside this order and to hold that the appeal was competent, inasmuch as the Court of first instance had recorded the evidence of the Defendants and had drawn up a formal decree. We are of opinion that there is no substance in this contention.

The order, on the face of it, purports to have been made, and could only have been made under r. 8 of Or. 9. As was pointed out by Jackson, J., in Buldeo Misser v. Syud Ahmed Hossein (1), and by Couch, C. J., in Mohesh Chunder v. Thakoor Das (2), the Court should not have received the evidence on behalf of the Defendants nor should the merits have been examined, it was also unnecessary to draw up a formal decree. The fact that the decree was drawn up obviously cannot alter the nature of the order which must depend upon the circumstances under which it was made. Now it is clear that under sec. 2 of the Code of 1908 this order of dismissal for default is not a decree, and is not liable to be challenged by way of appeal. As was pointed out by this Court in the case of Rukminimayi Dasi v. Paran Chandra Bhera (3), the Code of 1908 has in this respect altered the pre-existing law. But much stress has been laid upon sec. 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which it has been argued, controls the effect of sec. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. In our opinion, sec. 107 does not assist the Appellants. The section merely provides that a suit under sec. 106 is to be tried in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code for trial of suits and that the decision in every such proceeding shall have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties. The term 'decision' plainly implies an adjudication on the merits and does not include an order of dismissal of the suit for default. The conclusion follows that the appeal presented to the Special Judge was incompetent, and has been rightly thrown out. The present Appeal consequently fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1134 OF 1911.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1913,
Heard, 22, and 23, July.
Judgment, 30, July.

JEHETO SHEIKH, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
JAIBANNESSA BIBEE, Defendant, Respondent.

The Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 33—The Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), secs. 7, 72, 73, 74, 75—Mortgage bond—Denial of execution, refusal of registration—Examination of attesting witnesses by Registrar—Compulsory registration—Death of attesting witnesses—Suit on mortgage—Evidence recorded by registrar if admissible under sec. 33, Evidence Act—Special Registrar or Sub-Registrar at head-quarters, powers of.

A mortgage bond was presented for registration by the mortgagee before the Special Registrar. The executant denied execution and the Special Registrar, acting for the Registrar, refused registration but after making an enquiry during which he examined the attesting witnesses registered the document. Subsequently, the mortgagee brought a suit on the mortgage but during the interval the attesting witnesses, all but one, had died and the depositions recorded during the registration enquiry were tendered as evidence:

Held—That the evidence given by the deceased attesting witnesses who were duly cross-examined before the Special Registrar was relevant and admissible in the present suit under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 8th of May 1911 against a decree of B. C. Mitra, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Murshidabad, dated the 8th of February 1911, reversing a decree of Babu Tinkari Chow-dry, Munsif of Lalbag, dated the 26th of February 1910.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chunder Mojumdar and Upendra Narain Bagchi for the Appellant.

Moulvi Syed Mahomed Tahir for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Plaintiff, who is the Appellant, brought this suit or a mortgage bond against the Defendant who is a purdanashin lady. The facts antecedent to the institution of the present suit are these:—

The document in question was presented by Jehali Sheikh, the mortgagee, on the 2nd October 1901, before a Special Registrar, viz., Mahomed Amiruddin, who, it appears, was at the time acting for the Registrar. On the denial of execution by the executant (Defendant in the present suit), the Special Registrar, still acting for the Registrar, refused registration of that document. He however after making an enquiry during which he examined the attesting witnesses, registered the document on the 11th March 1902. He signed this order describing himself as acting for the Registrar.

On the 17th August 1909; the present suit was instituted by the mortgagee. It appears however that during the interval all the attesting witnesses but one died. During the trial of the suit before the Munsif the depositions recorded during the registration enquiry were tendered as relevant evidence under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act. That Court admitted that evidence and relying on it gave a decree to the Plaintiff. The Defendant thereupon preferred an Appeal to the District Judge who allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on 8th February 1911. The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and the only question raised in the present Appeal is whether under sec. 33 of the Evidence Act the deposition of the deceased witnesses are admissible or not. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is against the admissibility of that evidence. The lower Appellate Court has however observed to the following effect regarding the statement of the deceased witnesses:—

"If that evidence can be accepted as legally admissible I must hold that the finding of the lower Court is correct and that the appeal should be dismissed." The above finding is tantamount to this that if the lower Appellate Court had ruled in favour of the admissibility of those statements it would have dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree passed by the first Court. We have therefore to see as to whether these statements are relevant and admissible.

The word "evidence" means and includes all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses in relation to matters of fact under enquiry: such statements are called oral evidence (sec. 3 of the Evidence Act).

The word 'Court' includes all Judges and Magistrates and all persons, except arbitrators, legally authorised to take evidence (sec. 3, Evidence Act).

Let us now turn to sec. 33 of the Evidence Act. It, no doubt, relates also to evidence given by a witness before "any person authorised by law to take it." It is further provided by that section that the proceeding should be between the same parties or their representatives in interest, that the adverse party in the first proceeding had the right and opportunity to cross-examine and that the questions in issue were substantially the same in the first as in the second proceeding. Let us now see whether the necessary requirements of this section of the Evidence Act were present or not at the time when the depositions were tendered in evidence. The witnesses whose statements were tendered were dead at the time : the proceeding before the Special Registrar was between the parties to the present suit. It appears from the record that those witnesses were cross-examined on behalf of the Defendant and the question in issue in the previous proceeding as in the suit itself was whether the Defendant had executed the document in question. The only thing to be seen is whether the previous proceeding was a judicial proceeding or whether the Special Registrar was authorised by law to record the statements of those witnesses. We find from the record that those statements were made on solemn affirmation.

The Appellant's contention is that the registration proceeding was a judicial proceeding or at any rate the Special Registrar was a person authorised by law to take that evidence. We have been referred to sec. 75 of the Registration Act (Act III of 1877 which was then in force) which empowers the Registrar for the purpose of any enquiry under sec. 74 " to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and compel to give evidence, as if he were a Civil Court." This is a power given to the Registrar : we have therefore to see whether the Special Registrar who is a Sub-Registrar had any power to summon and enforce the attendance of any witness and compel him to give evidence before him. Before we decide this question we have to observe that under sec. 72 of the Act no appeal is allowed to the Registrar if the Sub-Registrar refuses to register a document on the ground of denial of execution by the executant. Sec. 73 of the Act provides that in the case of a refusal by a Sub-Registrar, on a denial of execution, the aggrieved party "may apply to the Registrar to whom such Sub-Registrar is subordinate in order to establish his right to have the document registered." Sec. 74 provides that in the case of a refusal by a Sub-Registrar as also where such denial is made before a Registrar, the Registrar can make an enquiry. Then comes sec. 75 which empowers the Registrar "to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and compel them to give evidence, as if he were a Civil Court."

On behalf of the Respondent it has been contended that the Special Registrar was the officer who in the first instance had refused the registration, and it was improper on his part to order the registration of that document because it amounted to sitting on appeal against his own order and we have been referred to the proviso of sec. 7 of the Act which runs thus :—

"Provided that no such authorisation shall enable a Sub-Registrar to hear an appeal against an order passed by himself under this Act."

There can be no doubt that the whole proceeding in the Registration office would have been improper if the law had allowed an appeal against an order of refusal by a Sub-Registrar on a denial of execution by the executant but as already pointed out no appeal is allowed by the Act when such a refusal order is passed by a Sub-Registrar. The aggrieved party may approach the Registrar in such a case with an application "in order to establish his right to have the document registered." Such a procedure cannot be treated as an appeal and hence sec. 7 of the Act has no application.

We have now to determine as to whether the Special Registrar was a person authorised by law to record the statements of witnesses in an enquiry under sec. 74 of the Registration Act.

Sec. 69 empowers the Inspector-General to make rules consistent with the Act. The rules so made are required to be submitted to the Local Government for approval and after such approval they are further required to be published in the Official Gazette. On such publication those rules have the force of law.

With reference to sec. 7 of the Act the rule framed by the Inspector-General is to the following effect:—

"The Sub Registrar at the head-quarters of a District (Special Registrar) whose office has been amalgamated with that of the Registrar, will, besides performing his own duties as Sub-Registrar act as the working Deputy of the Registrar exercising as a matter of routine all the functions of a Registrar, except the powers of supervision and control under sec. 68, and that of hearing appeals against orders refusing to register under sec. 72. On such occasions the Sub-Registrar should describe himself as acting for the Registrar." Under sec. 69 of the Act this rule has the force of law. It is therefore clear that excepting the power of hearing an appeal against an order of refusal by a Sub-Registrar on the ground of a denial of execution by the executant, he can, in accordance with the above rule, act for the Registrar in the case of an application under sec. 73. If under sec. 73 of the Act an application is made to the Registrar, the Sub-Registrar on the strength of the above rule can exercise the powers of a Registrar as given in cl. 4 of sec. 75 of the Act.

The above being the view that we have taken of the law on the subject we hold that the Sub-Registrar, Mahomed Amiruddin, had the power to summon witnesses and to compel their attendance before him to give evidence. That being our view we are of opinion that the proceeding during which the Sub-Registrar summoned the witnesses, examined them and recorded their statements on solemn affirmation and when the Defendant cross-examined those witnesses, was not an improper one. The evidence given by the deceased attesting witnesses is relevant and admissible in the present suit. The lower Appellate Court has found that if those statements had been admissible it would have dismissed the appeal and affirmed the finding of the first Court. We have already found that the statements of the deceased attesting witnesses are relevant and admissible in the present suit.

For the above reasons we set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and decree the suit by restoring the judgment and decree of the first Court. The Respondent will pay the costs of the present Appeal to the Appellant.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 966 OF 1911.

CARNDUFF, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1914, Heard, 29, January. Judgment, 11, February.

KUMUD LAL RAY and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. JOGENDRA MOHAN RAY and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

*Co-sharer, sole occupation by, of joint land—Ouster—Suit for joint possession—Justice, equity and good conscience—*Statu quo when maintained.

Where it is found that a portion of the joint land was marshy and was jointly possessed by all the co-owners although they had other lands in separate possession and that when the marsh silted up one of the co-owners occupied the silted up land to the exclusion of others :

Held, in a suit by one of the co-owners for joint possession—That there was ouster and Plaintiff was entitled to recover joint possession without bringing a suit for partition.

Where parties are contented with joint possession of a portion of the joint land and separate possession of the rest, from the point of view of justice, equity and good conscience the statuo quo ought to be restored and the party dissatisfied relegated to a suit for partition.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 24th of April 1911 against the decree of B. B. Newbould, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Dacca, dated the 29th of December 1910, confirming the decree of Babu Kishori Lal Sen, Subordinate Judge of of that District, dated the 23rd of May 1910.

The facts of the case are shortly these :—

Plaintiffs stated in their plaint that the disputed lands were formerly in marshy state and they were in joint possession with other co-owners by settling the jalkar with fisherman. That when the jalkar silted up partially and the lands became culturable the Defendants took exclusive possession but the Plaintiffs were in possession of the remaining jalkar. The defence was that Plaintiffs had no title and possession, that the suit was barred by limitation ; that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to joint possession but must bring a suit for partition as each co-owner was in separate possession of portions of the joint estate. The first Court decreed the suit upon the findings that Plaintiffs were in possession while the disputed lands were marshy by recovering jalkar rent from the fishermen ; but he also found that the co-owners were in separate possession of portions of the joint estate. The Court of Appeal below affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance.

The Defendants preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty (with Babu Jnanendra Nath Sarkar) for the Appellants.—In this case the Plaintiff cannot get a decree for joint possession upon the findings of the Courts below. It is found that each co-owner is in possession of separate parcels of joint property and it is found that there is no evidence that the Defendants are in possession of more lands than they would be entitled to in their own share. The case of Surendra v. Hari (1) does not apply here. Reliance was placed upon the case Basanta Kumari Dassya v. Mohesh Chandra Shaha (2), Mahesh v. Nowbat (3), Watson v. Ram Chand Dutt (4), Dwijendra v. Purnendu (5).

KUMUD LAL RAY v. JOGENDRA MOHAN RAY.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose (with Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee) for the Respondents.—I submit that the decree passed in favour of my clients is correct. In the first place I want to point out that the Plaintiffs do not seek to recover khas possession of the lands in suit by ejecting the tenants settled by the Defendants but only the proportionate share of the rent from the tenants. The Defendants are not in actual occupation of the lands in suit. In this view the case of Basanta Kumari Dassay v. Mohesh Chandra Shaha (2) is distinguishable. I must also point out that the Defendants in their written statement assert an exclusive title in themselves and adduced evidence of adverse possession to the knowledge of the Plaintiffs for more than 12 years. The Courts below have disbelieved that evidence. The circumstances clearly show that there was ouster and the Plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession. The case in Mahesh v. Nowbat (3) is distinguishable as in that case there was no assertion of hostile title by the Defendants. The Defendants in that suit on the other hand stated that Plaintiff was at liberty to quarry the mines in his share. Watson's case (4) is in my favour. There money compensation was allowed. The Defendants were in actual occupation in Watson's case (4) ; that is not the case here. Cited, Ram v. Jnanada (6). Also the judgment of Fletcher and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ., in Sarat Chandra v. Rajendra Lal (7).

[CARNDUFF, J.—In this case the lower Courts find that there are separate parcels of the joint land in the separate possession of one co-owner or the other and that there is no evidence that the Defendants were in possession of more lands than they would be entitled to in their share. Under these circumstances how can you claim joint possession.]

Dr. Ghose.—I submit that the Plaintiffs can claim joint possession upon the findings. These lands were formerly marshy and it is found that the Plaintiffs were in possession of the marsh by receiving jalkar rent from the fishermen. When the marsh silted up, the Defendants took exclusive possession in denial of the title of my clients. As to the other lands of the joint estate of which the co-owners are in separate possession my submission is that that was under an arrangement between the co-owners and if that be so there is no cause of action with regard to those lands as there is no ouster. The co owners hold them by common consent. So far as the lands in suit are concerned there is an ouster and my clients can claim joint possession. It is for the other side to bring a suit for partition if they are dissatisfied with the previous state of possession of the co-owners. Here the finding is that when the lands became silted up 'the Defendants were the first in the field and they gave the word of command.' Upon this finding the case in Surendra Narain v. Hari Mohan (1) applies. Refers to Freeman on Co tenancy and Partition, s. 348.

an appellate decree giving the Respondents joint possession along with the Appellants, their co-sharers, of certain land appertaining to the estate which they hold in common.

I have had some difficulty in ascertaining what are the precise facts found. For in the Court of first instance the findings are not consistent, while the learned District Judge in the Court of Appeal below has not stated with any fulness his own findings or expressly declared how far he accepts those of the Subordinate Judge. The appellate judgment is, however, one of affirmance, and I think that a careful study of it along with the judgment of the first Court will show that the following are the facts which have been found, and with which we have now to deal.

The land in dispute forms part of what was once a marsh. The marsh was occupied by the co-sharers in common, the Respondents receiving from the fishermen who fished in it their share of the jalkar rent. Subsequently the process of silting began, and the land now in suit became culturable. Of it the Appellants at once proceeded to take entire possession by settling tenants upon it and recovering from them the whole rent. They admitted that they had done so, and their contention was and is that they were within their rights as co-owners, specially in view of the circumstance, as found, that there are other parts of the joint estate in the separate possession of one co-sharer or another. They further asserted, but failed to prove, that they had reclaimed the land at their own expense or spent any money in protecting the common title or inducting tenants.

The first Court found that there was no ouster because the Respondents "were never in actual possession of the disputed land" and have "never before this suit claimed to be admitted into possession," of it. But it had already found it "established beyond doubt that they had always received their share of their jalkar rent, and were still in receipt of such rent; and this can mean only one thing, namely, that before the silting process commenced, they were in joint possession of the marsh, receiving their share of the only rent then recoverable, and that they are even now obtaining their share of the jalkar rent in respect of so much of the original marsh as is still unculturable. Consequently the first Court's findings as to possession must be taken to refer to the land since it appeared above water, and all that they amount to is that the Respondents have never been in possession of the land in its culturable state. That is, of course, exactly the Respondents' case: for what they complained of is the action of the Appellants in pouncing upon the land as soon as it emerged and securing through tenants possession of it in its altered condition for themselves alone and to the exclusion of the Respondents.

The question is whether this was an ouster or not. In my view it was. True it is that it has been found that there is no evidence that the Appellants ever came upon the land save as the co-owners of the Respondents, or that they ever set up any other title. But the fact remains that they disturbed the Respondents' joint possession, and that seems to me to be ouster, almost exvitermini. The Respondents were the injured party, and I fail to appreciate the contention that they ought, if they find that they are now left with less than their proper share, to seek a remedy in a suit for partition. Before the land became culturable the parties appear to have been contented with joint possession of the marsh and separate possession of some of the lands outside it, and it seems to me that, from the point of view of justice, equity and good conscience, statu quo ought to be restored and the Respondents relegated to a suit for partition, if they are dissatisfied with what they seem to have been satisfied with before.

Several cases have been cited before us, but they are all distinguishable. That which most nearly resembles the present case is, I think, Surendra Narain v. Hari Mohan (1), where it is held that a co-sharer cannot seize any land newly added by accretion to the present joint estate and occupy it to the exclusion of his co sharers. The facts connected with Basanta Kumari v. Mohesh Chandra (2), on which the Appellant has chiefly relied, are very different from those before us now. In the latter each of the co-sharers concerned was admittedly in sole occupation of khamar land appertaining to the joint property, and one of them commenced to build on the land he occupied. No substantial injury by reason of this was alleged, and it was held that his conduct was not inconsistent with the joint ownership of the property as a whole, and that, in the circumstances, there had been no ouster.

I would dismiss this Appeal with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—The fact that the Plaintiffs and the Defendants are in separate possession of other parts of the joint property has, as it appears to me, nothing to do with the matter. The question is what are the rights of the parties in respect of the lands in dispute and whether in respect of those lands, the Defendants have so acted as to justify the Plaintiffs in bringing a suit in the nature of a suit for ejectment. Now it is clearly found that the improved value of the lands is not due to any expenditure of labour or capital on the part of the Defendants but is due to the operation of natural causes. It is not suggested that the lands are in any sense an accretion to lands of which the Defendants were previously in possession, or that before the lands became valuable and productive, the Defendants had any more possession over them than any other co-sharer. On the contrary, I concur in the view which has been expressed that the findings arrived at by the lower Courts must be taken to include a finding that the Plaintiffs had some possession of the lands in the original state by the exercise of fishery rights. In my opinion upon the facts as they appear to have been found there has clearly been an ouster of the Plaintiffs by the Defendants, and that being so, I agree that the Appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

RULE No. 27 OF 1914.

STEPHEN, J. MULLICK, J. 1914, Heard, 10, February. Judgment, 16, February.	MAHOMED MUSA and another, Defendants, Petitioners, v. ABDUL HASSAN KHAN and others, Plaintiffs, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 24, 92—Bengal Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), sec. 8—Suit relating to public charity—Additional District Judge, appointment of, by Local Government without specific authority to entertain suit under sec. 92, C. P. C.—Transfer of suit by District Judge without assignment of powers under sec. 92, C. P. C.—Jurisdiction of Additional Judge to entertain suit under sec. 92, C. P. C., on transfer from District Judge.

Where a suit under sec. 92, C. P. C., instituted before the District Judge was transferred by the District Judge to the Additional District Judge under sec. 24, C. P. C., and it appeared that the Local Government in appointing the Additional District Judge had not empowered him to receive suits under sec. 92 nor had the District Judge in his order of transfer assigned to the Additional District Judge the functions of a District Judge in respect of sec. 92:

Held—That the Additional District Judge had no jurisdiction to try the suit and the order transferring the case made by the District Judge was of no effect.

This was a Rule granted on the 9th of January 1914 against the order of the District Judge of Patna, dated the 2nd of January 1914, transferring the case to the file of the Additional District Judge of Patna.

On 2nd September 1913, a plaint was filed in the Court of the District Judge, Patna, by the Opposite Party, valuing the suit at 21 lacs of rupees, in respect of certain wakf estate, in order to set aside a certain compromise decree which was arrived at and effected in the High Court in Reg. App. 434 of 11 whereby Petitioner No. 1 was reinstated as Matwalli and Petitioner No. 2 was reappointed as Naib Awal under the supervision of a committee of leading Mahomedans in Patna.

The suit was brought under sec. 92, C. P. C., by the Plaintiff, as members of the public, and although sanction was refused by the Advocate-General, leave to sue was obtained from the Legal Remembrancer of Behar and Orissa.

The suit was instituted in the Court of the District Judge (Mr. Roe) and written statements filed and issues framed in that Court and the suit was pending in that Court for further hearing up till 2-1-14 when the suit was transferred to the Court of the Additional District Judge (Mr. James) who was appointed by the following notification of Government.

"7942A—26-12-13.

Mr. J. W. James, I. C. S., is, on relinquishing charge of his special duty in connection with the preparation of the final Report on the survey and record-of-rights in the District of Patna, appointed to act temporarily as Additional District and Sessions Judge of Patna."

The Petitioners filed an objection that the Court (Mr. James) was not competent to hear this case. But the objection was overruled. He observed as follows:—

"No notification under sec. 92 is needed to give to an Additional Judge power to hear suits instituted under that section in the Court of the District Judge and transferred by him to the Additional Judge. Under sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act the Additional Judge exercises the same powers as a District Judge in cases assigned to him by the District Judge. I may observe that if the fact that a suit under sec. 92 must be instituted in the Court of the District Judge is to bar its transfer to the Additional Judge, then no work could be given to an Additional Judge at all. I imagine that the effect of a notification under sec. 92 would merely be that suits under that section could be instituted in the Court of the Additional Judge. I find that the Additional District Judge has power to try cases of this nature transferred to him by the District Judge without any special notification."

MAHOMED MUSA v. ABDUL HASSAN KHAN.

The Defendants moved the High Court and obtained a Rule.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with Babus Umakali Mukerjee, Surendra Nath Ghoshal and Pankaj Kumar Ganguly) for the Petitioners.—Sec. 92, C. P. C., i.e., charity cases are to be determined after institution by the principal Court of Original Jurisdiction, i.e., District Judge or some officer specially empowered by the Local Government. Sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act, XII of 1887, contemplates transfer of certain classes of cases or assignment of functions but not particular cases. Sec. 24, C. P. C., could not possibly apply as it was not a transfer contemplated by the section but change of file on the direction of the District Judge, vide Bidyamoyee v. Surya Kanta (2) and Abdul Karim v. Abdus Sobhan (1).

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Opposite Party.—Sec. 92 contemplates two specified classes of Courts, but purposes of institution only. Sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act empowers the Judge to transfer the case to any proper Court he chooses. The District Judge and the Additional District Judge are officers with co-ordinate powers (vide sec. 21).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case the Local Government acting under sec. 8 of the Bengal and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, appointed Mr. James, Additional District Judge at Patna. On the 2nd February 1914, Mr. Roe, the District Judge, transferred to him a suit under sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure instituted before himself, which had proceeded as far as the settlement of issues. It is not disputed that this transfer was made under sec. 24 of the Civil Procedure Code. On Mr. James taking up the case it was argued before him that he had no jurisdiction to deal with it: but this was overruled. A Rule, however, has been granted in this Court calling on the Opposite Party to show cause why the order transferring the case to the file of the Additional Judge should not be set aside as being made without jurisdiction. The objection to Mr. Roe's order is as follows:—The effect of Mr. James' appointment was that he became capable of discharging any of the functions of a District Judge which the District Judge might assign to him, and of exercising the powers of a District Judge in discharging them: but the functions so assigned must be general and no such functions were assigned by Mr. Roe's order of transfer under sec. 24 of the Code. This is a sound objection and a comparison of the language of the two enactments referred to, makes any other conclusion impossible. It is also consistent with the decision of this Court in Abdul Karim v. Abdus Sobhan (1). Had the Local Government empowered Mr. James to rceive suits under sec. 92, the case might have been different, for it is not disputed that he would then have been the "principal Civil Court" under sec. 92, C. P. C., though he would be a subordinate Court under sec. 24. Had the District Judge assigned to Mr. James the function of a District Judge in respect of sec. 92, then also all might have been well. But as it is, Mr. James had no jurisdiction to deal with cases under sec. 92 at the time the order was made, and Mr. Roe effected nothing by his order of transfer.

This Rule is, therefore, made absolute, and the order of transfer is set aside. We make no order as to costs.

(1) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 146: s. c. 16 C. W. N. 44 (1911).

(2) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 876 (1905).

Rule made absolute.

REFERENCE NO. 17 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.	EMPEROR
BEACHCROFT, J.	v.
1913,	TARAPADA NASKAR,
6, August.	Accused, Petitioner.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 307—Disagreement between Judge and jury—Reference to High Court—Sub-sec. 3—Opinion of the jury if equivalent to verdict—Verdict, grounds of, when desirable to ascertain.

The expession "opinion of the Sessions Judge and the jury" in sub-sec. 3 of sec. 307, Cr. P. C., is equivalent to "opinion of the Sessions Judge and verdict of the jury" and it is not necessary for a Sessions Judge before making a reference to the High Court to ascertain the opinion of the jurors apart from their verdict.

EMPEROR v. CHELLAN (1) not followed.

After the jury have returned their verdict and after the Judge has stated that he will not accept the verdict it may be desirable to ascertain the grounds of their verdict but there is no express provision in the Code for ascertaining the opinion of the jury.

This was a Reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of Hughly, dated the 25th of June 1913, disagreeing with the unanimus verdict of the Jury who found the accused not guilty of the charge framed against him under sec. 202 of the Indian Penal Code, the Judge being of opinion that the accused was guilty under sec. 304, I. P. C.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Manmatha Mukerjee, Herambo Chandra Guha and Nirmal Chandra Chunder for the Accused.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a Reference under sec. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The accused, Tarapada Naskar, was charged with an offence punishable under sec. 302, I. P. C., in that he committed murder by intentionally causing the death of one Johor Ali. He was tried along with his brother, Mannoo Naskar, who was charged with an offence punishable under secs. 392 and 114, I. P. C. The Jury returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty. The Sessions Judge, with some hesitation, accepted the verdict in respect of Mannoo Naskar and acqutited him. But as regards Tarapada Naskar the Sessions Judge has made this reference, as he has not been able to agree with the verdict of the jury and as in his opinion the reference is necessary for the ends of justice.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the accused, that the reference is not in order, inasmuch as the Sessions Judge did not ascertain the opinion of the jurors. In support of this contention reference has been made to the judgment of Mr. Justice Davies in the case of Emperor v. Chellan (1), and to the decision of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Annada Charan Thakur (2).

The first sub-section of sec. 307 lays down that if in a case tried before the Court of Sessions and a jury, the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of them on all or any of the charges on which the accused has been tried, and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly recording the grounds of his opinion, and when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed. Sub-sec. (3) then provides that in dealing with the case so submitted, the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal, and subject thereto, it shall, after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury, acquit or convict the accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it; and if it convicts him, may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Sessions.

It has been argued on behalf of the accused that in order that the High Court may properly discharge its duties under sub-sec. (3) of sec. 307, the opinion of the jurors must be ascertained, and that such opinion is distinct from the verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors as mentioned in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 307. The reasons in favour of this argument are put forward most strongly in the opinion of Mr. Justice Davies to which reference has been made. "The duty of the High Court under sub-sec. (3) of sec. 307, Cr. P. C., is not only to consider the entire evidence but also to give weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and of the jury. The opinions of the jury cannot mean their verdict, for that is not a mere opinion nor is it styled as such, as the opinions of the assessors are. The verdict is a final judgment by the jury as to the guilt or otherwise of the persons charged before them, and it is binding on the Judge, while opinions are not so. Besides, it is obvious from the provisions of the Code that the opinions of the jury referred to in cl. (c) of sec. 307 are to be on the same par as those of the Judge, that is, opinions given after the verdict, for the jury are not enabled to pass opinions before their verdict. It is not until after the verdict is delivered and the Judge disapproves of it, that the jury's opinions are required for submission to this Court to be considered along with the Judge's opinions." With all respect we are not prepared to accept this view of sec. 307, and, in our opinion, the expression "opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the jury" is equivalent to "opinion of the Sessions Judge and verdict of the jury." No doubt, as pointed out by this Court in the case of Emperor v. Annada Charan Thakur (2), after the jury have returned their verdict, and after the Judge has stated that he will not accept the verdict, it may be desirable to ascertain the grounds of their verdict. But it must be remembered that there is no express provision in the Code for ascertaining the opinion of the jury. It is further worthy of note that in the case of Emperor v. Annada Charan Thakur (2), the learned Judge stated they were not prepared to hold that the omission to ascertain from the jurors the ground for their verdict, could vitiate the reference. We may add that if the contention of the accused were accepted, practical difficulties of a grave character might arise. The Judge would have, in that view, to ascertain the opinion of each individual juror in respect of each of the various points which might arise in a case, and the result might be

NOTES.

English Judicial Statistics—Civil.

The Civil Judicial Statistics for England and Wales for 1912 which have been published simultaneously with the Criminal show an all round decline in civil litigation except in the Divorce Probate and Admiralty Division of the High Court. Although the general decline in litigation during 1912 was very appreciable yet it would be difficult to say from the enormous volume of litigation which ordinarily prevails in England whether the litigious spirit is on the decline. The total number of proceedings begun in the various Courts in 1912 was no less than 1,368,455. Yet 1912 showed a decline of 53,236 over the figures of the previous year. Working out the figures for 1912, by reference to the population and taking it that two persons are always interested in every suit it may be said that nearly 8,000 persons in every 100,000 of the population were directly involved in litigation in 1912. Making every allowance it may be said that 1 in every 10 to 12 persons ordinarily has recourse to some sort of litigation in England. The bulk of this litigation takes place however in the County Courts where no less than 1,262,469 of the above proceedings were initiated. In the King's Bench Division of the High Court the proceedings instituted were 63,508 in 1912, which showed a decline, the figures for the previous year being 76,274. In the Chancery Division there was also a decline, the figures for 1912 being 5,566 and those for the previous year being 7,457. In the Probate and Divorce Division there was an increase from 1,447 to 1,904. It is regrettable from a social and moral point of view that this increase should be solely confined to the Divorce side of the Division.

The appeals from the various Courts during the year fell from 1,562 to 1,377. With reference to the decline in appeals it is worthy of note that in the Court of Appeal the decline was 87, in the Divisional Courts 71, in the Judicial Committee 28 and in the House of Lords only 1. The Judicial Committee however worked energetically and disposed of 132 appeals in 1912. By reference to the figures for the last 20 years it appears that the number of appeals have generally increased, almost all round—the rise in the Judicial Committee being from 88 to 100 which latter figure in some years is marked by a further increase of 25%. It is also no less remarkable that the Judicial Committee seem always disposed to bring to bear a fresh mind in these appeals and evidently pay little regard to the cult of settled fact. For instance, out of 132 appeals disposed of by their Lordships in 1912, in no fewer than 50 cases their Lordships reversed or varied the decisions of the Courts below. In the House of Lords the percentage of reversal was a little less, yet they were sufficiently substantial to testify to the desire of this august tribunal to reconsider the opinion of a particularly strong Court of Appeal on doubtful and debatable questions of law. In nearly ½ of the appeals heard in the House of Lords, the decisions of the Court of Appeal were reversed or varied—the exact figures being 19 out of 59. In the Court of Appeal while 263 decisions were reversed or varied, 327 were upheld which also go to show that the judgments of the Courts below appealed from receive the fullest consideration by the Appellate Courts. That this should be so is no matter of wonder when we consider that in most of the cases people would not take the trouble or incur the expenses of appealing unless they have a substantial grievance and it is undoubtedly gratifying to them that their grievances receive a patient and careful hearing and due consideration before the Appellate Courts.

English Judicial Statistics—Criminal.

The Criminal Statistics for England and Wales for 1912, recently published, are as usual very interesting reading and furnish much material for thought. The total number of persons tried for indictable offences during the year were 67,530. Non-indictable offences in that year amounted to 663,139; of such offences those of a criminal character amounted only to 73,917; the rest were statutory offences arising out of breaches of Municipal and other similar regulations framed for securing public safety, or having reference to traffic, health, etc. Compared to the figures of 20 years back, i.e., 1893, although the indictable offences show an increase yet relatively to the population. the figures for 1912 compare favourably. The indictable offences for 1913 were 57,357 and the non-indictable offences 6,00,249. Compared to the population the figures for the former in 1893 were 192·7 per 1,00,000 of population while those for 1912 are 184·8. Compared to the character of offences, crimes of violence show a decrease but sexual offences seem to be on the increase. These latter may, however, be explained to some extent by the change in the law which has made indictable some of the sexual offences which were formerly non-indictable. The non-indictable criminal offences for 1912 however show a decrease, the figures for 1893 being 113,587 and those for 1912 being 73,917. These offences show a steady decrease during the last 20 years.

It is also interesting to note that of 13,037 persons tried at the Assizes and Quarter Sessions in 1912, 2,077 persons were acquitted and of the persons convicted 7,465 had previous conviction. Courts of Summary Jurisdiction tried 717,383 persons, of whom 53,244 were charged with indictable and 663,139 with non-indictable offences; of these 76,361 were discharged and 83,527 were dealt with without conviction, while 555,495 were convicted; 477,071 were sentenced to pay a fine and about 82,000 of these went to prison in default of payment.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE INDIAN PENAL CODE AND THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE, 1898.

Whereas it is expedient further to amend the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898; it is hereby enacted as follows:—

(1) This Act may be called the Indian Criminal Law (amendment) Act, 191 .

THE INDIAN PENAL CODE.

(2) After sec. 228 of the Indian Penal Code the following sections shall be added, namely:—

"228A. Whoever by words, either spoken or written or by signs or by visible representation or otherwise, brings, or attempts to bring into contempt, or lowers or attempts to lower the authority—

(a) of any Court of Justice or

(b) of any person empowered by law to record or direct the recording of evidence on oath (when exercising such powers), shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine or with both.

Exception.—It is not an offence under the section to comment on the action of any Court of Justice or person referred to in cl. (b), provided that any such comments are in substance true, and made in good faith for the public good.

"228B. Whoever during the pendency of a judicial proceeding, by words either spoken or written, or by signs or by visible representation or otherwise makes or publishes—

(a) a false or misleading report of such proceedings or any stage thereof or

(b) any comments relating to such proceeding or regarding the presiding officer, the parties, witnesses, assessors, jurors or pleaders concerned in such proceeding, knowing or having reason to believe that such comments may cause or tend to cause prejudice in the public mind in regard to such proceeding or prejudice or tend to prejudice the trial thereof, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine or with both.

Explanation 1—A judicial proceeding for the purposes of this section includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath.

Explanation 2.—A true, full and fair report of a judicial proceeding or any stage thereof does not constitute an offence under this section.

Explanation 3—A judicial proceeding which has become abortive, rendering a new judicial proceeding necessary is a pending judicial proceeding within the meaning of this section."

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

(3) In section 196 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, after the words figures and letter "or sec. 153A" the words figures and letters "or sec. 228A or sec. 228B" shall be inserted and to the marginal note of the said section the words "and certain contempts of Court" shall be added.

(4) In Sch. II to the said Code after the entries relating to sec. 228 the entries contained in schedule hitherto annexed shall be inserted.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), secs. 20, 22, 46—Claim-case arising out of attachment of property by Receiver.

MUL CHAND v. MURARI LAL, I. L. R. 36 All. 8.

A certain insolvency proceeding was transferred by the District Judge to the Additional Judge for disposal.

On information laid by one of the creditors the Receiver appointed by the Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act seized certain moveable property as property of the insolvents in order to dispose of the same for the benefit of the creditors. A third party claiming the property thus seized by the Receiver as his own presented to the Court what purported to be an objection under Or. 21, r. 58, C. P. C. This objection was disallowed by the Additional Judge against whose order an appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Held—That the claimant's position was that of a person aggrieved by an act of the Receiver and his remedy was by an application under sec. 22 of the Insolvency Act.

That even assuming for the sake of argument that the Court of the Additional Judge was a "District Court" under the Provincial Insolvency Act, an appeal would only lie from the order complained of by special leave of the District Court or of the High Court.

Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899), sec. 2, Sch. 1, Art. 5—Instrument—Memorandum of agreement.

MUTASADDI LAL v. HARKESH, I. L. R. 36 All. 11.

In a book purporting to be a register of sums payable with respect to the letting out of wooden machines and rollers for pressing sugarcane and iron pans for boiling sugarcane juice there was an entry to the effect that—"H son of K and two others hired a sugarcane pressing machine in consideration of a rent of Rs. 15 from the Plaintiff, that they would pay the hire in Chait and in default would pay interest at 2 per cent. per mensem." Below this entry appeared the thumb-marks of the persons who hired the machine. There was a further statement that the hirers would return the pans hired at their own costs.

Held—That the document was an 'instrument,' as defined in sub-sec. 14 of sec. 2 of the Stamp Act and the contents of the documents fall within the terms of Art. 5 of Sch. I of the said Act being memoranda of agreements within the meaning of that article. Under cl. (b) of Art. 5 the document therefore required a stamp of eight annas.

Review.

THE LAW RELATING TO INJUNCTIONS IN BRITISH INDIA. By J. G. Woodroffe, M. A., B. C. L., Bar-at-Law, one of His Majesty's Judges of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. Third Edition, by F. J. Mathew, Bar-at-Law. Published by Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta.

This work originally formed the subject-matter of Tagore Law Lectures at the Calcutta University in 1907. The author had thus an occasion to explain the general principles of the English law on the subject and to point out in what respects the Courts in India are entitled to make departures. To the above fact much of its merits is due. It is very unlike the annotated editions of the codified law in India which fail to furnish a comprehensive view of the general principles of law on any subject. That this work is a general exposition of the law does not render it any less, and in our opinion makes it more useful than the commentaries on the codified law to which we are accustomed. The general principles of the law applicable to India are formulated in some cryptic sections of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Specific Relief Act. In their practical application no member of the Bar and the Bench can do without referring to the leading English decisions and text books on the subject. The learned author has judiciously given references in his annotations to the leading decisions and standard works on the subject. In illustrating the practical application of the principles of this equitable relief in the different spheres of substantive law, appropriate Indian decisions have also been cited throughout. In this edition the Indian case law up to 1912 has been incorporated. But the most material changes in the present edition have been necessitated by the amendment of the Civil Procedure Code in 1908. One speciality of this work is that the learned author has taken care to point out that the law with regard to the appointment of Receivers and issue of injunctions is governed by almost identical principles.

The subject index at the end of the work is at once full and informing. But the new editor has not been able to avoid typographical errors altogether. For instance under the heading of "Torts—Jurisdiction" reference is given to p. 261 which evidently is a misprint for p. 281. Another matter to which we would draw his attention is that under the heading of Copyright reference is given only to the Act of 1847. But the new English Act of 1911 was extended to India by the Governor-General by notification in October 1912 under powers given under the English Statute. The Indian Legislature has only this year passed a new Copyright Act on the lines of the English Act with but slight alterations with regard to the right of translation of works first published in India, regarding which a saving was made in the English Statute. We are sure that the consequential changes will be incorporated in a future edition. But as the principle on which injunctions are granted in cases affecting copyright have not undergone any changes the exposition of the law under this head will be applicable to the remedies provided in the new Act as well.

THE CALCUTTA TRAMWAYS COMPANY, LIMITED, Respondents.

Special leave, application for—Collision—Contributory negligence.

This was an application for special leave to appeal from the Judgment of the Calcutta High Court. The Petitioner instituted the suit on the Original Side of that Court for recovery of Rs. 4,300 as damages caused to him and his motor-car in a collision with a tram-car, alleged by him to have been brought about by the negligence of the driver and the conductor thereof.

The trial Judge decreed the claim for Rs. 2,709 with interest and costs. On appeal the suit was dismissed. It was held that the Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. His application for a certificate to appeal to His Majesty in Council was also rejected.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., (with him Mr. Dunne) for the Petitioner submitted that the Appellate Court had erroneously found that the Appellant was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the case involved a substantial question of law relating to the rights of the public upon a public road where there was a tramway.

Their Lordships rejected the petition without hearing Mr. A. Reed who appeared for the Respondents.

Special leave—Guardian of minor party not joining in application for reference to arbitration—Award and decree, setting aside of—Appeal.

This was an application for special leave to Appeal from a Judgment of the Chief Commissioner of Ajmer-Merwara. The Respondents brought a suit on mortgage in the Court of the Commissioner of Ajmer. The parties entered into an agreement referring the matters in dispute to the arbitration of two persons and an umpire. Finally on the 10th February 1911 an award was made in favour of the Plaintiffs for a portion of the amount claimed. The Plaintiffs objected to the award on the ground of the misconduct of the arbitrators and the umpire, and on the ground that the application to the Court asking for a reference to arbitration was not signed by the guardian ad litem of a minor Defendant. The Court of first instance upheld the award and pronounced judgment in terms thereof on the 16th May 1911.

The Chief Commissioner in revision affirmed the said decree.

Subsequently the officiating Chief Commissioner granted a review to the Plaintiffs and set aside his predecessor's order on the ground that the reference to arbitration was made without jurisdiction in that the application to the Court was not signed by the guardian ad litem of the minor. The Appellants' application for leave to Appeal against the said order to His Majesty in Council was refused. Hence this petition. It was urged on behalf of the Petitioner that the order of the Chief Commissioner setting aside his predecessor's order and the decree passed in terms of the award was without jurisdiction.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and B. Dube appeared for the Petitioner.

Their Lordships granted special leave on the usual terms.

Mesne profits—Co-sharer—Ouster—Enjoyment, excess of.

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs, who were co-sharers in certain tanks, against the Defendants, one of whom was a co-sharer of the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs established their right to be co sharers to the extent of $\frac{10}{11}$ ths. The Defendant No. 1, the Appellant, established his right to be a co sharer to the extent of the remaining $\frac{1}{11}$; joint possession was awarded by the lower Appellate Court in favour of the Plaintiffs. This decree modified the decree of the Munsif, who granted the Plaintiffs possession of the 16 annas of the tank, and also, as a consequence, mesne profits, while the lower Appellate Court varied the decree but adhered to the award of mesne profits as against the co sharers.

Held, when there is an ouster, mesne profits may be awarded against a co-sharer. The mere excess of enjoyment does not in itself amount to ouster. In the absence of the finding of an ouster, mesne profits cannot be given.

divergent reasons assigned by five different persons upon each of the points for consideration. Such a collection of diverse opinions can hardly be expected to be of any real assistance to this Court. We hold accordingly that the reference before us is in order.

As regards the merits of the case, we feel no doubt whatever that the accused Tarapada did cause the injuries to Johor Ali, of which he ultimately died. This view is amply supported by the testimony of eye witnesses as also by two statements made by the deceased, one immediately after the occurence, and, the other, on the day following and a few hours before his death. The occurrence took place in broad daylight on the afternoon of the 13th April last. Witnesses, whom there is no reason to distrust, state that they saw the accused, Tarapada Naskar, stab the deceased Johor Ali with a knife. On his way to the hospital Johor Ali stated that he had been stabbed by Tarapada; and on the following day when his dying declaration was recorded, he repeated that statement. But it has been urged that the witnesses examined on the side of the prosecution have not disclosed the manner in which the occurrence happened, and that they have given an untrue account of the origin of the quarrel. It may be conceded that some of the statements made by witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution are open to comment. Yet, in our opinion, there is a substratum of truth in that evidence; and as already stated we feel no doubt that the accused caused those injuries to Johor Ali which led to his death. At the same time, we are not prepared to hold that the accused should be convicted under sec. 302, I. P. C. Immediately after the occurrence the brother of the accused gave information to the Police and described what had happened. According to his statement, he saw one Alia Khan on the top of their cocoanut tree and Bakar Khan and Johor Ali, the deceased, standing under the tree. The result was that there was a quarrel and the present accused, as the evidence on the side of the prosecution shews, stabbed Johor Ali.

In view of this circumstance and also in view of the fact that the accused is only 17 years of age, we think that a comparatively light sentence may be passed.

The result is that we set aside the verdict of the jury as regards the accused, Tarapada Naskar, convict him under section 304, I. P. C, and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for six years.

[APPEAL FROM CEYLON.]

LORD DUNEDIN. LORD SHAW. LORD MOULTON. 1913, 16, December.	PAYANA REENA LAYANA SAMINATHAN CHETTY and anr., Appellants, v. PANA LANA PANA LANA PALANIAPPA CHETTY, Respondent.

Causes of action, different, though claim same—Agreement admitting liability and prescribing payment by promissory notes—Promissory notes, materially altered—Suit on promissory notes dismissed—Suit upon agreement if lies—"Accord and satisfaction by substituted agreement"—Claim on prior rights extinguished—Suit on such claim, if lies—Ceylon Civil Procedure Act, sec. 34 (Cf. C. P. C., Or. 2, r. 2)—Pleadings, faulty—Claim in plaint based on wrong grounds—No objection by Defendant—Amendment.

A whose claim to receive certain items of moneys from B was disputed by the latter agreed with B to refer the disputes to arbitrators who, after an informally conducted investigation, drew up what was termed a "receipt," which B signed, the arbitrators witnessed and A accepted and acted upon. The document dealt seriatim with seven sums thereby admitted to be due from B to A amounting in all to Rs. 28,224 odd and prescribed the mode in which it was to be paid, namely, by a cash payment of Rs. 224 odd (which was immediately paid) and by passing two promissory notes for Rs. 14,000 each "payable with interest" on two dates. The amount of interest was (probably by oversight) not specified but there was no doubt that the parties intended that it would be at a certain customary rate which worked out to between 6 and 7 per cent. per annum. A however, subsequently, and without communication with B went to one of the arbitrators and (without bad faith either on his part or the arbitrator's) persuaded him to alter both promissory notes by inserting therein 9 per cent. as the rate of interest. A's action on the two promissory notes having been dismissed on the ground of material alteration, he sued B for two items of moneys amounting to Rs. 12,297 odd which he had claimed before the arbitrators and which were included in their award:

Held—That the "receipt" constituted the award of the arbitrators.

That whether it did or did not amount to an award it was clearly an "accord and satisfaction by a substituted agreement," whereby the respective rights of the parties inter se were abandoned in consideration of the acceptance by all of a new agreement.

That the arrangement for the discharge of the unpaid balance of the amount found due by means of the promissory notes only expressed the mode of payment, which was essentially a matter of form only, the substance of the award being that the specified amount was actually due; the Plaintiff could, therefore, sue for the balance due upon the agreement when his action on the promissory notes failed.

That the form of the Plaintiff's action which was based on rights already extinguished by the agreement was faulty. But the present action should be treated as one based on the new agreement, the Defendant not having taken exception to Plaintiff's statement of the grounds of his claim, so as to give him an opportunity to amend them at an earlier stage.

That a claim on the promissory notes and a claim for the amount found due under the award were not the same cause of action, but were really inconsistent and mutually exclusive causes of action, and the Plaintiff was not required in his suit on the promissory notes to ask for relief on the cause of action arising out of the agreement, by sec. 34 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Act.

That the Plaintiff's suit which was for a part only of the unpaid balance should be decreed. But he would be precluded by sec. 34 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Act from bringing a fresh action for the remainder.

The object and meaning of sec. 34 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Act (which is very similar to Or. 2, r. 2 of the Indian Code) explained.

This section is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion in one and the same action different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transactions. The first part of the clause makes it incumbent on the Plaintiff to include the whole of his claim in the action. The second portion makes it incumbent on him to ask for the whole of his remedies. The final paragraph (Explanation in the Indian Code) is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provisions, but a substantive enactment making what otherwise would be independent causes of action, one cause of action for the purposes of the section.

This was an Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Island of Ceylon.

The material facts of the cases will fully appear from the judgment.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—The Respondent is a money-lender carrying on business in Colombo, and the first Appellant was for a time his Agent and Manager. He was at the same time carrying on business as a money-lender in pa tnership with the second Appellant.

For about 3½ years prior to June 1909 the Respondent was absent from Ceylon, and the first Appellant carried on his business during his absence. On his return serious disputes arose between them. The Respondent alleged that there was a large balance due to him from the first Appellant and also that the first Appellant had not credited the Respondent with certain profits made by discounting promissory notes at the Banks for firms in which the second Appellant was a partner. Ultimately all the parties to the present suit agreed that these disputes should be referred to two other money-lenders named Ramanathan Chetty and Mutu Ramen Chetty, who, after the completion of the investigation drew up, on the 30th August 1909, what has been termed "a receipt," which the Appellants signed, the Arbitrators witnessed and the Respondent accepted and acted upon. This document deals seriatim with seven sums thereby admitted to be due from the Appellants to the Respondent amounting in all to Rs. 28,224$\frac{5}{32}$, and it then proceeds as follows :—

"And this sum of 28,224$\frac{5}{32}$ Rs. we have this day settled with you in the following manner :—

"Rs. 224$\frac{5}{32}$ paid to you by us this day in cash, Rs. 14,000 by an on demand promissory note, payable with interest on 15th September, and Rs. 14,000, by another on demand promissory note given on the same date payable with interest on 30th November, all aggregating to Rs. 28,224$\frac{5}{32}$.

"And this ma ter having been thus arranged and settled in respect of all the accounts between us, this receipt shall be the witness that there is no other claim against us by you or by us against you."

Accordingly Rs. 224$\frac{5}{32}$ were thereupon paid by the Appellants to the Respondent, and two promissory notes, each for a sum of Rs. 14,000, were handed to him. Their Lordships entertain no doubt that, although informally conducted, the proceeding was in the nature of an arbitration, and the so-called "receipt" expresses the finding of the Arbitrators, and the mode in which it was to be performed. But the question whether or not it should so be regarded is immaterial for the decision of the present Appeal. The "receipt" given by the Appellants, and accepted by the Respondent, and acted on by both parties proves conclusively that all the parties agreed to a settlement of all their existing disputes by the arrangement formulated in the "receipt." It is a clear example of what used to be well known in Common Law Pleading as "Accord and Satisfaction by a Substituted Agreement." No matter what were the respective rights of the parties inter se they are abandoned in consideration of the acceptance by all of a new agreement. The consequence is that when such an accord and satisfaction takes place the prior rights of the parties are extinguished. They have in fact been exchanged for the new rights; and the new agreement becomes a new departure, and the rights of all the parties are fully represented by it.

There appears to be no doubt that it was the intention of all the parties that the sums for which the promissory notes were given should bear what is known as Chetty interest, which is at a rate dependent on the current Bank rate, and would in the present case have been between 6 per cent. and 7 per. cent. But, probably by an oversight, no rate of interest was inserted in the promissory notes, and the Respondent, without communication with the Appellants, went to one of the Arbitrators and persuaded him to alter both promissory notes by inserting therein 9 per cent. as the rate of interest. Though this was an irregularity of a grave kind, their Lordships do not understand that it was done with bad faith either on the part of the Arbitrator or the Respondent. It appears to have been the result of a misunderstanding, and accordingly their Lordships treat it as a material alteration innocently made.

On the 18th October 1909, the Respondent commenced an action in the District Court of Colombo upon the two promissory notes so given to him. The Appellants raised as a defence that a material alteration had been made in them, and on this ground the Action was dismissed on February 8th, 1910.

On the 20th April 1910, the Respondent commenced the present Action for the two sums of Rs. 11,526$\frac{1}{32}$ and Rs. 771. These were two out of six items referred to in the receipt, all going towards making up the total of Rs. 28,224$\frac{5}{32}$ which was the basis of the new Agreement. The form of the plaint is such that it is clear that the Respondent was attempting to assert in the Action two of the claims which were included in the Award and settled by the new Agreement. This he was not entitled to do since they had been extinguished by the acceptance of the new Agreement.

At the trial of the Action, the District Judge found in favour of the Appellants, on the ground that the two promissory notes were given in absolute payment of the debt, and that, therefore, no remedy remained to the Respondent, excepting upon those notes. On Appeal, the Judges of the Supreme Court held that the notes were only accepted as a conditional discharge, so that they only amounted to payment if paid, and that, inasmuch as they had not been paid, the original debt of Rs. 28,000 remained. They accordingly allowed the Appeal. It is from this decision that the present Appeal is brought.

Their Lordships are of opinion, as has already been stated, that the form of the claim was faulty inasmuch as the sole existing liability was under the Agreement set out in the receipt. But they are also of opinion that the arrangement for the discharge of the amount found due by means of the promissory notes only expressed the mode of payment contemplated and arranged for at the time. This was essentially a matter of form only, the substance of the award being that the specified amount was actually due from the Appellants to the Respondent. Through an innocent act the promissory notes have become incapable of being enforced, and the Appellants have availed themselves of this and have refused to pay the notes so that payment in the form contemplated has failed. But this does not affect the substance of the award or the basis of the arrangement which was liability, and therefore it was open to the Respondent to bring an Action for the unpaid balance of the sum found due, i.e., for the amount of the promissory notes. He has brought his Action for an amount less than this and based it on wrong grounds, but, on the other hand, the Appellants omitted to raise their true defence in their pleadings, when there would have been an opportunity for the Respondent to correct the grounds of his claim.

The learned Judge at the trial held that this Action was barred by sec. 34 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Act, and Counsel for the Appellants relied strongly upon this section in the argument before us. On account of the importance of the point it is desirable to cite the section in full:—

"Every action shall include the whole of the claim which the Plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a Plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the action within the jurisdiction of any Court.

"If a Plaintiff omits to sue in respect of or intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished. A person entitled to more than one remedy in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of his remedies; but if he omits (except with the leave of the Court obtained before the hearing) to sue for any of such remedies, he shall not afterwards sue for the remedy so omitted."

"For the purpose of this section an obligation and a collateral security for its performance shall be deemed to constitute but one cause of action."*

Their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Judge took an erroneous view of the object and meaning of this section. It is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transactions. The first part of the clause makes it incumbent on the Plaintiff to include the whole of his claim in his action. The second portion makes it incumbent on him to ask for the whole of his remedies. The final paragragh, in

(2) Where the Plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so oomitted or relinquished.

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs; but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwerds sue for any relief so omitted.

their Lordships' opinion, is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provisions, but a substantive enactment, making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action) one cause of action for the purposes of the section.

Viewed thus, it is evident that a claim on the Bills and a claim for the amount found due under the Award and for which payment was provided by the Agreement are not the same cause of action but are in truth inconsistent and mutually exclusive causes of action. So long as the Bills were outstanding there was no right of action otherwise than upon the Bills. It is therefore impossible, in their Lordships' opinion, to hold that the claim for the amount due was the same cause of action as the claim upon the Bills and ought to have been included in the prior action.

Their Lordships therefore think that justice will be done by treating the sum sued for as being part of the amount found due by the Arbitrators, the payment of which was provided for by the Agreement and in respect of which the promissory notes were given. They hold that, as such, it is recoverable by the Respondent, and that the Appeal should be dismissed. But this amendment will entail the consequence that inasmuch as the Respondent has sued for a part only of the total sum due he cannot bring a fresh Action for the remainder.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be dismissed but without costs.

Contribution amongst joint tort-feasors—Decree against Plaintiffs and Defendants for mesne profits —Tort not wilful—Plea that Plaintiffs sole wrong-doers to be specially pleaded and made a special issue.

Held—That on the facts of the case, the Plaintiffs and Defendants against whom as zemindars of estate A, a decree for possession and mesne profits had been passed in favour of zemindars of estate N, were not wilful tortfeasors—even if the strict law of MERRYWEATHER v. NIXAM (1) were applicable in India—and primâ facie the Plaintiffs who paid the whole of the decretal amount in a proceeding under sec. 310A, C. P. C., were entitled to contribution as against the Defendants.

In such a suit for contribution, a plea that the Plaintiffs were the only wrong-doers in the sense that they alone were in possession of the land in respect of which mesne profits were awarded is of such a special nature and requires such special consideration that it should be distinctly pleaded and made the subject of a distinct issue.

JENKINS, C. J.—This Appeal arises out of a suit for contribution. The findings of the Subordinate Judge are all in favour of the Plaintiffs with the one exception that he considered that he was unable to pass a decree in the Plaintiffs' favour by reason of the difficulty in determining the shares in which the several Defendants should contribute. The result has been that the suit has been dismissed. From this decree the present appeal has been preferred.

The case stated broadly is this : The Plaintiffs and the Defendants in the present suit may be described in general terms as the zemindars of Amgram. There was an adjoining estate which belonged to the zemindars of Narail. There was a contest between these two sets of zemindars, as to the ownership of a considerable area of marshy land, each claiming it to be within their zemindari. This led to proceedings under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in which it was determined that possession as to a part was with the zemindars of Narail, and as to the rest with the zemindars of Amgram. The zemindars of Narail were dissatisfied with this result, and they brought a Suit No. 29 of 1887 whereby they claimed possession and wasilat. There was a decree passed in their favour, for possession of 800 bighas in round numbers. An appeal was preferred by some of the zemindars of Amgram, with the result that the area awarded to the Plaintiffs was materially diminished, and as a result the amount of mesne profits was largely decreased, still a considerable sum was due by way of mesne profits, and this the zemindars of Narail took steps to realise in execution of the decree with the result that property belonging to the present Plaintiffs was attached and sold. This led to an application under sec. 310A, and the sale was set aside. In the end the decree in favour of the zemindars of Narail was satisfied. The present Plaintiffs, being some of the zemindars of Amgram, claim that they have paid off the whole of the decretal amount and are thus entitled to contribution from those of their co-sharer zemindars of Amgram who were Defendants to Suit No. 29 of 1887. The decree for mesne profits in no way discriminates between the Defendants, it treats them all as on the same footing, and that no doubt accounts for the fact that by the plaint in this suit the Plaintiffs sought a contribution from the Defendants equally. Had they been able to substantiate this claim, it would have diminished the complexity of this litigation ; but it has been stated before us by Counsel for the Plaintiffs that in the circumstances he does not think he would be justified in seeking for contribution except in accordance with the shares of the Defendants in the zemindari of Amgram. This view is accepted by the Respondents, if there is any liability at all, and it thus becomes unnecessary for us to consider whether the Plaintiffs could have claimed an equal contribution, so that for the purposes of this judgment I will assume that if the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover anything from the Defendants it will be upon the basis of a contribution by the Defendants proportionate to their shares in the zemindari of Amgram.

The findings of fact by the trial Judge have not been assailed before us, with one exception to which I will later allude. It has, however, been suggested that the Defendants to Suit No. 29 of 1887 were wrong-doers, and that therefore no right to contribution exists. That, I think, is an argument which we need not consider seriously, for even if the strict law of Merryweather v. Nixam (1) were applicable in India—a point on which I would desire to reserve my opinion—it certainly would not be applicable in the circumstances of this case, because it cannot be said on the facts on the record that the Defendants to Suit No. 29 of 1887 were wilful tortfeasors. But the principal defence urged before us is that the Plaintiffs ought not to be given relief in this case, because they really were the only worng-doers, in the sense that they alone were in possession of the land in respect of which mesne profits were awarded to the zemindars of Narail. It is on this point that the Respondents quarrel with the finding of the Court below. The principle of contribution as applicable in a case like the present is well established, and the leading case is Dering v. Winchelsea (2). There, as here, it was argued that the author of the loss could not have the benefit of a contribution. But the Lord Chief Baron, while repelling the applicability of the argument to the circumstances of that case, went on to say that "cases, indeed, might be put, in which the proposition would be true," and in illustration of this he said "if a contribution were demanded from a ship and cargo for goods thrown overboard to save the ship, if the Plaintiff had actually bored a hole in the ship, he would in that case be certainly the author of the loss, and would not be entitled to any contribution." That illustration is useful as an indication of what might furnish an answer to a Plaintiff seeking contribution, when it is urged that he was disentitled by reason of his responsibility for the mischief that had occurred. But in this case, notwithstanding the argument that has been addressed to us, I am unable to say that this is made out. Primâ facie a person in the position of the Plaintiffs in this suit has a right to contribution and the particular plea now under consideration is of such a special nature and requires such special consideration that it should be distinctly pleaded and made the subject of a distinct issue. That has not been done, and though there are expressions in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge which look as though the point had been discussed, it was in connection with a contention distinct from this plea. Moreover, it is to be noticed that the learned Judge's view of the facts was against the contention now advanced on behalf of the Defendants.

The position then is this: So far as the evidence goes, the learned Subordinate Judge who had every opportunity of estimating the value of the testimony given before him considered that it did not prove that the Plaintiffs alone were in possession of the land in dispute in the former litigation. The evidence has also been brought to our notice, and I too am unable to regard that evidence as sufficient to establish the special plea that has been advanced. And I may further remark that it is a plea that may involve a very complex enquiry. Thus, even if it did appear that the Plaintiffs were in possession of the greater part of this disputed land, it still might have to be considered whether this was not by reason of some understanding under which the Defendants were in possession of an equivalent portion of land outside the disputed area as forming part of the zemindari of Amgram.

I think I have shown enough to make it evident that we ought not to and we cannot properly, on the materials at present before us, give effect to this plea. Moreover, it has to be noticed that this plea is barely consistent with the decree passed in Suit No. 29 of 1887 which treated all the Defendants against whom it was passed as equally responsible for the wasilat. The theory of that decree, as I understand it, was this: The litigation was treated as one in effect between the zemindars of Narail on the one side and zemindars of Amgram on the other, and it was the zemindars of Amgram who were treated as responsible as being zemindars of Amgram. The reasonable meaning of such decree would be as decided by the Privy Council in Jotindra Mohun Lahiri v. Guru Prosunno Lahiri (3), that the estate was to be made liable, and it is this that justifies the view of proportionate liability taken by both sides in this case. If, therefore, there be a liability, it must be a liability in proportion to the interests of the Defendants in the zemindari of Amgram. We hold therefore that the Plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in this suit, and that the Defendants are liable to the extent of their several shares. The measure of that liability in the case of each Defendant will be a proportionate part of the decretal amount in Suit No. 29 of 1887, together with interest on that sum from the time of payment up to the institution of this suit. The amount of that decree is a matter in dispute between the parties. It is one on which they certainly should have no difficulty in settling, and for that purpose the learned Vakils on both sides have agreed they will meet and will then give us the requisite figure.

There still remains the question of proportionate shares of the several Defendants. That no doubt is a matter of some little difficulty unless the Defendants will co-operate. The Defendants must know what their shares are, and the decree of the Court cannot be defeated because they may think fit to create a difficulty in the way of ascertaining those shares.

We do not propose to send the case down, as we intend to pass a decree in this Court for the amount payable by each Defendant to the extent of his share, and we only have to see how that can most conveniently and expeditiously be ascertained.

(After discussion)

The parties are agreed that the Plaintiffs will file their list of the Defendants' shares in Court and they will also furnish the Defendants with copies of that list within seven days, and the Defendants on their part will also furnish within a month their list, or counter list if they do not agree with the Plaintiffs' list.

The case will be mentioned to us again after a month when we will finally dispose of it.

[Order, dated 30th June 1913.

(3) 8 C. W. N. 625 (1904).

BISHNU CHARAN ROY CHAUDHURI v. BEPIN CHANDRA ROY CHAUDHURI.

The parties are agreed as to the proportionate shares in which the Defendants-Respondents are liable to pay the decretal amount, and have submitted a statement showing the said shares. They also agree that the principal amount to be paid by the Defendants is Rs. 21958-15-6 p. deposited on the 21st of December 1907 minus the sum of Rs. 5,744-2-9 p. which has subsequently been refunded to the Plaintiffs under order, dated the 22nd of February 1909.

It is accordingly decreed that the Defendants do pay the following sums, in proportion to their respective shares shown in the statement of shares:—The principal sum of Rs. 16,214-12-9 p., together with interest thereon at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from the date of payment up to the date of suit, as well as interest on the sum of Rs. 5,744-2-9 refunded to the Plaintiffs, at the rate aforesaid from the date of deposit of that amount up to the date of refund. The decretal amount will carry interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from this date until realisation.

The Defendants will pay costs throughout in proportion to their respective shares.

There will be no decree against the three pro formâ Respondents (Nos. 104, 105 and 106), the suit having been compromised with two of them and the third being given up by the Plaintiffs in the Court below]

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Appeal is directed against a decree made under sec. 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, in confirmation of an award of arbitrators. A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of the appeal, because under that section, an appeal does not lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. As the decree is not assailed on behalf of the Appellants on the ground that it is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, the appeal is primâ facie incompetent.

It has been argued, however, on behalf of the Appellant, upon the authority of the decisions in Indur Subbarami Reddy v. Kanda Dai (1) and Muhammad Abid v. Muhammad Ashgar (2), that inasmuch as the decree is assailed on the ground that there was no award valid in law, the appeal is competent. But this contention cannot possibly prevail, in view of the plain language of sec. 522, and of the exposition of the law by the Judicial Committee in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (3). Our attention, however, has been invited to another decision of the Judicial Committee in Harnarain Singh v. Bhagwant Kuar (4), where an appeal, under somewhat similar circumstances, was allowed to be heard without any question as to its competency. In that case, the award had been filed after the expiry of the time prescribed by the Court, and it was held by the Judicial Committee that there was no legal award which could be made the foundation of a decree. It is clear, however, from the judgment of the Judicial Committee that no question as to the competency of the appeal was raised either before their Lordships or in the High Court. Consequently that decision cannot be treated as in any way in conflict with the later decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (3).

It is further worthy of note that even if the Appellant were allowed to invite this Court to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, he would still find himself in inextricable difficulty, as no application was made on his behalf to the Court below to set aside the award. The matter was referred to the arbitrators on the 14th March 1907. The award was filed on the 8th July 1909. The Court thereupon adjourned the case till the 18th July and directed the parties to file objections, if any, on or before that date. This was in strict conformity with Art. 158 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act. On the 17th July, it was discovered that the date to which the case had been adjourned was a Sunday; the Court thereupon adjourned the case to the 28th July. We cannot interpret this order in the sense that the time within which objection could be filed was also thereby extended to the 28th July. In fact, it was not competent to the Court to extend the period of ten days prescribed by Art. 158, because under sec. 5 of the Limitation Act, the Court has no authority to receive an application to set aside the award after the expiry of the time prescribed by that article. The Appellant suggests, however, that he was misled by the order of the 17th July 1909, and alleges that he could not appear before the Judge on the date fixed, as the Court was held on that date in a place different from the locality wherein the Court was ordinarily held. It is not necessary for us to determine, whether this latter allegation is or is not well-founded on fact. The position is unassailable that no exception was taken within the time prescribed by Art. 158 and it was not competent to the Court to extend the time prescribed by that article. It thus became obligatory on the Court to confirm the award. But it has been ingeniously argued that an application to set aside the award was unnecessary, because the award had, in the eye of law, no existence, as the reference to arbitration was made with the concurrence of a person who had no authority to act on behalf of the guardian of the Appellant, an infant at that time. This contention is clearly fallacious. Sec. 522 of the Code of 1882 provides that if the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for reconsideration in the manner aforesaid, that is, under secs. 520 and 521, and, if no application has been made to set aside the award or if the Court has refused such application, the Court shall proceed to give judgment according to the award. The expression 'if no application has been made to set aside the award' is clearly comprehensive enough to cover a case of the present description and refers to a contingency other than the remission of an award. The award here, if not successfully challenged, would be primâ facie binding upon the Appellant: if there was good reason to assail the award, it was competent to his guardian ad litem to apply to the Court to set it aside within the time prescribed by Art. 158. This was not done: and the Court had thus no other course open than to record an order of confirmation.

It has finally been represented to us that the Appellant, at the time of the proceeding in the Court below, was an infant, and that although he has since then attained majority, he is now insane. This may be a matter for regret, but plainly cannot affect our decision. We do not however express any opinion upon another aspect of the matter suggested in the course of argument, namely, whether it is possible for the Plaintiff to obtain relief in a separate declaratory suit, on the ground of negligence of his guardian ad litem. We only hold that the present appeal is incompetent, and that even if we had been invited to interfere in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction, we could not afford any relief to the Petitioner in the events which have happened.

The result is that this Appeal is dismissed with costs: We assess the hearing-fee at five gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2421 OF 1911.

FLETCHER, J. N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. 1913, Heard, 27 and 28, November. Judgment, 28, November.

RAKHAL CHANDRA DAS, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. UMAPADO MISRI and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), secs. 5, 6—Transferee of portion of putni, if may claim recognition by zemindar under Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 12, 17—Sec. 195 (c).

A partial transferee of a putni taluk is not entitled to be recognised by the zemindar. It is a form of transfer which under the terms of secs. 5 and 6 of Reg. VIII of 1819 the zemindar is not bound to recognise, and under sec. 195 (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act the transferee cannot claim recognition by reason of secs. 12 and 17 of the latter Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 7th of February 1911 against a decree passed by J. Cornes, Esq., District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 17th of May 1911, modifying on appeal the decree passed by Babu Trailokya Nath Shome, Subordinate Judge of Midnapur, dated the 30th of July 1910.

The material facts of the case are thus set out in the judgment of the District Judge.

Formerly there was a putni-pottah of 12 mouzahs in the name of Defendant No. 3; of these 12 mouzahs, the Defendant No. 3 sold his rights in 4 of them to Defendant No. 4. Afterwards, he sold his rights in 4 more of them to the Plaintiff, and on the same day, the Defendant No. 4 sold her rights in 2 of her mouzahs to the Plaintiff; thus the Plaintiff acquired putni rights in 6 mouzahs out of the 12.

Shortly after these sales, the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 bought the proprietary interest in the putni mehal with the exception of 2 mouzahs, which had been sold away. For these new properties, the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 then instituted rent Suit No. 216 of 1909 against the Defendant No. 3 alone and obtained an ex parte decree and in execution of it advertised for sale one of the Plaintiff's mouzahs in the putni.

The Plaintiff sued for and obtained in the first Court the following declarations: (1) that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were bound to recognise him as tenant of the putni tenure jointly with Defendant No. 3.

2. That the Plaintiff was not bound by the decree passed in Suit No. 216 of 1909, and

3. That the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be restrained by an injunction from proceeding against the properties of the Plaintiff in execution of the decree passed in Suit No. 216 of 1909.

Against this decree, the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who alone contested the suit appealed to the District Judge who held that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not bound to recognise Defendant No. 3 as a tenant of the putni tenure jointly with Defendant No. 3, and set aside that portion of the Munsif's decree. With regard to the decree in Suit No. 216 of 1909, he held that it was a fraudulent decree and he allowed the first Court's decree on this point to stand. He concluded his judgment as follows:—

"It might be said that the result of these orders is tantamount to making Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 recognise the Plaintiff as a putnidar without his taking the necessary action under secs. 5 and 6 of the Putni Regulation, as they would be bound to implead him in a future suit, but this is not so. The Plaintiff cannot plead now ignorance of his duties under the Regulation, and if he does not take steps speedily to get his name registered with his landlords on a proper basis, the Court will presume that he is neglecting his duty deliberately, and if a similar case should come up in future, where a suit is being brought against the registered tenant, it will no longer be a genuine grievance with the Plaintiff that he has not been made a party.

"Under these circumstances, it is ordered that each party will bear its own costs in this and the lower Court."

The Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an Appeal preferred against a judgment and decree of the learned District Judge of Midnapur passed in an appeal presented to him from an order of the Subordinate Judge. The learned District Judge varied the decree of the Subordinate Judge by declaring that the Defendants are not bound to recognise the Plaintiff as a tenant. The point lies in a very narrow compass. The Plaintiff is a partial transferee of certain properties comprised in a putni and the point that has been pressed before us is that being only such a partial transferee, the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819 do not apply to him and that he is entitled to be recognised by the landlords under secs. 12 and 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion, there is no foundation for such a suggestion and it is contrary to what has been decided in the decisions of this Court on the Regulation. The 5th section of the Regulation (VIII of 1819) recognises the right of the putnidar to transfer his putni but subject to certain conditions, the conditions being, first of all, the payment of a fee to the zemindar and, secondly, the giving of security for half year's rent. Then, the 6th section of the Regulation provides that the zemindar may refuse to sanction the transfer till the fee and the security be tendered. Then comes a proviso in these terms:—"The rules of this and of the preceding section shall not be held to apply to transfers of any fractional portion of a putni taluk nor to any alienation other than of the entire interest." Those are the enacting words contained in the proviso. Then there is a semicolon and the proviso continues thus:—"For no apportionment of the zemindar's reserved rent can be allowed to stand good unless made under his special sanction. The reasons seem to me to be perfectly good and clear but they do not cut down the enacting words of the proviso even if you come to a case which does not fall within the reasons. In my opinion, this case does fall within the reasons because if the Plaintiff can compel the landlords to recognise him then there will be an apportionment of the reserved rent. It seems to me that it is a form of transfer which, under the terms of the Regulation, the zemindar is not bound to recognise. If that be so, then, of course, the Bengal Tenancy Act has nothing to do with this case at all. Sec. 195 (e) provides that nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act shall affect any enactment relating to putni tenures in so far as it relates to those tenures. If, on the true construction of secs. 5 and 6 of Reg. VIII of 1819, a perpetual transfer of a putni taluk is not permitted as against the zemindar without his special sanction, then under sec. 195 (e) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the sections contained in that Act do not enable the tenant to claim recognition by reason of secs. 12 and 17 of the Act. In my opinion, the learned Judge came to a correct conclusion in varying the decree of the first Court in the way he did. The present appeal must therefore fail and be dismissed with costs.

The observations of the learned District Judge contained in the penultimate clause in his judgment seem to me to be unnecessary and uncalled for, and, in my opinion, the learned Judge was not in a position to express any opinion as to what the failure of the Plaintiff to observe a course of conduct which he thought the Plaintiff ought to adopt would bring upon him if a similar case should occur in future. Those observations in the judgment should therefore be considered as unnecessary and uncalled for.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Administrator pendente lite, commission by way of remuneration that may be properly charged—Assets in his hands, meaning of—Negotiable securities endorsed over to banks for loans obtained by deceased, assets to what extent—Such securities, if pledges in the hands of bank and bank if holders for value thereof to the extent of loan—Lien of bank for loan on negotiable securities—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs. 172, 176—Account of administrator pendente lite passed, if amounts to settled account and if any bar to recovery of monies retained by him to which he is not entitled—Fiduciary position of such administrator—Estoppel—Laches—Acquiescence—Partition suit between Hindu sons—Mother's share, if ascertained before decree—Limitation, error of procedure, rectification within time, delay in completion of order and recording the re-presentment of plaint—Limitation of suits against persons in fiduciary position.

Where Government securities are endorsed in blank or endorsed in favour of a bank and given to the bank as security for loans obtained, the bank would be not merely a pledgee but a holder for value of the negotiable instruments to the extent of the sum for which it had a lien. The delivery of securities so endorsed passed to the bank a legal and not a mere equitable title.

mission so charged was properly charged, no estoppel arose to debar the heirs from suing the administrator for refund of the commission to which he was not legally entitled.

That this was not a case of opening a settled account but one of enforcing a claim against a fiduciary agent on the ground that he had retained more of the estate than he was entitled to under the order of Court authorising his remuneration, and the alleged acquiescence on the part of the Plaintiff would be no defence to the suit.

The suit being also within the statutory period of limitation, the defence of laches could not prevail.

Where there was no evidence that the Plaintiff knew that the facts as represented in the accounts were incorrect or that they did not rely on that representation, the inference was that they did so rely on the representation.

When one of four brothers governed by the Bengal school of Hindu law sued for partition and their mother was made party and an administrator pendente lite was appointed to represent the interests of a deceased brother before partition was actually effected, such administrator was entitled to charge commission on ¼th share of the whole estate and not on the ⅕th share as mother's share was a mere charge for maintenance and could not be declared before partition actually took place.

Where the administrator pendente lite charged commission on the whole estate when it came into his hands he could not charge any commission on the sale-proceeds of any portion of it.

Where on leave being asked for in the plaint under cl. 12 of the Charter the Registrar on the Original Side of the High Court under a misapprehension of the change in procedure with regard to the filing of plaints gave such leave but on discovery of the fact that the Registrar had no authority to grant such leave, the plaint was withdrawn on the 15th August 1907 and was immediately after presented before a Judge sitting on the Original Side who gave the leave and endorsed on the plaint "presented 15th August 1907," but there was delay in the office in completing the order and stamps were supplied upon requisition from the office on the 14th December 1907 and it was recorded in the office and also re-endorsed on the plaint that the plaint was re-registered and filed on the 18th December 1907; on objection being taken by the Defendant that the suit was barred by limitation:

Held by CHAUDHURI, J.—That the 15th of August 1907 as recorded by the Judge on the plaint was the date of its presentation and the suit was not barred by limitation.

This was an Appeal against the judgment of Chaudhuri, J., sitting on the Original Side of the High Court at Calcutta. The suit was brought by Plaintiffs-Respondents against the Defendant-Appellant, who had been appointed Administrator pendente lite to the estate of one Dakshina Mohan Roy deceased, praying that his accounts may be duly investigated in their presence and that Mr. Beeby may be ordered to pay and refund all overcharges made by him, the particulars of which are set out in para. 18 of the plaint and prayer 23 (b) of the prayer which are set out below. Mr. Osmond Beeby was appointed Administrator pendente lite on the 25th of July 1901 in certain testamentary suits in which Dakshina's properties and interests were claimed by some of his brothers under an alleged Will, the genuineness of which was contested by his widow Sindhubala. The term regarding his remuneration was that he was to be allowed a commission of 2 per cent. on all assets that came into his hands. Upon an application by Sindhubala an order was made by Court on the 21st of May 1903 by which Mr. Osmond Beeby was discharged from further acting as administrator pendente lite and he was ordered to file his accounts. Mr. Beeby had filed his accounts of July 1901 to 1902 in the Testamentary Court on the 16th December 1902; his accounts for July 1902 to December 1902 were filed on the 9th of September 1903; for January to June 1903 and July to December 1903 were filed in two sets on the 10th December 1903. Mr. Beeby was discharged on the 8th December 1903. Then Sindhubala was granted Letters of Administration to the estate of Dakshina on the 8th January 1906, the claims of the brothers under the alleged Will of the deceased having failed. Both prior and subsequent to this Sindhubala executed a deed of relinquishment of all her interests in favour of the reversionary heir, Kshitish Chandra Acharya Chaudhuri, the Plaintiff abovenamed. The accounts filed by Mr. Beeby were passed by the Testamentary Court on the 9th of January 1904. On the 6th December 1906, the Plaintiffs filed the present suit.

Para. 18 and prayer 23 (b) of the plaint are as follows:—

18. That after the said decree of the 8th day of January 1906 the accounts so filed by the Defendant were looked into on behalf of the infant Plaintiff and the Plaintiffs have discovered that the Defendant has improperly charged various items of commission amounting to a very large sum of money which the Defendant is bound to refund with interest and the Plaintiffs in particular show as follows:—

Amount of commission improperly charged	Grounds of objection.
(a) On the 27th of August 1901 the Defendant charged Rs. 12,818-13-7 being 2 per cent. on Rs. 6,40,942-8-10 representing the market value of the Government Promissory Notes endorsed to and in pledge with several banks in Calcutta at the time of the Defendant's appointment.	(a). The assets of Rs. 6,40,942-8-10 never came into the hands of the Defendant and the actual assets which came into the hands of the Defendant were small balances after the satisfaction of the claims of various banks, and the Plaintiffs submit that the Defendant was entitled to commission only on such balances.
(b). On the 27th March 1902 the Defendant charged Rs. 2,284 in excess on the valuation of the deceased's share in the joint family property.	(b). The deceased was only entitled to ⅕th share in the joint property, his mother being then alive and by the decree in the partition suit the deceased's share was declared to be a fifth one. The Defendant charged commission on a fourth share instead of a fifth, and thus charged in excess the sum of Rupees two thousand two hundred and eighty-four.
(c) On the 27th of March 1902 the Defendant charged Rs. 3,524-14 being 2 per cent. on Rs. 1,76,240 representing the value of the property in Joynagore allotted to the share of the deceased in the partition suit, and on the 1st of August the Defendant charged a further sum of Rs. 2,622-10-0 being 2 per cent. on Rs. 1,31,133 representing the value of the rest of the properties allotted to the share of the deceased in	(c). The Defendant in the said affidavit of valuation valued the share of the deceased in the property the subject-matter of the said Ghosal partition suit at Rs. 1,50,000 and he was only entitled to charge commission at 2 per cent. on the said sum of Rs. 1,50,000 amounting to the sum of Rs 3,000 and the Defendant consequently overcharged the sum of Rs. 3,147-8-0

the said partition suit, making together the sum of Rs. 6,147-8-0.
"(d). On the 22nd of September 1903 the Defendant charged Rs. 880 for commission without specifying the property on which the same was charged and it appears that he received sale-proceeds of certain land included in the said Ghosal property on the 19th September 1903 amounting to the sum of Rs. 26,490 two per cent. on which would amount to Rs. 528-14.	(d). The Defendant not having shown as to why this sum of Rs 880 was charged by him ought to refund the same and that at all events if it should appear that the said sum of Rs 528-14 is included in the said sum of Rs. 880 then he should refund the latter sum, he having already charged commission on the total value of the deceased's share in the Ghosal property.
(e). On the 1st day of February 1904 the Defendant charged commission amounting to the sum of Rs. 2,284-12-0 at 2 per cent. on gross collections in the deceased's share in the joint property amounting to the sum of Rs. 1 08 904 8-0 in the course of the Bengali years 1308 and 1309, such collections being made by the Receiver in the joint family partition suit.	(e). The Defendant never collected the said sum of Rs. 1,08,904-8-0 but only received from time to time small sums amounting in all to the sum of Rs. 33 315 from the said Receiver as the nett profit in the deceased's share and he thus overcharged the sum of Rs. 2,178

The Plaintiffs therefore pray as follows:—

(b) That the said accounts may be duly investigated in the presence of the Plaintiffs and the Defendant be ordered to pay and refund all overcharges and wrong debits made by him with interest at such rate and from such time as this Honorable Court may think fit, in particular the Defendant may be directed to refund the said sums of Rs. 12,818-13-7, Rs. 2,284, Rs 3,147-8, Rs. 880 and Rs 2,178 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the dates when they were respectively debited until realization.

The other material facts and contentions of the parties will appear from CHAUDHURI, J.'s judgment given below.

In the plaint they asked for leave under cl. 12 of the Charter, inasmuch as the commission charged was in respect of properties situate outside the jurisdiction of this Court and also because Mr. Beeby was not then residing within the jurisdiction of this Court, he having left for England. Such leave was granted by the Registrar of this Court. A new procedure had come into operation, and the Registrar, in the belief that he had power given to him by this Court to grant such leave had granted it in this case. There were several suits filed about that time in this way in which the Registrar had in a similar manner granted leave under cl. 12 of the Charter. Certain parties to these suits contended that the Registrar was not so empowered, and therefore the suits ought not to be held as having been properly instituted The matter was considered by this Court which came to the conclusion that the Registrar had not been empowered in that behalf and that the leave granted by him was inoperative, but to avoid questions of limitation being raised it was ordered in each case that the plaint should be re-presented at once, and upon that being done it was to be taken as having been duly filed. I am referring to this, as the first point taken by the Defendant is one of limitation based upon the return of this plaint upon an order of withdrawal, dated the 15th August 1907, which is to be found on page 34 of the Paper book. The plaint appears to have been re-registered and filed according to the endorsement upon it on the 18th December 1907, and it is contended that that date ought to be taken as the date of the re-presentation of the plaint. If that be so, it is contended that the suit is statute-barred. It appears, however, that the plaint was re-presented immediately after the order of withdrawal was made on the 15th August 1907 and the plaint itself contains an endorsement signed by Mr. Justice Stephen who was then sitting on the Original Side in these terms "presented this 15th day of August 1907. Leave granted under Cl. 12. H L Stephen." There was some delay in the office in drawing up the order of withdrawal, and stamps were supplied upon requisition from the office on the 14th of December and then the Assistant Registrar entered the plaint as registered and filed on the 18th December 1907. There is a minute by the Registrar of this Court which is annexed to the plaint, which gives all the particulars. I am unable to agree that the plaint must be taken as having been filed on the 18th December 1907 and hold that it was admitted on the 15th August 1907. In addition to this point it is pressed that inasmuch as the overcharges are shewn in the accounts in respect of (1) the Government Promissory Notes on the 27th August 1901, (2) the valuation of the joint family properties and of what are called the Joynogore properties on the 27th March 1902, (3) of the rest of the properties allotted to the share of Dakshina on the 1st August 1902, (4) an item of Rs. 880 for commission on the 1st February 1904, (5) in respect of rent collections of the estate, the period of limitation should be 3 years from each of these dates, and therefore the suit must be considered as statute barred. It is also contended that the Defendant was in no sense a trustee, that he was certainly not an express trustee, and therefore when he charged these sums it must be taken that it was money had and received and therefore the period of limitation was three years from the respective dates of receipt Now it seems to me that "an Administrator pendente lite" is certainly in the position of trustee. In Seagram v. Tuck (3), it was held by Mr. Justice Kay that in regard to any money due from a Receiver and not brought into account either through mistake or through fraud, he would be a trustee for the person entitled to that money and that would be one answer to the Statute of Limitation. Reference may also be made to the case of Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (4), and also In Re Dunn Singleton: Brinklow (5), and also to the case of Akhoy Kumar Bose v Keder Nath Bannerjee (6). I am of opinion that the claim in this suit is not statute barred.

The main contention, however, in this case is about the overcharges. They are clearly set forth in para. 18 of the plaint and the grounds of objection are also therein fully stated. There is no question of a general investigation of accounts in this case. Decision of this Court has been practically asked for in respect of the items mentioned in that paragraph of the plaint.

The first relates to certain Government Promissory Notes which had been pledged by Dakshina Mohan in his lifetime with three different banks in Calcutta The total nominal value of the Government Promissory Notes exceeded six lakhs of Rupees and Dakshina Mohan had drawn against them very nearly the full value. The details are to be found in Schedule B annexed to plaint, page 11 of the Paper book. On page 19 the amount which was received by the Defendant the administrator after the sale of these Government Securities and payment of the debts due by the deceased to the Banks, is shewn, namely, Rs. 29,215-4-5 only. Mr. Beeby has charged commission on the gross value of the Government Securities at the rate of 2 per cent, and it is contended that all he could charge against was the sum of Rs. 29,215-4-5. The sales are credited in his books on the 21st August 1901. There is no doubt that Mr. Beeby asked the different Banks to sell the Government Securities through a well-known firm of brokers in Calcutta, the firm being named by him His letters are Exbts. 1a, 1b, 1c, and Exbt. 2. The Banks sold upon receipt of his instructions and as I have stated the proceeds after deduction of the debts due to them respectively were sent to him about the 21st August 1901. It is contended on behalf of Mr. Beeby that it must be taken that upon his appointment he came into possession of these Government Securities although they were with the Bank, and that they were assets in his hands. The transaction, however, was a pledge, and there can be no question that the Banks were entitled to possession of these Securities and had possession as pledgees. The rights of a pledgee are contained in sec. 173 of the Contract Act. The form which the transaction usually takes is an endorsement by the pledgor of the Government Securities in favour of the Bank. But whether in this case they were endorsed in favour of the Banks or not has not been shown. Sec. 176 of the Contract Act provides that if the pledgor makes default the pledgee has the right to sell the articles pledged but with notice to the pledgor. The same principle is affirmed in the case of Neikram Dobay v. Bank of Benagl (7). In this case the securities were sold at the instance of the representative of the deceased.

Mr Beeby contends first that security was taken from him by this Court when he was appointed

OSMOND BEEBY v. KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARYA CHAUDHURI.

Administrator on a valuation of the estate which included the value of these Government Securities as part of the assets. Even if that be so, I do not think that such valuation by the Court made the securities assets in his hands. He next says that inasmuch as he employed his brokers to sell, that therefore it must be taken that he had authority to deal with these Government Securities, and in fact under his authority the Banks dealt with these securities, and from that the Court ought to hold that they were assets which came into his hands. Now the pledgee had possession of these securities under a legal right. Mr. Beeby could not get possession of them without paying the debt due What he had, was a right to redeem. If he did not choose to redeem, the pledgee could with notice sell. The effect of his letters to the Banks was to waive notice of sale, that he did not desire to redeem the securities, that he wished the securities should be sold at once and that a particular firm of brokers was to be employed. By employing them the Banks certainly did not part with the possession of these documents. The effect of the employment of the nominated firm was merely that the Banks accepted such rates as were brought to them by the brokers. I, therefore, hold that these Government Securities were not assets which came into the hands of Mr. Beeby. Supposing Mr. Beeby employed money in his hands belonging to the estate to redeem the Government Securities, could he again charge upon the value of the Government Securities so redeemed? It appears to me certainly not, because he would then be converting one portion of the assets into another form and he could not charge twice over. Take it in another way, namely, that he borrowed the necessary amount and redeemed those securities. Can it be said that the sums borrowed by the Administrator for purposes of administration are assets of the deceased in his hands? Employment of sums borrowed in redeeming pledged Government Securities cannot, in my view, be held to reduce the redeemed Government Securities to assets of the deceased upon which commission is payable

A great many cases have been cited in connection with this question. But before I deal with them, I think some light may be derived from the provisions in the Civil Procedure Code about the execution of decrees against "assets" in the hands of the legal representative of a deceased. Would the securities pledged by the deceased be available for a general creditor in execution, or only the balance left over after satisfaction of the debt due to the pledgee? I now intend to deal with some of the cases which were cited. In the goods of Simpson (8), the contention was in respect of the rights of the Administrator-General under sec. 27 of Act VIII of 1855. The properties upon which the Administrator-General had charged were cash, Government Securities and the value of the leasehold properties. Their Lordships in the Madras High Court held that the leasehold properties could not be considered as assets collected and distributed. They held that so far as the Government Securities were concerned as the Administrator-General had taken manual possession of them, it was a collection within the meaning of the statute, although some doubt was expressed by one of the Judges who considered that Government Securities were not assets until realization. In the Goods of Courjon (9), the question of the commission chargeable by the Administrator-General under Act 2 of 1872 was discussed, with reference to the collection and distribution of assets by him. Sale, J., held that under the Act "collection" implied the doing of some act in connection with the assets of the deceased. A special section of the Administrator-General's Act was construed, which does not much help in dealing with the question before me. In Omrita Nath Mitter v. Administrator-General of Bengal (10), dealing with the question of admission of assets by an executor, the term "assets" is defined as "the property of a deceased person chargeable with and applicable to the payment of his debts."

I find in the case of N. S. Watkins v. Sarat Chunder Ghose Mullick (11), Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., held on appeal on the 8th January 1908 that in respect of mortgaged property the Administrator-General was only entitled to a commission on the value of the equity of redemption In my opinion Rs. 29,215-4-5 only is to be considered as assets which came into the Defendant's hands. In Glaholm v Rowntree (12), a life policy had been pledged by the testator with a person whom he subsequently appointed one of his executors.

OSMOND BEEBY v. KSHITISH CHANDRA ACHARYA CHAUDHURI.

The pledgee applied to the Life Insurance Company for payment of the policy. The Company refused to pay without a receipt from both the two executors, upon which the pledgee executor and the other executor gave a receipt the pledgee stating in it that he did not admit that any such joint receipt was necessary but in order to avoid trouble he had joined with the other executor in giving the receipt. Upon payment by the Company of the amount, some of the creditors of the deceased claimed that the sum so paid should be considered as assets in the hands of the executors for their benefit. It was held that it could not be considered as assets in their hands but that the surplus after payment of the debt due to the pledgee Executor was to be considered as "assets" in the hands of the Executors. This case has been quoted with approbation by Lord Justice Vaughan Williams in Cooke v. Stevens (13). In my opinion the sum of Rs. 29,215-4-5 only can be considered as assets which came into the hands of the Defendant and upon that sum alone he could charge commission, not on the nett value of the pledged Government Securities.

The next question is as to the share of the deceased in the joint family properties. Dakshina was one of four sons of Mohini Mohan Roy who also left his widow him surviving. She being the mother of these sons a suit was instituted in the lifetime of Dakshina by one of his brothers for partition of the joint estate in which the mother was necessarily made a party. Upon the appointment of Mr. Beeby he was put in the place of Dakshina. The Plaintiffs contend that Mr. Beeby was entitled to charge only on one-fifth of the value of the estate, not on one-fourth inasmuch as the mother was entitled to one-fifth upon partition. The preliminary decree in the partition suit was made on the 19th January 1904 and the final decree on the 10th November, 1904, that is to say, after Mr. Beeby's discharge. Dakshina's share in his father's estate was undoubtedly one-fourth, the mother being entitled to an equal share with the sons only upon partition She has no share until partition. This Court held in Sarolah Dassi v. Bhoobun Mohun (14), that a wife's interest in her husband's estate given to her by her marriage ceases upon the death of her husband leaving lineal heirs in the male line; that such heirs take the whole estate; and that the share which a mother takes on partition among her sons she does not take from her husband either by inheritance or by way of survivorship in continuation of any pre-existing interest; but she takes it from her sons in lieu of or by way of provision for that maintenance for which they and their estates are already bound, that upon her death such share goes back to her sons. Sheodya Tewaree v. Judoo Nath Tewaree (15), was discussed in Sarolah Dassi's case (14), and the learned Judges approved of the decision that when a mother takes a share on partition her title arises from the partition alone and that she had no pre-existing vested right except a right of maintenance It was a Mitakshara case but the Bengal Law is more positive in restricting the mother's right than the Benares Law. Mr. Beeby was in the same position as Dakshina, entitled to one-fourth of the property until partition, and as such partition took place after his discharge he is entitled to his commission on one-fourth.

The next question is as regards the Joynagore properties. The contention is that Mr. Beeby having stated in his application for Letters of Administration that their value was Rs. 1,50,000 he was not entitled to charge upon the actual value of the estate ascertained later. Mr. Beeby valued the properties at the price paid by the deceased. I cannot hold that he is estopped from claiming commission on the proper value of the properties when ascertained. I hold that he was entitled to charge as he has done.

In respect of the second portion of the charge in para. 18, I find that Mr. Beeby did not charge his commission until the property was allotted to the share of the deceased. He appointed his own manager upon such allotment. I therefore hold that he was entitled to charge in respect of those properties

The next item relates to a sum of Rs. 880 alleged to have been charged for commission without specifying the property on which the same was charged. Mr. Beeby has made up an account and it was made over to the Defendants during the trial No objection has been taken to it. It appears to be merely an item in the account and I take it that there is no objection to it, nor in respect of the item mentioned in the second portion of sub-para. (b), para. 18.

The last item is a charge on the gross collection in respect of the deceased's share in the joint family property. The contention is that the joint estate was in the hands of the Receiver appointed in the partition suit and Mr. Beeby is only entitled to charge on what the Receiver ultimately remitted to the Administrator pendente lite, Mr. K. S. Bonnerjee who replaced Mr. Beeby. Mr. Bonnerjee then paid Mr. Beeby commission on the gross collection and not merely on what he received. Mr. Beeby firstly contends that if any one is accountable for this payment it is Mr. K. S. Bonnerjee and that if the Court thinks that such commission was improperly charged, Mr. Bonnerjee is liable to bring it back, not he. I am of opinion that the Administrator is entitled to charge on the gross collection which was made by the Receiver. The Receiver was appointed in a partition suit in which there was no dispute as regards the share of Dakshina. He was admittedly entitled to one fourth of the whole estate subject to the mother's right. The possession of the Receiver is the possession of the parties according to their respective title although he may not be the agent of any particular party. When the Receiver collects in such a suit he collects as the agent of the co-sharers and moneys collected by him are their money. In the case I have once referred to, N. S. Watkins v. Sarat Chunder Ghose Mullick (11), it was held that if the collection was made by the Receiver of the estate it was not a collection of assets by the Administrator General within the meaning of the Administrator-Generals' Act. This portion of the case is reported in Watkins v. Sarat Chunder Ghosh (16). But I think Mr. Beeby's case is distinguishable. His remuneration does not depend upon collection and distribution but upon what is to be considered as assets coming into his hands, and I hold that the assets which were realized by the Receiver were held by him on account of Mr. Beeby and he is entitled to claim commission upon such assets

The only question which now remains is as to the right of the Plaintiffs to a refund of the amounts which I have held was overcharged by Mr. Beeby, namely, in respect of the Government Promissory Notes. Now there are three points taken in this connection (i) That the accounts having once been passed in the Testamentary Jurisdiction there was no further right of suit. The Appellate Court has held in this very case Khitish Chunder v. Osmond Beeby (17), that there is a right of suit although the accounts may have been so passed. (ii) That these accounts were open to the inspection of the parties and that Nripendra Bhusan Roy, the brother of Sindhubala, who held her Power of Attorney, used to come to the office of Mr. Beeby frequently, that he always looked into his accounts, and that he never took any objection to them, and that therefore it should be taken as an account stated. Mr. Beeby, however, said in his evidence that Nripendra attended his office so far as he knew before April 1902. I am not prepared to hold that such inspection as may have been held by Nripendra precludes Sindhubala from questioning the accounts. (iii) That the attorney for Sindhubala was present in Court at the time Mr. Beeby's accounts as Administrator came up to be passed when no objection was taken. It is also stated that Radhica, one of the objectors in the first Testamentary Suit, actually wrote to Mr Beeby objecting to these items but that he subsequently withdrew them, that the attorneys for other two brothers did not object to the commission charged by Mr. Beeby and that Babu Bhupendra Nath Bose, the attorney for Sindhubala, personally told Mr. Beeby that he had no objection and that another member of his firm who appeared for Sindhubala on the day that the matter was set down for consideration did not also object. I am not prepared to hold that the accounts passed in the Testamentary Suit in manner above stated precludes the Plaintiff's right to an account, or that such accounts can be looked upon as settled accounts between the parties which cannot be re-opened under any circumstances. Mr. Justice Harington trying this question when the case came up before him on settlement of issues, only said that the accounts could not be re-opened unless there was fraud, mistake or omission. He further said that as there was no question of fraud or mistake the Plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain this suit. The case was then taken to the Appeal Court which has remanded it for trial on its merits. The payments made by Mr.

Beeby to himself may at least be treated as made under a mistake and therefore the beneficiaries would be entitled to have a general account taken. The Appeal Court has sent the case back for trial holding that the plaint discloses a cause of action and that the Plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit. It is contended by Mr. Garth on behalf of Mr. Beeby that if the parties were fully cognizant of the items at the time the accounts were passed, they cannot re-open the question. In support of his proposition, Maund v. Allies (18) was cited. That was a case between partners who came to a settlement fully cognizant of what the items were. The facts were wholly different. Fowler v. Wyatt (19) was also cited but that was a case between an architect and builder. There was a deed of release but it was sought to re-open the accounts on the ground that the rates were usurious It was held that the accounts could not be re-opened because when they were taken and the release was executed, the parties knew what they were about. Gething v Keighley (20) was also cited. In that case the accounts were settled a long time before suit. It was a matter between two partners. Even in that case their Lordships held there was a right to surcharge or falsify if not to re-open the whole account. The law is also clearly discussed in the case of Bhowani Prosad Shahu v. Jugernath Shahu (21). All that is sought here is to test the validity of certain charges in respect of specified items. It is not sought to open up the accounts generally. It is then contended on behalf of the Defendant that the payments so taken by Mr. Beeby were if anything under a mistake of the law and that therefore there is no remedy. In support of this proposition, Brisbane v. Dacres (22) was cited. The passage relied upon is to be found on pages 152 to 153. It was held in that case that in every case a mistake of law was not an answer In the case of Rogers v. Ingham (23), also cited, two legatees respectively took Counsel's opinion which agreed, and the executors upon such opinion made a payment. One of the legatees subsequently took another Counsel's opinion which differed from that of the former and he then sought to recover the amount thus paid

It was held that in the circumstances of that case it could not be done. Reference has been made to the case of Daniell v. Sinclair (24), in which the following passage occurs:—"Undoubtedly there are cases in the Courts of common law in which it has been held that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered and it has been further held that under certain circumstances the giving credit in account may be treated as so far equivalent to payment as to prevent sums wrongly credited being made the subject of set off. But in equity the line between mistakes in law and mistakes in fact has not been so clearly and sharply drawn." In Ex-parte Simmonds, In re Carnac (25), it was held that the ordinary rule as between litigant parties that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered does not apply to payment made under such mistake to a Trustee in Bankruptcy. The Court held that it had power to order re-payment of money which may have been kept by a Receiver appointed by a Court of Equity although it may have been due to a mistake of law when such mistake was discovered. In In re Brown, Dixon v. Brown (26), the same principle is affirmed and also in the case of Hurronath Ray v. Krishna Coomar Bukshi (27). I am of opinion that I can make a decree in this case for the overcharge in sub-cl (a) of paragraph 18 of the plaint in respect of the Government Securities in favour of the Plaintiff, Kshitish Chander Roy. The decree will be for the difference of the commission between Rs. 640,942-8-10 and Rs. 29,215-4-5 at 2 per cent. The Plaintiff will also be entitled to his costs. Decretal amount to carry interest at 6 per cent. from date of decree.

Mr. Norton (with Mr. Mullick) for the Appellant.—Sindhubala's attorney gave consent to the passing of account. On that we contend that Plaintiff was estopped from questioning these accounts by her laches and acquiescence. The lady had copies of account taken. Her brother objected to the charge but withdrew that

[JENKINS, C. J.—Has sec. 171 any application ?]

Mr. Norton.—I admit they would have right to retain these securities if they were made over to them with that purpose. The banks terminated that right to retain by following my instructions to sell and handing over to me the balance.

Unlike mortgage transactions the title in things pledged is in the pledgor. The estate is outstanding and is in, Carter v. Wake (28).

cutors, 10th Edn., Vol. II., pp. 1279, 1283. Therefore, Mr. Beeby was not entitled to charge commission on such portion of their value as did not come into his hands. The real position of the Banks in respect of these Government Securities was that they were holders of the Government Securities and they had also a lien on them to the extent of their advances to Dakshina. See Chalmer's Bills of Exchange, 7th Edn., p. 93. Byles on Bills, 17th Edn., p. 193. Brandao v. Barnett (33). Even if the Banks were mere pledgees or pawnees Mr. Beeby's request to the Banks to sell made it unnecessary for the Banks to give him notice before sale and the requirements of sec. 176 of the Contract Act were satisfied. Pledgor cannot recover the securities pledged without payment of the amount secured. Netkram Dobay's case (7). The Banks were entitled to sell and repay themselves at any time they chose and what the Banks were entitled to deduct did not form assets in Mr. Beeby's hands. Such assets were limited to the balance left over after the satisfaction of the claims of the Banks and Mr. Beeby collected such balance only. As to the title in things pledged, such title and property in a bill of exchange which is pledged passes to the pledgee and in this respect it forms an exception to the ordinary cases of pledge where title remains in the pledgor. The law constitutes the pledgee a holder for value to the extent of the lien with a title independent of the pledgor.

Byles on Bills, 17th Edn., p. 193. So far as estoppel is concerned, no such question arises. The point here is whether the Defendant was entitled to charge certain commission under the order which appointed him. That is a proposition of law and is not a "thing" within the meaning of sec. 115 of the Evidence Act. See Woodroffe's Evidence Act, 4th Edn., p. 666. The mere fact of keeping an account for any length of time without remark and objection is no evidence of acquiescence. See Woodroffe's Evidence Act, 5th Edn., p. 149. Taylor on Evidence, sec. 110. Assuming that my client's attorney in testamentary proceedings considered that in his opinion Mr. Beeby was entitled to charge commission, it was an admission on the part of the legal adviser on a point of law which is not binding on the client. Woodroffe's Evidence Act, 4th Edn., p. 128. The attorney's consent to the passing of account on the testamentary side of this Court cannot affect my right. As a matter of fact no such objection to the debit of commission could have been raised in the proceedings on the passing of accounts which are merely formal. See Sattya Sankar v. Golapmonee (34). There can be no estoppel against an infant. The cases cited by my friend have no application and are distinguishable.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an Appeal from a judgment of Chaudhuri, J, in a suit brought against Mr. Osmond Beeby, a former Adminisitrator pendente lite of the estate of Dakshina Mohan Roy, for a refund of remuneration alleged to have been retained by him in excess of what was his due.

of "a commission of two per cent. on the assets that will come into his hands."

Dakshina Mohan Roy at the time of his death was indebted to the Bank of Bengal, the National Bank of India, and the Comptoir National D' Escompte De Paris. Against this indebtedness each bank held Government securities, the total value of which was Rs. 6,40,942-8-10. The indebtedness to the several banks was discharged out of the sale-proceeds of the Government securities with the result that a balance of Rs. 29,215-4-5 only came to the hands of the Administrator pendente lite. He has, however, retained a comission of 2 per cent. on the Rs. 6,40,942-8-10. To this exception is taken by the Plaintiffs in this suit.

What we therefore have to decide is, whether this sum, representing the full value of the Government securities, can be regarded as assets of the deceased that came into the hands of the Administrator pendente lite. Chaudhuri, J., held that there was a pledge to each of the banks and that the banks were entitled to possession of these securities and had possession of them as pledgees. There is no ground of appeal directed against this finding, and I think we ought to accept it as correct.

There is no evidence as to how these securities were endorsed, but this at least is certain, that there is no suggestion that they were endorsed by Mr. Beeby.

At the same time we know they were sold and transferred by the banks, so that it is conceded they must either have been endorsed in blank or endorsed to the several banks. In either case each bank, as to the securities held by it, would be a holder for value at any rate to the extent of the sum for which it had a lien. To borrow the phraseology of English law, by the delivery of the securities so endorsed there passed a legal and not a mere equitable interest. [See per Lord Ellenborough in Scott v. Franklin (1)]. How then can it be said that these securities to the extent of the amount for which each bank had a lien, were assets of the deceased which came to the hands of the Administrator pendente lite?

For Mr. Beeby it is argued that though his claim could not have been sustained had the securities been mortgaged, still as the banks were only pledgees the same difficulty does not arise; for that under those sections of the Contract Act which relate to pledges the property in the securities did not pass to the banks. In the circumstances it is contended, the sales of the securities must be deemed to have been made by the several banks as agents for Mr. Beeby. But can it be fairly said that the banks sold as the agents of Mr. Beeby?

True it is that the brokers by whom the sales were effected were the firm nominated by Mr. Beeby, and under the provisions of the Contract Act the banks were not entitled to sell at the time when the sales were effected. But I cannot think that the banks in selling as they did were acting as the agents of the Administrator pendente lite.

Moreover, the banks were not only pledgees, they were also holders for value of these negotiable instruments with the consequent rights that belong to that position; and in the circumstances I am unable to hold that so much of the sale-proceeds as the several banks applied to the discharge of the debts due to them, were within the description of assets that came into the hands of the Administrator pendente lite.

But then it is said that the present Plaintiffs are estopped. These Plaintiffs are a purdanashin lady and a minor. The lady succeeded to a widow's limited interest at the deceased's death, and the minor, by surrender of all previous limited interests to him as the next male reversioner on the 16th August 1905, then became and now is, the full owner of the deceased's estate. What is charged against the Plaintiffs is that the accounts of the Administrator pendente lite were passed, and that the Plaintiff, Sreemutty Sindhubala Debi, with full knowledge of their contents, including the charge of this commission, through her agent and attorney raised no objection though she had full notice. And in this connection reliance is placed on a conversation alleged to have passed between Mr. Beeby and the attorney in the Bar Library when the attorney expressed an opinion that Mr. Beeby was justified in making this charge. But I fail to see how any estoppel arose. When the procedure followed on the passing of accounts is borne in mind, it would be dangerous to hold that this alone would suffice for the purpose of forming the basis of an estoppel, nor can the Plaintiffs be bound by this casual conversation. But apart from that, how can it be said that the conditions prescribed by sec. 115 of the Evidence Act have been established? Even if it be assumed that the Plaintiffs represented that the charge was rightly made, still it had to be observed that the accounts represented the 6 lakhs as having been received by Mr. Beeby And had that been the fact, then he would have been entitled to the commission shown in the accounts as retained by him.

Nor can I see what act was induced by the Plaintiffs; his appropriation of the amount of the commission was before the passing of the accounts, as also was his departure for England.

But if the Plaintiffs are not estopped, are they debarred by laches or acquiescence from enforcing their claim? I think not. This is not a case of opening a settled account so much as enforcing a claim against a fiduciary agent on the ground that it has been discovered that he has retained more of the estate than he was entitled to under the order authorising his remuneration.

The defence of laches cannot prevail when, as here, a statutory period of limitation is prescribed. Nor can acquiescence be imputed to the Plaintiffs, for though Mr. Beeby's accounts as passed showed the retention of the amounts now sought to be recovered, still these accounts represented the 6 lakhs odd, on which the commission was calculated, as received by him.

There is no evidence to show that the Plaintiffs actually knew the facts as represented in the accounts to be incorrect, or that they did not rely on that representation, and the inference therefore is that they did so rely. [Redgrave v. Hurd (2)].

In saying this, I do not forget the aleged conversation with Mr. Bhupendra Nath Bose in the Bar Library.

The broad facts are these, if my view of the extent of Mr. Beeby's right to commission is correct; an Administratior pendente lite has retained as his remuneration more than he was entitled to claim: his accounts, contrary to the fact, represented receipts by him entitling him to the commission retained by him; and a suit is now brought against him to recover that amount within the time allowed by law.

I hold no answer has been shewn, and I therefore would not disturb Mr. Justice Chaudhuri's decision on this part of the case.

Then three points have been raised by way of cross-objection. First, it is said that the Adminis'rator has charged commission on the basis of the deceased being entitled to a ¼th share in the family property, whereas his share was only ⅕th. I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken by Chaudhuri, J. The share was originally ¼th, and I think it may fairly be said that this share came into Mr. Beeby's hands, though it was liable to be reduced to ⅕th and was in fact so reduced.

The next objec ion is tha: Mr. Beeby received commission on the sale-proceeds of a part of the Ghosal property, though he had previously received commission on the entire'y of that property. Chaudhuri, J., has not dealt with this point under the impression that it was not seriously urged. But Mr. Chakravarti assures us that this was not so. If commission was taken on the whole of the property, I do not think commission could be again taken on the sale-proceeds of a part of the property. As this is what happened, the objection must succeed.

The third objection raises the question whether commission is to be charged on the gross or only on the net collections.

The gross collections were made on behalf of those entitled, of whom Mr. Beeby as Adminis'rator pendente lite was one. I therefore think we ought not to disturb Mr. Justice Chaudhuri's decision on this point.

The result then is that, in my opinion, the decree of the learned Judge should be varied by increasing the sum of Rs. 12,234-8-9 thereby decreed to Rs. 12,763 6-9 by the addition thereto of the sum of Rs. 528-14-1, the commission on the proceeds of sale of a part of the Ghosal property.

WOODROFFE J.—I agree.

Decree varied.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 48 OF 1912.

HOLMWOOD J., SHARFUDDIN, J. 1914, 4, March.

SHEIKH AMJAD and anr., Defendants, Appellants, v. LACHMI KANTA JHA, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 74—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 107—Notice under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., if a public document—Proof necessary for admission of such document in evidence.

A notice under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., is a public document within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Evidence Act, but it cannot come in without proof that the parties mentioned in it are the parties concerned in the question at issue about which it is produced as evidence.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 15th of June 1912 against a decree of A. Mellor, Esq., District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 20th of September 1911, reversing a decree of Moulvie Najabat Husain, Munsif of Madhubani, dated the 20th of February 1911.

The facts necessary for this report will appear from the material portion of the judgment of the District Judge which is set out below:—

"This was a suit on a mortgaged bond executed by Defendants in favour of the

SHEIKH AMJAD v. LACHMI KANTA JHA.

Plaintiffs, Umakant Jha and one Udit Jha, for a consideration of Rs. 250. Umakant and Udit each advanced half of this amount, and it was arranged that the latter should keep the bond in his possession and that any payment by the mortgagor to the former must, therefore, be acknowledged by a formal receipt and acquittance instead of the usual endorsement on the back of the bond. Plaintiffs alleged that nothing had been paid by the mortgagors, the Defendants, first party, on account of principal or interest, and, therefore, sued to recover the amount due on the bond, or in the alternative, their half share. Udit Jha and the members of his family were joined as Defendants as they had refused to join in the suit. Defendants, first party, alleged that they had paid up the whole amount due in the bond, and in support of the statement produced the original bond with acknowledgments of payment purporting to be written by Udit Jha and Umakant Jha, each for his own share of what was due. The learned Munsif has believed the evidence for the Defendants, first party, and holding that the debt had been paid has dismissed the suit. Defendant, second party, has not appeared throughout the proceedings. Plaintiffs contended that after the execution of the mortgage bond there had been a quarrel between them and Udit Jha, while on the other hand, the Defendants, first party, alleged that the Plaintiff and Defendant, second party, were in collusion with each other. The Munsif has believed the version given by the Defendants, first party. The Plaintiffs are of course the Appellants and the Defendants, first party, the Respondents.

"In support of their story of a quarrel between themselves and Udit Jha, the Appellants produced before the lower Court a notice issued on Ajaib Jha, one of the Plaintiffs, in a case under the Code of Criminal Procedure, but the learned Munsif refused to admit it as evidence. I think that this evidence has been wrongly excluded. If a paper bearing the signature of a Magistrate and the seal of his Court is not an act of a public officer under sec. 74 of Evidence Act, it is difficult to say what is. The notice is clearly a public document and it bears out the allegation that in the year 1905 there was a quarrel between Ajaib Jha and Udit Jha about a piece of land which resulted in criminal proceedings. The result of the criminal proceedings does not matter, as all that Appellants wish to prove is the existence of bad feeling between them and Udit Jha at the time when the mortgage debt is said to have been discharged, viz., the 23rd of Chait 1313, (i.e., the 2nd of April 1906)."

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee (for Babu Umakali Mukerjee) and Suresh Chandra Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Singh for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The only point which arises in this case is the question upon which the two lower Courts were in disagreement, whether the notice under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., is a public document within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Evidence Act, and if it is, whether it can come in without proof of the identity of the parties who are named therein. We may answer the second question first by saying that clearly it cannot come in without proof that the parties mentioned in it are the parties concerned in the question at issue about which it is produced as evidence. But in this case the Plaintiff himself in the witness-box said that he had received this notice from the Court and that he had appeared in Court and he had fought this case against the Defendants, fourth party, and that the order had been passed in his favour. It is, therefore, clear that this was a notice issued in a criminal case between the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 4 in the year 1905, and if it is admissable it would therefore be evidence that there was a quarrel between Ajaib Jha and Udit Jha about a piece of land in the year 1905.

As regards it being a public document we think that there can be no doubt that it is the record of the act of a tribunal; in one sense it is the act of the tribunal itself. It is the only authority by which the accused person can be brought before the tribunal, and it is in its essence the strong arm of the tribunal stretched out to bring the accused person into its presence. It is clearly therefore the act of the tribunal. It is also in the case of a notice under sec. 107 the record of another act of the tribunal inasmuch as it sets out the ground upon which the tribunal is acting and calls from the party summoned to show cause, so that in any case it appears to us to be a public document; and that being so and it being shown that the parties mentioned therein were the Plaintiff and Defendant No. 4 in this case the learned Judge in the Court below was right in using it as evidence.

As this is the only point raised in this Second Appeal, the Appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]
REV. No. 1660 OF 1913.

IMAM, J. CHAPMAN, J. 1913, Heard, 17, November, Judgment, 26, November.	ARAJ SARKAR and ors., Accused, Petitioners, v. EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 439—Revision of sentence on consideration of fresh facts—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 147—Rioting over disputed possession of chur—Finding of Settlement Officer pronounced after issue of Rule considered by High Court in revising sentence.

In a case of rioting arising out of a dispute relating to the possession of a chur between the zemindar and the talukdar in which both the lower Courts found in favour of the complainant on the question of possession, but the Assistant Settlement Officer after the judgment of the Sessions Judge in appeal was pronounced and after a Rule was issued by the High Court, found in connection with the preparation of record-of-rights that the culturable area in the chur was in the possession of the zemindar whose men the Petitioners were, the High Court for the purpose of revising the sentence considered the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer and reduced the sentence.

This Rule was issued against an order of Babu Nagendra Chandra Sen, Deputy Magistrate of Tangail, dated the 21st of July 1913, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing them to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment and binding them down under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., an appeal from which order was dismissed by Mr. M. C. Ghosh, Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, on the 15th of September 1913.

ARAJ SARKAR v. EMPEROR.

The dispute out of which this case arose related to a chur known as Chur Bahuli in the river Brahmaputra locally called Jumna. The Petitioners were the men of the zemindar who claimed title to and possession over the land comprised in the chur. The party of the complainant belonged to the side of the talukdars who also claimed possession over the land. There were several criminal cases between the parties. In the meantime survey and settlement proceedings were taken in respect of the chur. On account of the dispute between the parties an order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., was issued by the Magistrate, on the 14th October 1912, directing the zemindar's party as well as the talukdar's party not to go on the chur. The Petitioners' case was that in spite of the order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., the talukdars' party attempted to go on the land and take possession. An application was made to the Magistrate setting out the charge of disobedience against the talukdars' party and praying that the land and standing crops might be attached till the decision of the dispute between the parties. On the 1st November 1912, the Magistrate passed an order of attachment and on the 3rd November 1912 a Sub-Inspector of Police went to the disputed chur to attach the crops under the orders of the Magistrate. The Petitioners representing the party of the zemindar accompanied the Sub Inspector of Police and when they were engaged in pointing out the plots on which the crops stood the party of the talukdars appeared. A dispute arose between the parties and a sort of fight took place. The Petitioners were placed on their trial on a charge of rioting and some of them were also charged under sec. 323, I. P. C. On the 21st July 1913, the Deputy Magistrate delivered judgment convicting the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing them each to rigorous imprisonment for 11 months and also ordered them to execute bonds under sec. 109, Cr. P. C. The Petitioners appealed to the Sessions Judge. The appeal was heard by the Additional Sessions Judge who upheld the conviction and sentence by his judgment, dated the 15th September 1913. The Magistrate and the Sessions Judge found that the talukdars were in possession.

The Petitioners thereupon moved the High Court which issued a Rule on the 24th October 1913 calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the sentences passed on the Petitioners should not be revised. On the 18th November 1913, the Assistant Settlement Officer pronounced his decision in which he found that the zemindar was in possession of all culturable area of the chur. The Assistant Settlement Officer found as follows:

"The objectors are generally known as the talukdars' party, and the Defendants are known as the zemindar's party. This chur has been the subject-matter of a series of litigations between the parties which culminated in the conviction and imprisonment of fifteen of the zemindar's men under sec. 147, I. P. C., in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Tangail on the 21st July 1913. From copies of the case records it appears that since 1910 it has all along been held by the Criminal Courts that the chur was in possession of the talukdars' party. The Criminal Courts have dealt with the chur as a whole and did not enter into an examination of the rights of the parties. It therefore becomes necessary for me in preparing a record-of-rights to go more fully into the question of rights . . . . . I am firmly of opinion that the cultivated portion of the chur was in the possession of the zemindar's men. As there has been no change in the possession up till now I think these lands should remain recorded in the names of the zemindar's tenants. . . . There are some waste or unoccupied lands in both portions. These should consequently be recorded under the respective owners of each portion separately."

Before the final hearing of the Rule Counsel for the Petitioners asked the leave of the Court to put in fresh evidence, viz., the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer referred to above. A certified copy of the order was filed before their Lordships who after considering it passed final orders on the Rule.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Naresh Chandra Sen-Gupta for the Petitioners.—Since the issue of the Rule the Assistant Settlement Officer has pronounced his decision in which he finds that all the culturable land in the chur is in the possession of the zemindar. I want to place a copy of the judgment before this Court. For revising the sentence this Court can consider fresh facts. See Rex v. Francis (1), Rex v. Ettridge (2), Rex v. Bradshaw (3). Also Rex v. George Bruce noticed in 18 C. W. N. 10 n. decided by the Lord Chief Justice sitting in the Court of Criminal appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioners were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Tangail for an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment each and bound down under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., for a period of two years to keep the peace. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge upheld the convictions and sentences. Against these convictions and sentences the Petitioners moved this Court and obtained this Rule on the District Magistrate to show cause why the sentences passed on the Petitioners should not be revised.

The occurrence in this case took place on a chur called Bahulis chur in the river Brahmaputra locally called Jumna. The Petitioners are the men of the zemindar who claims title to and possession over the land comprised in the chur. The party of the complainant stand on the side of the talukdars who also claim possession over the land. On account of the dispute between the parties an order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C, was issued by the Magistrate directing the zemindar's party as well as the talukdars' party not to go on the land. The injunction so issued was received by the zemindar's party with approval and they refrained from going on the land. The talukdars' party, however, were dissatisfied with the order, and the Petitioners' case is that in spite of the injunction they attempted to go on the land and take possession. On behalf of the zemindar an application was made to the Magistrate setting out the charge of disobedience against the talukdars' party and praying that the standing crops might be attached till the decision of the dispute between the parties. Accordingly an attachment order was made and a Sub-Inspector of Police deputed to effect the attachment. The Petitioners repeenting the party of the zemindar accompanied the Sub-Inspector

NOTES.

The Patna University Committee's scheme of legal education.

The report of the Patna University Committee is very interesting reading. We are, however, not concerned with the scheme of general education formulated by the Committee for the proposed University. But we are glad to be able to express our complete accord with the scheme for legal education recommended for the University. The Committee is perfectly right in saying "that the scientific study of law in itself affords a good intellectual training, sufficing, when properly pursued, to occupy the whole of a man's time and to give him the same degree of culture as other honour subjects." It is proposed under the scheme that after a student has passed the intermediate examination, he will be allowed to take up the law course for graduation at the University. This is the system which obtains at Oxford and Cambridge and we see no reason why the same should not be adopted here. Of course, we would have objected if the study of law had been limited in the manner suggested by the Sub-Committee, viz., that it should be open to those only who would pass the intermediate examination having taken either Sanskrit or Arabic as one of their subjects. We are at one with the Committee that no such restriction should be imposed. It is also reasonable that under-graduate students going up for the law degree of the University will be required to take up English as a compulsory additional subject and that they should be trained chiefly in the theory, history and principles of law rather than its technique. Although we admit that the course prescribed by the Calcutta University for the B. L. examination gives the students a thorough good grounding both in theory and principles of law as also in its practical application, still it cannot be ignored that at our alma mater comparatively little importance is attached to the study of the historical development of law as also of constitutional law. The Patna University Committee is to be congratulated for having recommended these subjects for the special study of the law students. We must also confess that there is a great deal of force in the objections urged by the Committee against the adoption of the Calcutta system of making law a subject-matter of post-graduate study. Should law be adopted as a subject for graduation in the proposed Patna University, the pleadership examination should be abolished. We are of opinion that the system recommended by the Patna University Committee should be adopted by all the Universities in India. We do not however approve of the suggestion that those who graduate in law should be divided into two classes, those showing proficiency being given the L. L. B., degree and those securing a mere pass being given the B. A. degree. It would be better if those who obtained honours in the subject were styled B. A. with honours and others as pass B. A.'s. The higher degree of L. L. B. might be reserved for a supplementary examination in the practice of law.

We have always been of opinion that the mere passing of examination in law should not furnish a passport to practise in the law Courts. We therefore welcome the suggestion that law graduates must serve out two years' apprenticeship with some practising lawyers of no lower grade than a Barrister or Vakeel or a graduate pleader authorized by the High Court to take apprentices. The certificate to practise should be given by the High Court only to such apprentices after having passed such examination in the practice of law as may be prescribed by the High Court in this behalf. It is after they have thus qualified for practice that they should be given the degree of L. L. B. by the University on payment of some fee to the University. Both the pass and the honours B. A.'s should be allowed to qualify themselves for practice in this manner. For it must be remembered that it is often the man with the stronger common sense, and not necessarily the better scholar, who makes the more successful lawyer. The training we suggest will put a wholesome restriction on the present practice of allowing every graduate in law to practise in our law Courts. Those who intend to practise law must take to it seriously and must be trained under lawyers of approved standing, merit and character. A judicious restriction of this kind would be wholesome alike for the legal profession and the public. We have long urged for this reform and we shall be glad to see the Patna University take the lead of the other Indian Universities in this respect.

DOES THE PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION ACT

RECOGNISE THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN

LEGAL AND EQUITABLE ESTATE.

The decision in Mohunt Jiblal v. Mohunt Jagomohun Gir [[(1898) 16 C. W. N. 798] raised a very important question. It is, whether a trustee under sec. 37 of the Probate and Administration Act must have an estate in order to bring that section into operation, and if so, whether such estate is "legal estate" as contemplated by English law?

In this case an application was made for grant of letters of administration to the estate of a math after the decease of its Mohunt. An objection was raised to the effect that the deceased Mohunt had only a life-estate which determined on his death, that he occupied the position of a trustee, and that sec. 37 of the Probate and Administration Act did not apply. It was an undisputed fact that the deceased Mohunt had no ownership. Their Lordships (Prinsep and Steven, JJ.) held, that sec. 37 applies only to property in which the deceased person had ownership, so as to constitute it a portion of his estate, although he held it in trust." Thus according to their Lordships' view, to justify the application of that section, there must be, first, ownership constituting an estate or as their Lordships say, "ownership so as to constitute it (the property) a portion of his (deceased's) estate;" and, secondly, the deceased person must have been a trustee clothed with such ownership. We can find no difference in meaning between the expressions "ownership constituting an estate" and "ownership so as to constitute it a portion of his estate."

But then what is ownership? In what sense has the term been used by their Lordships—whether in the sense of absolute ownership, or in that of limited ownership? That by the word "ownership" their Lordships intend to mean absolute ownership, seems to admit of no doubt. For it is difficult to see how one can leave at his death "property and credits" unless his ownership is such that it extends beyond his lifetime—that it is descendible or heritable. The ownership of a life tenant is a limited one, and it is, accordingly, confined to his lifetime only; but that of a tenant in fee or of a Bengal zemindar, is absolute and as such it extends beyond his lifetime, so that, at his death, he leaves an estate, or "property and credits" which make an estate (1). Sec. 77 of the Probate and Administration Act from which the words "property and credits" have been taken and with reference to which the word estate has been interpreted lends support to this view. It is thus clear that to bring a case within the operation of sec. 37, the trustee must not only be clothed with absolute ownership, but he must also hold an estate, for such ownership constitutes an estate. In other words, a trustee must have an estate. That is evidently the meaning of their Lordships' decision.

Now, if we are so far correct, the next question is, what is the nature of this estate? Does it not partake of the nature of a legal estate as distinguished from equitable estate, and is not such an estate capable of being the subject of testamentary gift? It appears that sec. 37 itself unmistakably points to some of its most prominent incidents and sufficiently indicates the nature of the trustee's estate. The words "and leaves no general representative" show that it is devisable and the trustee may appoint executor or executors as his general representatives, so that where they are willing and take out probate, the "property and credits" necessarily vest in them. This being so, we arrive at the conclusion that it is a separate and distinct estate. That the beneficiary has also an estate or interest in the same property is an undeniable fact. What the nature of that estate or interest is we need not enquire. For, whatever may be its nature or incident, there is no denying of the fact that we have got here two separate and distinct estates or interests in regard to the same property but residing in two different individuals. Thus we are driven to the conclusion that the double system of English jurisprudence on which is based the doctrine of legal and equitable estate, is being introduced in this country, however it may be modified in its nomenclature or application. Give the trustee an estate and we have two separate estates the one vested in the trustee and the other in the cestui que trust, or the beneficiary. We may not call the estates legal and equitable—that is not of much importance. But so long as there are two estates with respect to the same property residing in two different persons, it is impossible to avoid the system of double ownership of English law, and as a necessary consequence the distinction between a legal and an equitable estate.

It is to be further seen that sec. 37 corresponds to the following passage in Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice :—"If a person has died leaving personal property of which he was sole or surviving trustee, administration may be granted to that property * * * * (1)." Although that section may be held to agree substantially with this passage, there is much difference between them, at least, so far as the wording goes; and this is apparent from the fact that the words "sole or surviving trustee" which stand alone in the latter, are followed by the words "or in which he had no beneficial interest on his own account" in the former. These words are new and must have been added by the Indian Legislature to serve some useful purpose. But it is not easy to see what that purpose is. It seems, however, reasonable to suppose that they are intended not as merely explanatory of the word trustee but to stand as an alternative to it, and to denote a person other than a trustee technically so-called. In other words, they are intended to enlarge the meaning of trustee and not merely to explain or restrict it. It is a well-known fact that until lately, a mohunt or a shebait was regarded as a trustee and was held capable of executing testamentary documents. From this it may be safely inferred that when sec. 37 was enacted, such persons had a recognised status, and it was evidently the intention of the Legislature not to exclude them, for which purpose these words were inserted.

It is clear their Lordships' attention was not drawn to these words.

In the result it seems to follow, that the word trustee is used in sec. 37 of the Probate and Administration Act in its English technical sense. If the view laid down above is correct, how does it stand the test of judicial decisions? The Privy Council is clearly opposed to this view. In Tagore v. Tagore [9 B. L. R. 377], their Lordships said—"The anomalous law which has grown up in England of a legal estate which is paramount in one set of Courts and an equitable ownership which is paramount in Courts of Equity does not exist in and ought not to be introduced into Hindu Law." But sec. 37 of the Probate and Administration Act as interpreted by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court, seems to have introduced it. Where is the remedy? Perhaps there is no remedy unless the Legislature interferes.

The father of the Appellants had bid for certain immoveable property at an auction sale and had paid into Court the preliminary deposit required by law. In order to complete the transaction he executed a mortgagee deed hypothecating both the property he proposed to acquire at the auction sale and other family property in his hands.

Held—That the father of the Appellants had entered into an agreement by which he bound himself under penalty to deposit in Court a certain sum of money by a certain date. The Cedars Rapids Manufacturing and Power Company, Appellants,
v.
Sir Alexandre Lacoste and others, Respondents.

Principles upon which compensation for land should be awarded.

In this appeal in the course of their Lordships' judgment delivered by Lord Dunedin, the principles upon which compensation for land should be awarded, were laid down as follows :—

"The law of Canada as regards the principles upon which compensation for land taken is to be awarded is the same as the law of England, and it has been explained in numerous cases—nowhere with greater precision than in the case of Locus v. Chesterfield Gas and Water Board (L. R., 1909, 1 K. B., 16), where Lord Justices Vaughan Williams and Moulton dealt with the whole subject exhaustively and accurately.

"For the present purpose it may be sufficient to state two brief propositions. 1. The value to be paid for is the value to the owner as it existed at the date of the taking, not the value to the taker. 2. The value to the owner consists in all advantages which the land possesses, present or future, but it is the present value alone of such advantages that falls to be determined.

"Where, therefore, the element of value over and above the bare value of the ground itself (commonly spoken of as the agricultural value) consists in adaptability for a certain undertaking (though adaptability, as pointed out by Lord Justice Moulton in the case cited, is really rather an unfortunate expression) the value is not a proportional part of the assumed value of the whole undertaking, but is merely the price, enhanced above the bare value of the ground which possible intending undertakers would give. That price must be tested by the imaginary market which would have ruled had the land been exposed for sale before any undertakers had secured the powers, or acquired the other subjects which made the undertaking as a whole a realised possibility."

Civil Appellate Jurisdiction Before Jenkins, C. J., and Chatterjee, J Letters Patent Appeal No. 94 of 1912. NONI GOPAL BOSU, Appellant v. SURES CHUNDER GHOSH, Respondent. 18th March 1914.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 317—Auction-purchaser benamdar—Manager of minor purchaser—Fraud.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought for the recovery of possession of 25 bighas of land after declaration of Plaintiff's jamai right. The jama was the property of Plaintiff's father D by right of his auction-purchase in the name of K. D died in 1299, leaving Plaintiff, his minor son, his sole heir. Defendant No. 1 being the husband of the only child of D's brother, used to live in the family of his father-in-law, and being held in confidence and in affection was appointed by D as his chief officer. He continued in this capacity till after D's death and down to 1302 and the aforesaid jama meanwhile being eventually brought to sale again for its own arrears, purchased it in his own name with Plaintiff's money in 1894 and looked after the property as before on Plaintiff's account till 1312. Some 9 or 10 years later, i.e., in 1903 and 1914, Defendant No. 1 got collusive rent decrees against Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and from that time the tenant Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 withheld all payment of rents from Plaintiff. The Plaintiff accordingly prayed for a declaration of his jamai right in the disputed lands (by auction-purchase in the name of Defendant No. 1) and for recovery of possession of the same through this tenants, Defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The tenant Defendants did not contest the suit.

Defendant No. 1 admitted that the infant was the real purchaser, but maintained that he was able to deprive the infant of the property because of sec. 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Courts below decreed the suit. On appeal to the High Court the judgment was reversed by a single Judge.

Held, that as the conduct of Defendant No. 1, the manager, was found to be fraudulent, sec. 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not furnish any answer to the Plaintiff's claim.

of Police and when they were engaged in pointing out the plots on which the crops stood the party of the talukdars appeared. Between the two parties there was some sort of a fight resulting in some slight injury to one of the complainant's party and some injuries to two men on the side of the Petitioners. At the trial the question was considered as to whether the party of the talukdars were in possession or the party of the zemindar. The Magistrate and the Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the talukdars were in possession. For the purpose of our revising the sentences passed on the Petitioners the learned Counsel appearing on their behalf has placed before us a decision of the Settlement Court which was made after the decision of the appeal before the Sessions Judge. From the Settlement Officer's decision we gather that the zemindar was in possession of all culturable area of the chur. Regard being had to the finding of the Settlement Officer on the question of possession we are constrained to say that the Petitioners though they were not right in engaging in a fight with the talukdars yet had some justification on their side. The learned Judge has not come to any finding as to what had been done by the accused and to what extent they had been lawless. It is clear to our mind that the fight was not a premeditated one and were it not for the appearance of the talukdars' party at the time when the Sub-Inspector had gone to attach the crops there would have been no trouble at all. The learned Judge himself in his judgment remarks that "the actual fight was not very serious. A few men on both sides received slight hurt." Then the learned Judge goes on to say "the sentence is undoubtedly very severe." We think that the sentence in any case was too severe and particularly so in view of the decision of the Settlement Court whereby the possession of the land in dispute has been held in favour of the zemindar. We think that for this breach of the peace a small term of imprisonment with fine would have amply vindicated the law. We reduce the period of imprisonment in the case of each of these Petitioners from 18 months to three weeks' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 75 each. In default of payment of fine each Petitioner will suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of one month.

If the Petitioners have already suffered imprisonment for the period of three weeks, they will be discharged from their bail on payment of fines.

evidence by themselves of the fact. To substantiate the allegation there must be some evidence aliunde.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube for the Appellant submitted that the Subordinate Judge was right in finding that the Plaintiffs are not descendants of Kundan Lal's daughter. Further, the evidence established the fact that Musammat Rukmin died more than 12 years before the suit. Most of the witnesses who deposed that she was alive within 12 years derived their information from Het Ram, Plaintiff. He did not come forward to give evidence and his absence ought to discount the Plaintiffs' evidence. Musammat Lal Kunwar v. Chiranji Lal (1). The onus of proving that the suit in ejectment was within time lay upon the Plaintiffs and they had at any rate failed to prove that she died within 12 years. Further, the recitals in the sale-deed shewed that the sale was made for paying antecedent debts. The Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the sale was made by the lady for legal necessity.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. J. M. Parikh, for the Respondents, supported the findings of fact arrived at by the High Court. In any case with reference to the 8 biswas sold by Musammat Bhauna the onus of shewing that she did so for legal necessity rested on the Appellant. He had adduced no evidence in support of it except the recitals in the conveyance. The recitals in the sale-deed and the details of consideration therein given were no evidence of legal necessity. Reference was made to Mayne's Hindu Law, pp. 862 & 349; Maheshar Baksh Singh v. Ratan Singh (2), Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh (3).

Sir Erle Richards replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suits which have given rise to this consolidated appeal from three decrees of the High Court of Allahabad relate to a property called Mouzah Khilchipur lying in the District of Rae Bareilly in the United Provinces of India.

The mouzah is now in the possession of the Defendant-Appellant under a usufructuary mortgage executed in 1871 in favour of his ancestor Madhoram by two Hindu ladies, Rukmin and Nimma and one Dhal Chand. Other titles were created subsequently in favour of Madhoram or his son Darbari Lal to some of which reference will be made in the course of this judgment. But the Plaintiffs' claim to possession depends principally on their right to redeem the mortgage of 1871.

Mouzah Khilchipur belonged originally to one Kundan Lal; he died many years ago leaving two sons Mihin Lal and Sham Lal who, it is not disputed, were joint in food and estate. Mihin Lal died in 1853, and Sham Lal in 1859, leaving his widow Nimma and a nephew named Lila Dhar, Mihin Lal's son. On Sham Lal's death the whole property devolved on Lila Dhar. Lila Dhar died in 1861 when Rukmin, his widow, became the owner taking a widow's estate under Hindu Law. But although Rukmin as the widow of the last full owner was entitled to the entire property, it would appear, that Sham Lal's widow claimed, or was acknowledged, to possess an equal interest with Rukmin. In 1862 the two widows jointly sold a half or 10 biswas share of the village to Dhal Chand who is said to have been Rukmin's manager. In 1871, the three, Dhal Chand, Rukmin, and Nimma executed the usufructuary mortgage referred to above for a period of 12 years in respect of the entire mouzah represented as 20 biswas in favour of Madhoram, the conditions being that at the end of the term the debt would become satisfied and the mortgagors would recover the property without payment of the "principal mortgage money" or interest. Dhal Chand died, it is said, in 1873, and in 1874 his widow, Bhauna, sold the equity of redemption in respect of eight biswas out of the 10 biswas he had acquired from Rukmin and Nimma to the son of Madhoram, Durbari Lall, and his widow, Chando, one of the Defendants in the present suits. The equity of redemption in respect of the remaining two biswas was sold in execution of decree against Bhauna, and passed ultimately into the hands of the Appellant.

It is unnecessary for the determination of this Appeal to refer to the subsequent transactions by which Madhoram's son acquired the equity of redemption in respect of the 10 biswas that had remained in the hands of Rukmin and Nimma after the sale of the moiety to Dhal Chand.

The Brahman Plaintiffs claim to be the reversioners of both Lila Dhar and Dhal Chand. They allege that Bhauna, Dhal Chand's widow, died in 1905, Nimma in 1906, and Rukmin a few years ago, and that upon their respective deaths whatever rights they had purported to create in favour of Madhoram came to an end, and they are entitled to possession of the entire property. They have transferred a moiety of the mouzah with all the appurtenant rights to Inda Koer, who brings one suit in respect of the share purchased by her, whilst the Brahman Plaintiffs have sued separately for the other share claimed by them.

With regard to the 10 biswas Dhal Chand had purchased from Rukmin and Nimma, they allege that the sale of the equity of redemption in respect of eight biswas by Bhauna was without legal necessity and that the execution sale of the two biswas was in respect of a personal decree against her, and that, consequently, neither transaction is binding against them.

The contesting Defendants, the representatives of Madhoram, denied that the Brahman Plaintiffs were the reversioners of either Lila Dhar or Dhal Chand; that their claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations, as Rukmin, the widow of the last full owner, died more than 12 years before suit, and that even if the Brahman Plaintiffs were the reversioners of Lila Dhar or Dhal Chand, the transactions impugned by them were for legal necessity and consequently binding against them. The two suits were tried together, and although in consequence of the decree of the Subordinate Judge there were three separate Appeals to the High Court, they were heard together; and subsequently on an application for leave to Appeal to His Majesty in Council, all three Appeals were consolidated. This case has thus come before their Lordships as a single consolidated Appeal. Their Lordships propose, therefore, in order to avoid confusion, to deal with the two suits as one consolidated action from the outset. The Trial Judge was of opinion that the evidence produced to establish the relationship of the Brahman Plaintiffs to Lila Dhar was wholly untrustworthy. He, therefore, did not consider it necessary to enter upon an enquiry as to the time of Rukmin's death.

He held, however, that the Brahman Plaintiffs (save Lachman) were the reversioners of Dhal Chand, being his brother's sons; that the sale of the equity of redemption by Bhauna in respect of eight biswas was for legal necessity, but that there was no proof that the sale by auction of the two biswas in execution of the decree against her was "in satisfaction of a debt contracted by her for legal necessity." He accordingly made a decree in Inda Koer's suit for the redemption of the mortgage of 1871 in respect of two biswas, and dismissed the rest of her claim as well as the claim of the Brahman Plaintiffs in their suit.

From these decrees there were, as already observed, three Appeals to the High Court; one by the Defendants in respect of the two biswas, and the two others by the two sets of Plaintiffs, namely, Inda and the Brahmans respectively.

As regards the relationship of the Brahman Plaintiffs to Lila Dhar, the learned Judges of the High Court have come to a diametrically opposite conclusion to the Trial Judge. They hold that it is satisfactorily established they are the descendants of one Bhauna, alias Mulo, a daughter of Kundan Lal, and therefore related as Bandhus to Lila Dhar, Rukmin's husband. They have further held that the sale by Rukmin and Nimma in 1862 to Dhal Chand, the mortgage of 1871 by these three to Madhoram, and the sale of the equity of redemption by Bhauna, Dhal Chand's widow, in respect of eight biswas, were without legal necessity. They have also held that Rukmin was alive within 12 years from date of suit. They accordingly reversed the decree of the Trial Judge by which he had dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim in respect of eighteen biswas, and affirming his order in respect of the two biswas made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs in both suits.

In the present Appeal the Defendant Brij Lal, the grandson of Madhoram, challenges all the conclusions of the High Court. The case as presented at their Lordships' Bar is divisible into two parts, one relating to the reversionary right to Dhal Chand's estate, the other to Lila Dhar's. It is not disputed now that the Brahman Plaintiffs, including Lachman, are the sons of Dhal Chand's brothers, and are, therefore, entitled to his estate on the death in 1905 of his widow Bhauna. The only question for determination on this part of the case is whether the sale by Bhauna of the equity of redemption in respect of the eight biswas was for legal necessity. The onus of supporting a sale from a Hindu widow is undoubtedly on the purchaser. In the present case the Appellant has adduced no evidence to prove legal necessity as would bind the husband's estate. He has relied simply on the recitals in the Schedule attached to the sale-deed. Recitals in mortgages or deeds of sale with regard to the existence of necessity for the alienation have never been treated as evidence by themselves of the fact. And it has been repeatedly pointed out by this Board that to substantiate the allegation there must be some evidence aliunde.

In these circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that the conclusion of the High Court with regard to the sale by Bhauna of the equity of redemption in respect of the eight biswas is well-founded.

Respecting the other two biswas which belonged to Dhal Chand, there is a concurrent finding of fact by the two Courts that the decretal debt in execution of which it was sold was not for legal necessity. In the result, therefore, as regards the share purchased by Dhal Chand from Rukmin and Nimma in 1862, and which he jointly with them mortgaged in 1871 to Madhoram, the Brahman Plaintiffs as reversioners of Dhal Chand, are entitled to the same.

The position respecting the other 10 biswas seems to their Lordships quite different. The right of the Plaintiffs to that share rests on the allegations that they are the grandsons of one Bhauna alias Mulo, who was a daughter of Kundan Lal and the sister of Sham Lal and Mihin Lal. There is no documentary evidence in support of the statement that the wife of Hulas Rai, the grandfather of the Plaintiffs, was a daughter of Kundan Lal. It was natural to expect that in 1862, when Rukmin and Nimma sold a moiety of the property of Dhal Chand, the uncle of the Plaintiffs, on which occasion the relationship of Lila Dhar, Rukmin's husband, was stated with some particularity, a reference should be made to the vendee's connection with the family. Other documents of a similar nature are equally silent. As observed already, the Plaintiffs' allegation rests entirely on oral testimony. Having regard to the divergence of opinion between the two Courts in India with respect to the credibility of the Plaintiffs' witnesses, their Lordships have closely examined the evidence, and they cannot help considering it to be of a very dubious character. The witnesses had to prove only one link in the chain of relationship; the discrepancies, therefore, in their statements on material points, which have been somewhat lightly passed over by the High Court, seriously affect, in their Lordships' opinion, the value of their testimony. Their Lordships agree with the Trial Judge in considering the evidence as to Mulo being a sister of Sham Lal and Mihin Lal as worthless. In this view of the case, it is hardly necessary to determine whether Rukmin was alive or not within twelve years from date of suit. Admittedly she left her home many years ago. The Plaintiffs allege she went on a pilgrimage, and was last heard of eight or nine years before the action. The Defendant, on the other hand, says she had to leave her home a considerable time before owing to having been outcasted for unchastity. Most of the witnesses who speak to her being recently alive state they obtained their information from Het Ram, one of the Plaintiffs, who has not thought fit to enter the witness-box. On the other hand, there are some corroborative circumstances which incline their Lordships to believe that Rukmin left the village in consequence of her lapse, and died many years ago in a distant relative's home.

On the whole, it appears to their Lordships that the Plaintiffs have failed to establish their right to recover possession of the remaining 10 biswas, as reversioners to Rukmin's husband. The Decree of the High Court in the suit of Inda Koer omits, however, from consideration the covenant in the deed of mortgage which provides that at the time of redemption the mortgagors

"Shall be liable for the amount of arrears and the amount of takavi advances and the amount advanced on account of seed which may be due to the mortgagee by the tenants of the village according to the entries in the patwaris' papers."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the decrees of the Courts in India should be discharged, that the claim of the Brahman Plaintiffs in their suit should be dismissed, and in the suit of Inda Koer who has acquired the 10 biswas which alone the Brahman Plaintiffs had a right to sell, there should be a declaration that she is entitled to recover possession of the same from the Defendant-Appellant, with mesne profits as provided by law, less any sum that may be found due to the mortgagee Defendant upon the taking of proper accounts on the basis of the above-recited covenant within a time to be specified by the High Court.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Considering the result, they think the ends of justice will be served by making the parties bear their respective costs in the Appeals to the High Court and to this Board.

his title to the sixteen annas share of a certain jalkar known as Durga Daha Damush and for an injunction prohibiting the Defendants from catching fish in the Damush or jalkar. This jalkar formed part of certain putni mehals which originally belonged to two brothers, Kashinath Shaha and Harinath Shaha. In 1257, B. S., there was a partition between the two brothers of these putni mehals. The mehals which fell to the share of Harinath Shaha were let out in durputni to one Bama Sundari Debi and Parama Sundari Debi in 1263, B. S. This durputni was sold subsequently in 1285 for arrears and was purchased by Harinath Shaha himself who then granted a durputni lease to Plaintiff's father in 1286, B. S. The mehals which fell to the share of Kashinath Shaha were let out in durputni to Bama Sundari Debya alone in 1263, B. S., but this durputni under Kashinath passed subsequenly to one Nafar Mandal and then to his sons Srinath Mandal and others and finally to the Defendants.

The Plaintiff's case was that the whole of the disputed jalkar fell to the share of Harinath under the partition of 1257, B. S., and his father got the entire sixteen annas of the Damush in suit under the durputni lease granted to him by Harinath in 1286, B. S., and his father and after his death he had been all along in possession of this entire Damush up till 1312, B. S., when the Defendants for the first time interfered with their possession. The Plaintiff further alleged that Radhikanath Shaha, son of the aforesaid Kashinath Shaha, having raised an objection that an undivided eight annas share of the Damush appertained to his own taruf, the Plaintiff took a durputni lease of the 8 annas share of the Damush from the said Radhikanath in 1299, B. S.

The Defendants admitted the Plaintiff's title to eight annas share of the jalkar but disputed their title to the remaining eight annas inasmuch as under the partition of 1257 eight annas undivided share of the Damush fell to the share of each of the two brothers, Harinath and Kashinath, who continued to be in ijmali possession of the jalkar in equal shares and so also their lessees, Plaintiff's father and Defendants' predecessors.

Both the Courts below found that in the partition of 1292, B. S., the jalkar in suit was left ijmali, each of the brothers Harinath and Kashinath getting an undivided eight annas share. The Munsif dismissed the suit and held—"The durputni lease granted by Radhika in 1299, B. S., was a collusive document. . . . I find from the evidence on the Defendants' side, both oral and documentary, that the Defendants' predecessor Srinath Mandal and Bama Sundari Debya were in possession of Kashinath's eight annas share before 1299, B. S. Plaintiff's father took the lease in 1286, B. S., and died in 1294, B. S., and admittedly Plaintiff did never possess before Magh 1286, B. S. So that Plaintiff's father died without acquiring any title to the eight annas share of Kashinath Shaha even if it is admitted for the sake of argument that Plaintiff's father did possess the entire Damush from Magh, 1286, B. S. to 1294, B. S. From 1296, B. S., I find that the Defendants' predecessors are in possession of the Damush jointly with the Plaintiff."

The Subordinate Judge in appeal found that neither the durputni lease granted by Harinath to the Plaintiff's father nor that granted by Kashinath to the Defendants' predecessors covered the jalkar in question; that the durputni lease granted by Radhika to the Plaintiffs in 1299 was not invalid, although "when Radhika granted the lease he had no possession and no knowledge as to who were in actual possession; whether Radhika was aware of his title or not the Plaintiffs will get title if Radhika had it." The Subordinate Judge in allowing the appeal and decreeing the suit did not displace the finding of the Munsif as to the Defendants' possession previous to the granting of his lease by Radhika but held—"Even if that be so, still it will not bar the maliks' right as the Defendants held as tenants."

Against this decesion the Defendants preferred a Second Appeal to the High Court.

Mr. Caspersz and Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Sarat Chandra Khan for the Appellants.

Mr. U. P. Ray and Babu Nagendra Nath Bhuttacharya for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Plaintiff in this case sued for a declaration of his title to a certain jalkar, known as Durgadaha Damush, and for an injunction prohibiting the Defendants from catching fish in the Damush or jalkar. It is admitted that the Plaintiff is entitled to an eight annas share of the jalkar. The question is whether they or the Defendants are entitled to the other eight annas share. In the Court below a question was raised as to the construction of a durputni which was the foundation of the title of both parties. But it is now admitted that the durputni does not cover the jalkar in question. The result is that the Plaintiff is admittedly entitled to eight annas of the jalkar and he puts forward a lease of 1299, B. S., by one Radhikanath in respect of the other eight annas. On the findings of the Court below this lease is valid in respect of the eight annas in question unless the Defendants can set up any prior claim. They cannot set up any such claim on the durputni under which they claimed in the lower Courts. They have, however, proved, according to the findings of the first Court which are not displaced by those of the second, possession for 12 years previous to the granting of the lease in 1892. The lower Appellate Court has held that that possession will not avail them since they cannot set it up as being adverse to their landlord. In this, the lower Appellate Court is wrong; for, the effect of the principles of the decisions in the cases of Ishan Chandra v. Ram Ranjan (1), Ichharam Singh v. Nilmoney Bahida (2) and Gopal Krishna v. Lakhiram (3), as applied to this case, is that the Defendants by their possession have gained a title as against all the world, and this holds good as against the person who was in fact his landlord though he did not know, as it might have been against any one else. The Plaintiff seeks now to disturb this right to be tenants, for he is setting up a claim which is equivalent to a claim for khas possession. In this claim, the Defendants' possession is a good answer; and we hold that they have established their right to be treated as tenants.

Under these circumstances, the Appeal is allowed and the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside. The Appellant is entitled to his costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3338 OF 1910.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, 5, March.	MAGOO BRAHMA, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. BALKRISHNA DAS and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Indian Registration Act (III of 1877), sec. 50—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) —Registered document relating to land, effect of, as against unregistered document—Notice of title created by prior unregistered document, effect of, on holder of registered document—Burden of proof as to such notice—Possession of person other than vendor, if sufficient notice to put purchaser on enquiry—Effect of purchase with such notice.

Sec. 50 of the Indian Registration Act has no application when the person who claims title under the subsequent registered document has notice of the title created by the prior unregistered document.

The burden lies upon the person who alleges such knowledge or notice to aver it in his pleadings and to establish it.

If a person purchases and takes a conveyance of an estate which he knows to be in the occupation of a person other than the vendor he is bound by all the equities which the person in such possession may have in the land.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1910 against a decree of T. S. Macpherson, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 25th of July 1910, affirming a decree of Babu J. C. Dutt, Deputy Collector of Kendraparah, dated the 25th of January 1910.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for rent. The land in respect of which rent is claimed originally belonged to Sankar Sarangi. The Plaintiff alleges that he acquired title thereto by a registered conveyance executed in his favour by the son of Sankar Sarangi on the 6th June 1903. The Defendants were admittedly at the time tenants in occupation of the land and would primâ facie be liable to pay rent. But they contest the claim of the Plaintiff on the allegation that on the 4th July 1889 they obtained a usufructuary mortgage of this land by an unregistered instrument and since then have been in possession as usufructuary mortgagees. On these facts it has been argued on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant that he has a preferential title to the land under sec. 50 of the Indian Registration Act, which provides that registered documents relating to land take effect against unregistered documents whether such unregistered documents be of the same nature as the registered documents or not. In answer to this contention it has been argued on behalf of the Defendant that sec. 50 of the Indian Registration Act has no application where the person who claims title under the subsequent registered document has notice of the title created by the prior unregistered document. This proposition is well settled and is supported by the decision in Narain Chandra v. Dataram (1), Shivram v. Genu (2), Ram

(2) I. L. R. 6 Bom. 515 (1882).

MAGOO BRAHMA v. BALKRISHNA DAS.

Autar v. Dhanauri (3) and Krishnamma v. Suranna (4). As observed in Chinnappa v. Manikavasagam (5), the burden lies upon the person who alleges such knowledge or notice to aver it in his pleadings and to establish it. Consequently the question arises whether the Defendant has proved that when the Plaintiff took his conveyance he had notice of the usufructuary mortgage under which the Defendants claim.

On behalf of the Defendants it is contended that it was incumbent upon the Plaintiff at the time he took his conveyance, to inquire into the question of possession of the property and if he had made such enquiry from the Defendants he would have found that the latter were in possession not merely as tenants but as usufructuary mortgagees. This raises the question whether it was incumbent upon the Plaintiff to make any enquiry as to the possession of the property. Now it cannot be disputed, as laid down in the case of Allen v. Seckham (6), that when a person purchases property where a visible state of things exists which could not legally exist unless the property were subject to some burden, he is taken to have notice of the extent and nature of that burden. On this principle it has been ruled that if a person is in possession it is sufficient to put a purchaser on enquiry as to the nature and extent of his interest. The leading decisions in support of this proposition are the judgments of Sir Richard Couch in the cases of Mancharji v. Kongoseoo (7) and Hakeem Meah v. Bejoy Putnee (8): see also Barnhart v. Greenshields (9), Jogal Kishore v. Kartik (10), Bhika Bai v. Udit (11), Kondiba v. Nana (12), Radhamadhab v. Kalpataru (13). In the case before us, the Defendants and not the vendors of the Plaintiff were admittedly in occupation of the land at the time of the execution of the conveyance in his favour: it was consequently incumbent upon him to enquire under what title the Defendants claimed to be in occupation. This he did not do, and in justification of his conduct it has been urged that he was entitled to assume that the Defendants were in occupation as tenants, in other words, to assume that as they had entered into possession of the land as tenants, they had not subsequently acquired any other title. In our opinion, this position cannot possibly be supported: the contention in fact is opposed to the decision in Kondiba v. Nana (12), which was followed in Vyankappa v. Yamnasami (14); this latter case was accepted as good law in Ram Charan v. Jayram (15). It is indisputable that if a person purchases and takes a conveyance of an estate which he knows to be in the occupation of a person other than the vendor, he is bound by all the equities which the person in such occupation may have in the land, for possession is primâ facie seisin and the purchaser has therefore actual notice of a fact by which the property is affected and he is bound to ascertain the truth. (18)]. The extreme length to which this doctrine has been carried is illustrated by the decision of Eldon, L. C., in Daniels v. Davison (19), where it was ruled that the purchaser has constructive notice not merely of the title of the tenant in occupation, but also of a contract into which he had entered for the purchase of the estate. [Hanbury v. Litchfield (20), Jones v. Smith (21)]. The principles applicable to cases of this description were explained in Hunt v. Luck (22), where Vaughan Williams, L. J., states the law in these terms: "If a purchaser or mortgagee has notice that the vendor or mortgagor is not in possession of the property, he must make enquiries of the person in possession, of the tenant who is in possession, and find out from him what his rights are and if he does not choose to do that, then whatever title he acquires as purchaser or mortgagee, will be subject to the title or right of the tenant in possession." This doctrine was applied by this Court in the cases of Radhamadhab v. Kalpataru (13) and Baburam v. Madhab (23). Tested in the light of these principles, the claim of the Plaintiff is manifestly unfounded and has been rightly negatived: he must be deemed to have purchased the property with notice of, and consequently subject to, the usufructuary mortgage of the Defendants and is not entitled to claim rent for them as his tenants, till he has redeemed the usufructuary mortgage.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and this Appeal dismissed with costs.

RULE NO. 442 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 13, 14, May and 13, August. 1914, Judgment, 2, February.	CHANDRA NARAYAN SINGH, Plaintiff, Petitioner, v. ASHUTOSH DEY, Defendant, Opposite Party.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sec. 7, cl. v, sub-cls. (a), (b), (c), (d)—Ghatwalli tenure, suit to recover—Ghatwalli estate whether part of revenue-paying estate.

Held—That the Plaintiff's suit to recover the Ghatwalli estate of Rohini is governed by sub-cl. (d) of cl. v of sec. 7 of the Court Fees Act and, for purposes of Court-fee, the estate should be valued according to its market value.

The Ghatwalli estates are not revenue-paying estates within sub cls. (a) and (b) of cl. v of sec. 7 of the Court Fees Act, as appears inter alia from the fact that the amount payable to Government by the tenure holder is divided between the Government and the zemindar of Birbhum. They are parts of the estate of the zemindar.

This was a Rule granted on the 18th of April 1913 against an order of Mr. J. M. Christian, Subordinate Judge of Deoghur, dated the 25th of March 1913.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

One Chandra Narain Singh instituted a suit for declaration of his title to and for recovery of possession of five Ghatwali estates known as the Rohini Estate. He paid Court-fees on ten times the sum payable by the Ghatwal into the Collectorate, and valued the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction at a much larger sum, viz., Rs. 3,50,000. The Subordinate Judge directed the Plaintiff to pay Court-fees on fifteen times the net profits of the property. The Plaintiff moved the High Court and obtained a Rule.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to determine the principle on which Court-fees are to be levied on the plaint in the suit instituted by the Petitioner for recovery of possession of a Ghatwali Estate known as Rohini. The Plaintiff contends that the case falls within sec. 7, cl. v, sub-cl. (a), while the Defendant argues that the case is governed by sec. 7, cl. v, sub cl. (b), of the Court Fees Act, 1870. The Subordinate Judge has accepted the contention of the Defendant as well-founded, and has called upon the Plaintiff to pay Court-fees accordingly. As the question raised is of considerable importance and affects the Government ultimately, we have heard the learned Government pleader in addition to the learned Vakils for the parties themselves. To determine the provision within which the case before us falls, it is necessary to examine carefully the terms of the sub-clauses of cl. v of sec. 7 of the Court Fees Act.

Cl. v of sec. 7 provides that in suits for ...e possession of land the amount of fee payable on the plaint shall be computed according to the value of the subject-matter. Sub-cl. (a) lays down that where the subject-matter is land, which forms an entire estate or a definite share of an estate, paying annual revenue to Government or which forms part of such an estate and is recorded in the Collector's Register as separately assessed with such revenue, and such revenue is permanently settled, the value of the subject-matter shall be deemed to be ten times the revenue payable. Sub cl. (b) treats of a case similar in all respects with that comprised in sub-cl. (a), with this difference that the revenue payable in respect of the estate is not permanently settled. Sub-cl. (c) lays down that where the land pays no such revenue or has been partially exempted from such payment or if charged with any fixed payment in lieu of such revenue and net profits have arisen from the land during the year next before the date of presentation of the plaint, the value of the subject-matter shall be deemed to be fifteen times such net profit : but where no such net profits have arisen therefrom, the value of the subject-matter shall be the amount at which the Court shall estimate the land with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood. Sub-cl. (d) provides that where the land forms part of an estate paying revenue to Government but is not a definite share of such estate and is not separately assessed as mentioned in sub-cl. (a) the value of the subject-matter shall be deemed to be the market value of the land. To these sub-clauses is added an explanation that the word estate "means any land subject to the payment of revenue, for which the proprietor or farmer or raiyat shall have executed a separate engagement to Government, or which, in the absence of such engagement, shall have been separately assessed with revenue. Before we determine which of these sub-clauses governs the case before us, we may state that according to the Plaintiff the Ghatwali estate in suit pays a Government revenue of Rs. 3,148-12-8: and the Plaintiff paid on the plaint, a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 995 or ten times the revenue payable, while he fixed the market value of the subject-matter at Rs. 3,50,000 for purposes of jurisdiction. The history of the Ghatwali estate has been explained to us but need not be set out in detail here for our present purposes, and will be found narrated in the judgment of this Court in the case of Kastura Kumari v. Monohar Das (1). There is no controversy that the land does not form an entire estate nor a definite share of an estate paying annual revenue to Government within the meaning of sub-cl. (a). To enable us to dermine whether the land forms part of such an estate and is recorded in the Collector's Register as separately assessed with such revenue, we called upon the parties to produce before us a certified copy of the Register in so far as it is relevant to the matter under enquiry. We found that the property in suit which consist of five Ghatwali mehals is included in an aggregate of fifty-two Ghatwali mehals for which a sum of Rs 16,183 is annually payable as sadar jama. No apportionment of this sum has been made with reference to the several tenures. It further appears from the Register that a sum of Rs. 22,494 is collected by Government from the fifty-two Ghatwali mehals, out of which the Government retains a sum of Rs. 16,183 on account of sadar jama and pays the balance to the zemindar within whose estate the Ghatwali land was originally comprised. The collections from the five Ghatwali mehals in suit amount to Rs. 3148-12-8. It is consequently plain that this latter sum is in no sense revenue payable in respect of these five Ghatwali mehals: the whole of this sum is not payable as revenue to Government. As already explained, the larger sum of which this amount is a component element, is collected by Government and is retained in part as revenue and made over in part to the proprietor of the estate from which the Ghatwali tenures have been carved out. We must hold accordingly that even if the disputed land is deemed part of a revenue-paying estate, it is not recorded in the Collector's Register as separately assessed with revenue, within the meaning of sub-cl. (a). It has been ingeniously argued, however, on behalf of the Plaintiff, that he should not be called upon to pay a larger amount as Court-fee than what he would have had to pay if he had been the owner of all the fifty-two Ghatwali mehals and sued to recover possession thereof. This contention is manifestly fallacious for two reasons, namely, first, that the Plaintiff cannot avail himself of sub-cl. (a) unless he brings his case strictly within its terms, and for that purpose the determining factor is the land in suit and not a larger property in which it may be included: and, secondly, that even if the Plaintiff had sued for recovery of all the fifty-two Ghatwali mehals, the question would require careful examination, whether those mehals constitute an estate paying annual revenue to Government. The contention of the Plaintiff consequently fails.

As regards sub-cl. (b), it is plainly inapplicable for the reasons assigned for the exclusion of sub-cl. (a). As regards sub-cl. (c), it is clear that before the Defendant can successfully rely upon it he must establish that the land in suit pays no revenue permanently or temporarily settled thereon, or has been partially exempted from such payment or is charged with a fixed payment in lieu of such revenue. This the Defendant has failed to establish. On the other hand, the Subordinate Judge has found on the authority of the cases of Rajah Leelanund Singh v. Bengal Government (2), Monorunjan v. Rajah Leelanund (3), the same case on review—Leelanund v. Monorunjan (4), and on appeal to the Privy Council—Leelanund v. Monorunjan (5), Leelanund Singh v. Monorunjan (6), that the Ghatwali land forms part of the estate of the zemindar of Birbhum. This position indeed is supported by the fact that a definite amount is collected through the agency of the Government and is divided between the Government and the zemindar of Birbhum. Consequently the contention of the Defendant that sub-cl. (c) is applicable cannot be supported.

(1) [1864] W. R. 89.

CHANDRA NARAYAN SINGH v. ASHUTOSH DEY.

From what has been already stated, it is plain that sub-cl. (d) is applicable. The land in suit forms part of an estate paying revenue to Government, but does not constitute a definite share of such estate nor is it separately assessed with revenue. Consequently the value of the subject-matter must be deemed to be the market value of the land. In para. 15 of the plaint, the market value is stated to be Rs. 3,50,000 and the fee payable is Rs. 2,675. As the Plaintiff has paid Rs. 995 only, he must be called upon to pay the deficit, namely, Rs. 1,680 within a time to be fixed by the Court below.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute, the order of the Court below set aside and the case remitted to it, so that the direction given in this judgment may be carried out. As the contentions of both the parties have failed, there will be no order for costs.

Rule made absolute.

Sonthal Pergunahs Act (XXXVII of 1855), sec. 1, cl. Where a tenure in the Sonthal Pergunahs, having been put up for sale in execution of a mortgage decree passed in a suit over Rs. 1,000 in value, the landlord, under r. 29 of the Rules for the guidance of Civil Courts in the Sonthal Pergunahs, objected to the description of the property as mourasi mokurari alleging it to be a tenancy-at-will, and the matter being brought before the High Court in a Rule, order was passed by consent discharging the landlord from the record and directing the property to be sold subject to the objection of the landlord that the tenancy was not a mourasi mokurari, but the landlord nevertheless by a fresh application obtained an order from the Deputy Commissioner, without whose sanction the tenure could not (under r. 29 aforesaid) be sold, for further enquiry into his claim, and the Deputy Commissioner having called for a report from the Sub Divisional Officer who was also the Subordinate Judge, the latter officer as Subordinate Judge adjourned the sale proceeding pending enquiry by himself as Sub-Divisional Officer:

Held—That the order of the Subordinate Judge staying the sale was fit to be set aside by the High Court in the exercise of its general powers of superintendence.

As no case had been decided, sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply.

This was a Rule granted on the 17th of November 1913 against the proceedings of J. M. Christian, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Deoghur, and his order, dated the 29th of September 1913.

(1) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 183 (1890).

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. F. Sinha and Babus Bepin Behary Ghssh and Mohini Mohan Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. R. Das and Babu Surendra Nath Ghoshal for the Opposite Party.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Government.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioner in this case obtained a decree for sale on a mortgage and the property was advertised for sale on the 18th April 1912. The Opposite Party, Surajmal Marwari, claims to be the landlord of the judgment-debtor and he objected to the description of the property as being the mokurari mourasi property of the judgment-debtor, inasmuch as he contends that the judgment-debtor is a mere tenant-at-will. Various references were made to the landlords and the executive authorities and ultimately the Petitioner came up to this Court and obtained a Rule on the Opposite Party to show cause why the property should not be sold. The order ultimately passed on that Rule ran as follows:—

"After some discussion the decree-holder, Petitioner, has agreed that the objector zeminder shall be discharged from the record and that the property shall be put up for sale as described in the mortgage decree.

"Let the Opposite Party, Surajmal Marwari, be discharged from the record and the property sold as described in the mortgage decree.

"The Opposite Party is entitled to his costs throughout. We assess the hearing-fee of this Court at three gold mohurs.

"The property will of course be sold subject to the objection of the landlord, Surajmal Marwari, that it is not mourasi mokurari and that it is a tenancy-at-will."

The case then went back to the Subordinate Judge. Thereupon Surajmal applied to the executive authorities for a further enquiry. The Deputy Commissioner called for a report from the Sub-Divisional Officer who happens to be also the Subordinate Judge. That officer accordingly, as Subordinate Judge, has adjourned the sale proceedings while he makes an enquiry as Sub-Divisional Officer. The Petitioner accordingly came again to this Court and obtained this Rule on the Opposite Party to show cause why the mortgaged property should not be sold without further delay.

So far as the Opposite Party is concerned the Rule presents no difficulty. The former order was passed with his consent and he cannot be heard to say that the Subordinate Judge must again decide his objection before proceeding with the sale. His contention that he did not agree to the order and that it is not binding on him is childish.

But as I had grave doubts whether the matter was within our powers and as the Deputy Commissioner in submitting the records reported that application had been made to Government to be represented at the hearing of the Rule, notice was given to the Government and we have heard the Deputy Legal Remembrancer against the Rule.

On consideration, I do not think that we are debarred by anything in the local Acts and Regulations of the Sonthal Pergunahs for revising the Subordinate Judge's proceedings. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has relied on Rule 29 of the Rules for the guidance of Civil Courts in the Sonthal Pergunahs issued on the 18th August 1905, which reproduced in a modified form earlier rules on the subject. This Rule prescribes that the sale of tenant's rights shall be subject to consent of the Deputy Commissioner, the landlord also being given an opportunity to object. These rules are issued with reference to the provisions of sec. 1, cl. (2) of the Sonthal Pergunahs Act, 1855, and sec. 27 of the Sonthal Pergunahs Justice Regulation, 1893, for the guidance of the officers appointed under sec. 2 of the said Act to administer civil justice." Sec. 27 of the Regulation need not detain us as it merely enacts that directions issued under the Act must be consistent with the Regulation. Under the Act officers are made subject to the directions of the Lieutenant-Governor and the administration of civil justice among other things is vested in those officers. It may therefore seem to follow that officers administering civil justice are subject to the directions of the Lieutenant-Governor. Then however comes a proviso that all suits over Rs. 1,000 in value shall be tried and determined according to the general law in the same manner as if the Act had not been passed. Officers therefore trying such suits are independent of the Lieutenant-Governor's direction and have to try them as if the Act, from which alone the directions derive their validity, had not been passed. Can it therefore be said that this state of things lasts only up to decree and has no application to proceedings in execution, which are proceedings in suits. I think it clear that this was not the intention of the Legislature. Turning to the Sonthal Pergunahs Justice Regulation, 1893, I find the Civil Courts divided into (1) Courts established under the Courts Act and (2) Courts of officers appointed by the Lieutenant-

SARDHARI SAH OF DEOGHUR v. HUKUM CHAND SAH.

Governor under sec. 2 of the Act. This surely justifies the inference that the Legislature not only did not regard Subordinate Judges as subject to directions under the Act of 1855 but did not even regard them as officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor under that Act. That being so, I think it is impossible to hold that such Courts are subject to the directions of the Lieutenant-Governor under the Act of 1855. This seems to be in accordance with the decision in Dungaram v. Raj Kishore (1).

Of course we cannot interfere with an order of the Deputy Commissioner directing an enquiry or with an enquiry by the Sub-Divisional Officer. But the Subordinate Judge is subject to our jurisdiction and an order by him adjourning a sale may be examined by us.

Reference has also been made to sec. 27 of the Sonthal Pergunahs Settlement Regulation. It is contended that this section binds all Courts whether trying suits over Rs. 1,000 or not. I see no reason to doubt that this is so but the section has no application to the present case. Assuming that it applies to execution sales at all, an assumption with which the words "every other contract or agreement" seem somewhat inconsistent, the section only applies to transfers by raiyats and the learned pleader for the Opposite Party admits that the judgment-debtor is not a raiyat.

I do not think that an order of this nature comes within sec. 115 of the Code. No case has as yet been decided. But we have general power of superintendence over the subordinate Courts under the Charter and I think that this is a case in which that power might fitly be exercised. Personally I should be very loth to hold that we can alter wrong judicial orders under that power and incline to the views stated in Tej Ram v. Harsukh (2). But here though I do not for a moment suggest that the Subordinate Judge desires to be anything but entirely loyal to the orders of this Court, the practical effect of his action is that the orders of this Court passed last July with the consent of the party who is now endeavouring to obstruct their fulfilment, are still being disregarded while the gentleman who fills the office of Subordinate Judge, makes in another capacity an enquiry which, from the point of view of a Subordinate Judge, must be deemed wholly irrelevant and unnecessary That is an evil which this Court, in my opinion, is entitled to remedy in the exercise of its power of superintendence and we are entitled to direct that, whether the Sub-Divisional Officer holds an enquiry or not, the Subordinate Judge shall proceed with the sale at once.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute. The Petitioner is entitled to his costs from the Opposite Party. We fix the hearing-fee at 5 gold mohurs.

CHATTERJEE, J.—As this case arises out of a suit in which the matter in dispute exceeds one thousand rupees it is governed by the general laws and Regulations in force in the province and our general powers of superintendence under the Charter are in no way restricted by the Sonthal Pergunahs Regulations and Rules. I therefore agree in making this Rule absolute.

Rule made absolute.

DEPUTY LEGAL REMEMBRANCER OF BENGAL, Appellant,
v.
AMULYA DWAN, Accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 256, 258, 417—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 406, I. P. C.—Appeal by Local Government against acquittal—Powers and duties of the High Court—Order of acquittal passed after cross-examination of prosecution witnesses subsequent to framing of charge.

The accused was placed on his trial for having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of some bales of jute. The accused admitted his liability. The trying Magistrate framed a charge under sec. 406, I. P. C., and after cross examination of the witnesses for the prosecution acquitted the accused under sec. 258, Cr. P. C., holding that the case was one of civil dispute:

Held (on an appeal by the Local Government under sec. 417, Cr. P. C)—That in an appeal from an acquittal the High Court could not interfere unless the judgment of the Court below was wrong and perverse or without jurisdiction and based upon obvious errors in procedure, and there being nothing of the kind in the case the High Court should uphold the decision of the Magistrate even though wrong, because it would be based at the most on a doubtful weighing of facts and not on any irregularity or negligence or other matter going to the jurisdiction or the regularity of the trial.

That the order of acquittal having been passed subsequent to the framing of the charge and after the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution was not irregular or without jurisdiction.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 26th of September 1913 against an order of acquittal made on the 18th March 1913 by N. Sen, Esq. Deputy Magistrate of Serampur, under sec 258, Cr. P. C., the accused having been charged with an offence under sec. 406, I. P. C.

The accused was placed on his trial before the Deputy Magistrate of Serampur for having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of 235 bales of jute inasmuch as the jute was entrusted to him by one Naffar Chandra Ghosh for sale to Messrs. Jewan Mall of Cossipore but he sold it to one Hari Sing and misappropriated the sale-proceeds. After recording the evidence adduced by the prosecution the Magistrate framed a charge under sec. 406, I. P. C., against the accused. Under sec. 364, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate examined the accused who also filed a written statement. The accused admitted his liability to Naffar Chandra Ghosh for the price of the jute in question and said that he had been admitting his liability from the beginning though the money realised by the sale had been lost. After the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution subsequent to the charge the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec. 258, Cr. P. C., holding that no criminal case was made out and the matter was one for the Civil Court. The material portion of the Magistrate's judgment is set out below:

"Accused in his written statement supplementary to the examination, under sec. 364, Cr. P. C., admits liability to Naffar Chandra Ghosh for the price of jute in question and says that he has been doing so from the very beginning though the money realised by the sale has been lost. He has not exceeded the terms of contract he says.

"I have carefully gone through the recorded evidence and the cognate rulings in this case and leaving out the material issues involved and concentrating my attention upon the main fact of the case, I find that in view of the above admission of liability by accused in this Court, as well as previously made, as deposed to by complainant himself or some of his witnesses, a criminal case for misappropriation cannot stand against the accused.

"As for the specific direction to sell to Jewan Mall only and to no other firm there is no evidence whatever to corroborate the complainant. In view of all this the question whether Hari Singh really stole the sale-proceeds for accused is immaterial.

"Broadly speaking, the present case is a matter for the Civil Court, on account of the accused's admission of monetary liability for the jute to Naffar Ghosh and absence of satisfactory proof of direction about sale to Jewan Mall. I hold that no criminal case lies against accused. He is acquitted under 258, Cr. P. C."

We are clearly of opinion after perusing the whole of the evidence in this case that the learned Magistrate was justified in finding that it was extremely doubtful whether this was not a Civil case brought to put pressure on the acccused to recover the money. All the arguments that have been used on the evidence to show that there was dishonest conversion and that the story of loss is not true depended upon the evidence which was given before the learned Magisirate drew up the charge on the 3rd March, and had he then acquitted the accused merely upon his own statement we should have held that such acquittal was irregular and without jurisdiction and that there could only be an order of discharge, because if the evidence before the charge was not sufficient for conviction the learned Magistrate was bound to discharge him and not to acquit him. But we find that some very significant cross-examination of the principal witnesses took place after the charge, and that in this cross-examination it appears that certain statements made by the complainant are contradicted by Babu Bepin Behary Banerjee, that there was some kind of settlement proposed and the allegation that Jiban Mal did not reject the consignment of jute in question is rendered very doubtful by the admission of the complainant himself, that Jiban Mal's man was in Court and he was not prepared to examine him, and by the manjhi's clear statement that the day before or two days before Jiban Mal had actually declined to receive the jute from this firm on the ground that it was very inferior. This jute also appears from the manjhi's statement to have been inferior, for he says that the first firm to whom the accused went to offer it refused to take more than 12 bales, because it was full of water. Now this cross-examination of the complainant and the manjhi and of Babu Bepin Behary may in our opinion have very properly affected the Magistrate's mind so as to induce him to have very grave doubts whether this case was not a case of civil nature brought for the purpose of bringing pressure on the accused to pay the money.

In appeal from an acquittal we cannot interfere unless the judgment of the Court below is wrong and perverse, or without jurisdiction and based upon obvious errors in procedure. Nothing of the kind appears. The learned Magistrate has given his mind to the case, and even if he had been wrong his decision is one which we should be bound to uphold; because it would be based at the most on a doubtful weighing of facts and not on any irregularity or negligence, or other matter going to the jurisdiction or to the regularity of the trial.

For these reasons we must decline to interfere with the judgment of acquittal. The Appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal trespass depends on the intention of the offender and not upon the nature of the act, and when a man's intention is to save his family and property from imminent destruction it cannot be said that because he, with that object in view, commits civil trespass on his neighbour's land and cuts a portion of his neighbour's property (which he ordinarily would not be justified in doing) he is guilty of any criminal offence.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. MADAN MANDAL.

1913, from W. Garlick, Esq., Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury who had found the accused not guilty of the charges framed against them under secs. 148, $\frac{304}{149}$ and $\frac{326}{149}$, I. P. C., but guilty under sec. 326, I. P. C.

The facts will appear from the Additional Sessions Judge's Letter of Reference, the material portion of which is set out below :—

"The jury have unanimously found one accused Kalachand guilty under sec. 304, Part I, and I have sentenced him to transportation for life. The other 4 accused were charged under secs. 148, $\frac{304}{149}$ and $\frac{326}{149}$. The jurors have acquitted them of the charge of rioting, but have found them guilty under sec. 326 without the aid of sec. 149. There was no charge against them under that section. Nor was there any wound amounting to grievous hurt that could have been inflicted by any. There is no evidence that any one of the four inflicted any particular wound. The evidence is only that these persons armed with lathies joined one Kalachand (who used a spear in beating Adel and Pancho). Adel and Panchu had 15 spear wounds and died from their effects. But they had only 3 lathi wounds between them, and it is not known who inflicted these, nor do they amount to grievous hurt.

"The conviction of these four persons under sec. 326 is therefore not only illegal because there was no charge against them, but is also unsustainable on the facts. Therefore I refer the case in order that the conviction under sec. 326 may be set aside or altered.

"The question remains whether on the finding of the jury the accused ought to be convicted under sec. $\frac{304}{149}$. The facts, as found by the jury, are these. The houses of Adel and Panchu were flooded by excessive rains. In order to get rid of the water, they cut the ail connecting their field with that of the accused. There was a drain in that field, but it was made by Madan himself and there is no evidence that it was ever connected with the field of Adel and Panchu. That drain led into Madan's tank but Madan had blocked the outlet. Adel and Panchu trespassed into Madan's land and at first tried to divert the drain by cutting a trench across Madan's field, and then started to cut the embankment that prevented its discharge into Madan's tank. They had no right to do this and were evidently trespassers. They were also committing mischief on Madan's land. Madan and others came and attacked him. Four had lathies but Kalachand had a spear and Panchu was unarmed and Adel had only a spade. The two trespassers retreated facing their assailants. All the accused fell upon them and beat them. Kalachand inflicted ten spear wounds on Adel and five on Panchu. Adel also had 2 lathi wounds on the head, and Panchu had one. The two fell mortally wounded and accused carried them to Madan's house and tried to save their lives. Both the men died in Madan's yard that day from the effect of spear wounds.

"On these facts Kalachand was charged with murder and all five were charged under secs. 148, $\frac{304}{149}$ and $\frac{326}{149}$. The common object set out in the charge was to cause grievous hurt to Panchu and Adel.

"Eight witnesses profess to have seen Adel and Panchu being wounded in jute field and three others saw them being carried from the field to Madan's house. If this evidence is believed, there is no doubt as to the facts of the case, and the only question is what offence was committed in point of law. The jurors believe the evidence and I cannot venture to assert that the jury's verdict is wrong in point of fact.

"But the verdict of guilty under sec. 326 as against four accused is quite unsustainable. They were armed only with lathies and lathi wounds were not grievous. Moreover there were no charge at all against these four in respect of individual wounds inflicted by them, nor is there any evidence that any one inflicted any particular wounds. They can only be found guilty, if at all, by the help of sec. 149, I. P. C. But the jury finds they are not guilty of rioting. That finding I suppose is based on my direction that if the common object was only to eject trespassers from their field, it was not an unlawful assembly. And personally I think that view is correct and the four accused ought to be acquitted.

"But on the jury's finding these four accused ought to have been convicted under sec. $\frac{148}{149}$, I. P. C. The charge was that the common object was not to protect their rights but to cause grievous hurt. Jury has found the assembly consisted of five men and all five did in fact voluntarily cause grievous hurt and had no justification at all for doing so. There was therefore no ground at all for convicting them under sec. 326 and acquitting them under sec. $\frac{148}{149}$.

"At any rate the verdict as it stands is both illegal and was unwarranted by evidence. My own opinion is that the common object was to exercise their right of ejecting trespassers from their land, that the assembly was not an unlawful assembly and that the accused cannot be held responsible for the individual acts of Kalachand and should all be acquitted. But if jury's finding is accepted that none of the accused had any justification for beating Adel and Panchu, and that they all did in fact beat them, I think the finding of guilty under sec. 326 should be altered to one under sec. $\frac{148}{149}$."

This is a reference from the learned Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs and an application for admission of appeal by one Kala Chand Mandal in a case in which the jury have unanimously found the accused Kala Chand guilty of an offence under sec. 304, Part I, I. P. C., and the Judge has sentenced him to transportation for life, and in the case of the other four accused persons has referred the verdict of the jury convicting them under sec. 326, I. P. C., to us on the substantial ground that the verdict is illegal, inasmuch as the accused were charged under sec. 304 read with 149 and sec. 326 read with 149 and the jury unanimously acquitted them under sec. 148 and the Judge agrees with that unanimous finding of the jury.

In his letter of reference the Judge says that the finding of the jury was he supposed based on his direction that if the common object of the assembly was only to eject trespassers from their field it was not an unlawful assembly, and personally he thinks that that view is correct and that the four accused who did not use spears ought to be acquitted. But in the end of his letter of reference he says that if the jury's finding is accepted that none of the accused had any justification for beating Adel and Panchu and they all in fact beat them, he thinks that the finding of guilty under sec. 326 as against Madan, Debiruddi, Syam Chand and Sup Chand should be altered to one under sec. 326 read with sec. 149.

Now this reference of the learned Judge read with his charge to the jury has thrown the whole case into a hopeless complication. At the outset the learned Judge was not right in charging the jury that Adel and Panchu trespassed into Madan's land without explaining to the jury the distinction between civil trespass and criminal trespass. If as the learned Judge says Adel and Panchu went and cut the bund for the purpose of saving their own house from flood they could not be held guilty either of criminal trespass or mischief. The learned Judge must know that criminal trespass depends on the intention of the offender and not upon the nature of the act; and when the man's intention is to save his family and property from imminent destruction it cannot be said that because he commits civil trespass on his neighbour's land and cuts a portion of his neighbour's property, which he ordinarily would not be justified in doing, he is guilty of any criminal offence. We can have no doubt, as the learned Judge has himself said, that the verdict of the jury acquitting the accused of the charge of rioting was due to this misdirection. But the verdict of the jury was unanimous and the Judge has agreed with it. Therefore he can make no reference under sec. 307 with regard to the verdict on the charge of rioting, and as a matter of fact he has not done so. Our hands therefore are tied. Upon this reference we cannot consider the question of rioting again, and a fortiori we cannot consider any charge made by implication under sec. 149, so that we are left with this result, as the learned Judge appears to have seen himself, that the verdict of the jury under sec. 326 was practically a judgment of acquittal, inasmuch as there being no charge under that section independently, there can be no verdict given upon it. If authority is required for that proposition it is to be found in the case of Reazuddi v. King-Emperor (1). That decision followed the decision in the case of Panchu Das v. The Emperor (2), though the proposition laid down in the latter case is the necessary converse and corollary to the proposition laid down in the former. Had the Local Government appealed before us we could of course deal with the Judge's misdirection to the jury and with any consequent failure in justice which might appear to have occurred. But in a reference under sec. 307 we are bound to weigh the opinion of the Judge and the jury, and we have no power to interfere with the unanimous verdict of the jury with which the Judge agrees; and the only verdict with which the Judge disagrees is the verdict which on the face of it is illegal and void and must be set aside. We are unable to see our way to substitute anything for this offence of which the jury appear to have thought that the four accused might be guilty because we are precluded now from considering the question of rioting or the question of any separate act of causing hurt with which the accused were never charged.

The result is that upon the reference we must set aside the verdict as against Madan Mandal, Sup Chand Mandal, Dabiruddi Mandal and Syam Chand Mandal and direct their acquittal and release.

(1) 16 C. W. N. 1077 (1912).
(2) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 698 (1907).

THE KING-EMPEROR v. MADAN MANDAL.

As regards the case of Kala Chand (App. No. 993 of 1913) we can see no reason whatever for differing from the verdict of the jury or for modifying the sentence which has been passed upon him by the learned Sessions Judge. Leaving out of account the Judge's erroneous view of the law of trespass the case was one in which the accused might have been convicted of wilful murder as he inflicted no less than 15 spear wounds, ten upon Adel and five upon Panchu, and if the view of the learned Judge, that he went after Panchu to another place and deliberately speared him at a different time in a different place, be accepted it would only serve as an aggravation of his offence. We are not therefore inclined to admit his Appeal which will accordingly be summarily dismissed.

The Plaintiff who was the owner of a putni which was specially registered and so protected at a sale for arrears of revenue purchased the parent estate at a sale for arrears and sought to annul the tenures subordinate to the putni :

Held—That the Plaintiff was not entitled to annul the tenures subordinate to the putni.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 5th of September 1910 against a decree of F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 11th of June 1910, reversing a decree of Babu Aghore Nath Hazra, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 23rd of August 1909.

The Plaintiff was the holder of a putni protected by registration from annulment even on sale of the estate for default of revenue. The Defendants held under the Plaintiff a certain tenure, lakhiraj lands and building sites. The Plaintiff purchased the estate at an auction sale for arrears of revenue. In due course he notified by beat of drum that all incumbrances were annulled and he brought a suit for khas possession of the lands in the Defendants' possession. The Defendants' case was that the putni formerly held by the Plaintiff could not be annulled and was an absolute shield between the auction-purchaser and the Defendants' tenures and further that the Plaintiff having after the date of the confirmation of his auction-purchase received rent from the Defendants was estopped by waiver from annulling the Defendants' tenancy. The District Judge in appeal gave effect to both these contentions and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

erpretation of Hindu Wills.

No part of Hindu Law as it has developed in the nds of English Judges is more to their credit an the law relating to Hindu Wills. The authors the "Law relating to Hindu Wills" (Edition 01) were not probably very much beside the ark when they wrote: "It does not appear that British Government in seeking to protect the cial life of the Native races against unwelcome luences desired to arrest its natural development, to restrict growth and, as it were, to trify it. Nor does it appear that they desired prohibit the spontaneous assimilation of western eas or systems." (p. 4). The passage may wever be taken as fairly representing the titude of discriminating tolerance which the nglish Courts in this country and more particularly the Privy Council have taken up towards ns or ideas derived from foreign, including English, sources. But on the whole they have not favoured the introduction into the Hindu system of rules of English law of a purely technical character. In Bhoobun Mayee's case, 10 M. I. A. 279, the Privy Council went so far as to say "It would be to apply a very false and mischievous principle if it were held that the nature and extent of such power (power of adoption) can be governed by any analogy to the law of England. Our system is one of the most artificial character, founded in a great degree on Feudal rules, regulated by Acts of Parliament and adjusted by a long course of judicial determination to the wants of a state of society differing as far as possible from that which prevails in India." Similarly, whilst upholding a power of appointment conferred by a Hindu testator, the same Tribunal in Bai Motivahoo v. Bai Mamoobai, L. R. 24 I. A. 93: S. C. 1 C. W. N. 366, uttered this warning: "They think they ought also to say that in their opinion the English law of powers is not to be applied generally to Hindu Wills."

And yet where no specific provisions are to be found in Hindu law or usage, these same Courts have never hesitated to apply the broader principles of English law to cases arising amongst Hindus and Mahomedans. In Tagore v. Tagore, I. A. Supp. 47 at p. 64, the Privy Council said "whilst however rules of detail prevailing in England are to be laid aside, there are general principles affecting the transfer of property which must prevail wherever law exists." In Nandi Singh v. Sita Ram, 16 I. A. 44 at p. 47, the Privy Council adopted the principle that if an estate is limited to two jointly, the one capable of taking the other not, he who is capable of taking shall take," observing that, "this principle did not depend upon any peculiarity in English law" and was applicable to a deed of gift by a Hindu. The result of this attitude—a wholly reasonable one—is what might well have been anticipated—a steady enrichment of Hindu law by assimilation of English legal principles. It has effectually kept out the purely technical rules of English law which have not secured whole-hearted approval even in the land of their birth, though they have been unwaveringly followed in England by force of precedent. As to others, Judges bred in the atmosphere of English law can hardly be expected to cast away, as soon as they land on Indian soil, their natural predilection for that law, and thus the Hindu law of Wills at the present day is in its structure and character more English than Indian,—whatever the learned authors cited above might say to the contrary.

The view here outlined receives strong confirmation from the judgment of Lord Moulton in Venkata Narasinha v. Parthasarathy recently reported by us (18 C. W. N. 554). In this case a Hindu left a Will whereby he authorised his two widows to make an adoption in the following words: "You should adopt a boy . . . whenever it strikes that our samastanam (family) should continue." The power of adoption was exercised by the surviving of the two widows after the death of the other, and the Privy Council held that on the death of one of the widows the power ceased. Lord Moulton said that the power clearly was a joint power and the occasion on which it was to be exercised depended on the joint opinion of the two widows;" and his Lordships proceeded: "Now it is clearly the law that in such a case the death of one of the donees puts an end to the joint power. This is not by virtue of any peculiar doctrine of English law or of any series of English decisions, it flows from the very nature of a joint power."—conferred, as here, on personæ designatæ and not on the occupants for the time being of a specified office, such for instance as executors or trustees. To demonstrate this completely his Lordship proceeded to paraphrase the words of the power in terms which would "not involve any appeal to legal doctrines as to joint donees of a power." The words of the power, his Lordship said, related to choice and adoption by two widows acting jointly. "Hence the words refer only to the period of time when both widows were living. It (the Will) was silent as to the period after the death of one of them." The power in this case being contained in a Will, to hold that the surviving widow could exercise it would (his Lordship said) be to provide for a period which the testator left unprovided for and unnoticed in the Will. For ourselves, we are not sure that the power being given by Will made any real difference. If it had been given by a non-testamentary instrument, the very same considerations would have applied, and it would have been impossible to avoid reference to legal doctrines as to joint donees of a power in the manner his Lordship has sought to do in the present case.

Lord Moulton's judgment, however, is of importance not merely for supplying one more illustration of the method by which the Hindu law has enriched itself by cautious assimilation into its system of rules and principles of English origin but also because it contained what appears to us to be the completest statement to be found anywhere of the principles of interpretation of Hindu Wills. His Lordship in the course of his judgment observes:

In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain from the language of the testator what were his intentions, i. e., to construe the Will. It is true that in so doing they are entitled and bound to bear in mind other matters than merely the words used. They must consider the surrounding circumstances, the position of the testator, his family relationships, the probability that he would use words in a particular sense, and many other things which are often summed up in the somewhat picturesque figure—"The Court is entitled to put itself into the testator's armchair." Among such surrounding circumstances which the Court is bound to consider none would be more important than race and religious opinions, and the Court is bound to regard as presumably and in many cases certainly present to the mind of the testator influences and aims arising therefrom. But all this is solely as an aid to arriving at a right construction of the Will, and to ascertain the meaning of its language when used by that particular testator in that document. So soon as the construction is settled, the duty of the Court is to carry out the intentions as expressed, and none other. The Court is in no case justified in adding to testamentary dispositions. If they transgress any legal restrictions they must be disregarded. If they leave any eventuality unprovided for, the estate must, in case that eventuality arises, be dealt with according to the law which provides for succession of property in the absence of testamentary directions applying thereto. But the Court never adds to a Will anything which needs to be done by testamentary disposition. In all cases it must loyally carry out the Will as properly construed, and this duty is universal and is true alike of Will of every nationality and every religion or rank of life.

After having laid down this "universal" principle of interpretation of all Wills, his Lordship proceeded to indicate its bearing on certain rules which are supposed to be specially applicable to Hindu Wills.

The fundamental principle does not clash with the principle that the Court Will not necessarily apply English rules of construction to such a Will as we have here to deal with. These rules of construction amount in many cases to nothing more than saying that a special phrase which may be used in more than one sense shall primâ facie be deemed to be intended to bear one particular meaning, unless from the consideration of the context or the surrounding circumstances, the Court can same to the conclusion that it is there used in a different sense In other cases the rules are the expression of such tendencies in the Court as the desire to avoid an intestacy or the presumption in favour of immediate vesting of an estate. Such rules are purely an English product based on English necessities and English habits of thought, and there would be no justification in taking them as our guide in the case of Indian Wills. Nor does this fundamental principle clash in any way with what is sometimes called "giving a liberal interpretation" to native Wills. That native testators should be ignorant of the legal phrases proper to express their intentions, or of the legal steps necessary to carry them into effect, is one of the most important of the "surrounding circumstances" which the ourt must bear in mind, and it is justified in refusing to llow defects in expression in these matters to prevent the arrying out of the testator's true intentions. But those itentions must be ascertained by the proper construction of ie words he uses, and once ascertained, they must not be eparted from.

Applying these principles to the case, his Lordhip overruled the centention in support of the option that the testa'or being a Hindu must ave wished at all events to have a son to offer ıneral oblations to his spirit after his death, and ıat therefore the most reasonable interpretation f the power from the point of view of a Hindu as to hold that, failing both, one of the widows ıould adopt. This argument, it appears to us, one which cuts both ways. If a childless Hindu s supposed to be so completely dominated by the ligious motive, why should he not have adopted son in his life-time, and why should he leave it his widow or widows to fulfil or defeat his ıerished desire as suited her or their own discreon ? The language of the Will, in his Lordship's pinion did not indicate an overmastering desire the part of the testator of procuring a son for iritual purposes. It was held that the main otive of the power was the very secular one of rpetuating the family name by the adoption of near relation and it was left entirely in the disetion of his two widows whether this should be ne or not. Further that discretion they were rected to exercise jointly. The decision of the ivy Council accordingly was that the adoption the surviving widow was not made in exercise the power. In this view, their Lordships found unnecessary to decide the further question, ıether a power of adoption given to more than e wife jointly is a valid power under Hindu w. Had this question too been decided by their rdships, the decision would have taken rank t merely, as it will do, as a leading case on the erpretation of Hindu Wills but also as a leading e on the Hindu Law of adoption. But the dicial Committee is always very rightly reluctant record mere obiter dicta which often cause much barrassment to Courts when called upon to ide a case directly involving the issue.

-payment of Counsel's Fees.

The following editorial note in the columns of English Law Journal regarding counsel's fees l be found of interest by barristers and attorneys ctising in the High Courts in India.

Barrister's fee, by a tradition that is now deeply rooted practice, is an honorarium; it cannot be recovered by l process. All the more important is it, therefore, that honourable obligation which the great body of solicitors erve as to the due remuneration of counsel should be ed against those who do not. A case was brought the Divisional Court by the Law Society last week shows that the Court, no less than the Discipline Commitee, is ready to mete out proper treatment to solicitors who are unduly dilatory in the payment of counsel's fees. The solicitor, having instructed a barrister to appear in two cases at the same sessions, received from the Clerk of the Peace the fees due to him but claimed when some nine months afterwards formal application was made for the fees by the barrister, that he was entitled to retain them for an indefinite time. This was the position he adopted before the Discipline Committee, before whom, at the instance of the barrister, the question was eventually brought, but the Committee, regarding such an attitude as improper, held that he had been guilty of professional misconduct Before the Divisional Court this untenable position was abandoned. On the understanding that the fees were paid forthwith, the Court, induced, in the words of Mr. Justice Rowlatt, to take a 'lenient view,' merely ordered the solicitor to pay the costs of the inquiry before the Committee and before the Court. Here, it will be observed, the fees which the solicitor kept so long in his own hands were paid by a public authority, but that is not a material fact. A similar order was made by the Divisional Court some five years ago against a solicitor who, having received the amount of counsel's fees from an ordinary client, was found guilty of a desire to delay their payment. It would, however, be an ill thing for the interests of the profession as a whole if dishonourable neglect to pay counsel's fees were not regarded as professional misconduct, and it is gratifying to find that the Divisional Court, as indicated by the 'lenient view' it took in the present case, is prepared, if necessary, to adopt more severe measures against practitioners who are guilty of these irregularities.

After the Munsif returned his findings the case was again remanded and after the Munsif submitted his second finding a preliminary objection was taken to the competency of the appeal on the ground of the defect in the vakalatnama.

Held—That the appeal was not properly filed and the fact that the objection was not taken till a very later stage in the case would not validate the presentation of the appeal.

Special leave—Criminal case.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal from a conviction and sentence of three years for the offence of perjury. The Petitioner was a barrister at-law of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple and an Advocate of the Chief Court of Lower Burma. He was convicted on 4th August 1911 of perjury by the Magistrate and the order was confirmed by the Sessions Judge and by the Chief Court which however reduced the sentence. By reason of the conviction his name was struck off the Roll of Advocates of the Chief Court, and the Benchers of the Middle Temple also took action against him. He had served his sentence.

Mr. F. E. Smith, K. C., with him Mr. McCarthy, submitted on his behalf that the conviction was based on a great deal of hearsay and irrelevant evidence, which ought not to have been admitted at the trial, and that the remaining evidence was not enough on which a jury could reasonably find him guilty. During the argument reference was made to Dillet's case, Pillai's case and Clifford's case.

Their Lordships rejected the petition.

Special leave—Appealable value—Limitation—Fraud.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal against a judgment and decree dated the 19th September 1912, which reversed the appellate judgment of the District Judge of Broach. The judgment of the High Court is reported in 15 Bombay Law Reporter p. 921. The suit was filed on the 21st June 1909 for an account of the assets of a testator who died in 1885. The Court of First Instance held that it was barred by limitation. The Plaintiff's contention was that the suit was within time, it having been filed within 3 years from the date of their discovering the fraud that had been practised upon them and their mother. The District Judge on appeal allowed the Plaintiff's claim. The High Court held that the facts found by the District Judge did not warrant the application of Article 95 of the limitation Act 1877, and that the suit was therefore barred. The High Court further refused the necessary certificate to the Plaintiffs to enable them to appeal to His Majesty in Council on the ground that the subject matter of the suit in the Court of First Instance, and of the Appeal was Rs. 10,000.

Mr. G. R. Lowndes for the Petitioners submitted that the subject matter of the suit was in fact of the value of upwards of Rs. 10,000, and that the High Court failed to appreciate the findings relating to fraud come to by the first two Courts, and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Their Lordships rejected the petition with costs without hearing Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. K. Brown who appeared for the Respondents.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No 1965 OF 1913. BHUTI SAHA Petitioner v. KING EMPEROR, Opposite Party, The 23rd January 1913.

Sitting of Court at late hour of night.

This was a Rule against the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Thakurgaon dated 6th day of November 1913 directing the Petitioner under sec. 110 Cr. P. C. to execute a bond of Rs. 500 with two sureties for the same amount each to be of good bahaviour for 1 year or, in default, to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the District Magistrate of Dinajpore on 8th December 1913.

Their Lordships delivered the following judgment in this case

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Dinajpur to show cause why there should not be a further cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution on behalf of Bhati Saha before the final order is passed on the ground that the proceedings took place at an hour of the night which is not recognized as Court hours and why any defence witnesses who could be shown to have been present should not be heard.

On reading the explanation of the Magistrate and hearing the learned Counsel for the Petitioner we do not think the case made in the petition is established, and we wish to emphasize that it is for those who seek our interference in revision to make out a clear case. The position is very much the reverse to that of an appeal.

The petition of the 6th of November does not show that there was any objection to the lateness of the hour, or that the Petitioner was unrepresented. We see that there was cross-examination of every witness who named Bhuti Shaha, on his behalf. Mukhtearnamas are on the record. There is nothing to show that the gentleman who cross-examined for Bhuti Shaha were not authorized to do so. There is nothing to show that any witnesses present for Bhuti Shaha were not examined, and the terms of the Rule show that unless this is established the second point would fail. On the contrary the Magistrate tells us that every witness tendered was examined, and we see that two defence witnesses did actually speak for Bhuti Shaha. None of the other seven accused have ever made any complaint of the trial, and although we do not in any way uphold the practice of sitting after dark unless lights are provided for the bar, in this case there appears to have been an acquiescence in the practice which has unfortunately become too frequent in the Sub-Division owing to the large amount of work which a single officer has to get through, and as there has evidently been an attempt to drive the Magistrate into a corner by misuse of his own excessive kindness in granting adjournments and the appellate Court finds that attempts were made to tamper with the witnesses during the longest adjournment, we must decline to interfere.

The age of the Petitioner which is actually 62 though he is stated to be an old man of 70 does not appear to us to be relevant in this connection.

It not being established that any witnesses who were present were not examined and the lateness of the hour having been satisfactorily explained we must discharge this Rule.

The Petitioner will now be liable to furnish security which he has been called upon to furnish or in default be imprisoned as ordered.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before IMAM AND CHAPMAN, JJ, Rev. No. 896 OF 1913. SAYED ABDULLAH ARAB, Petitioner, v. LALIT MOHAN MAZUMDAR, Opposite party. 29th August 1913

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 439—Enhancement of sentence on the application of complainant.

Sentence of a fine of Rs. 25, in default a fortnight's rigorous imprisonment was passed on the Opposite party, on his conviction of an offence under sec. 323 I. P. C. by Babu Hari Charan Das, Deputy Magistrate of Maldah.

The Petitioner was a passenger in a 3rd class railway carriage from Katihar to Calcutta. When the train reached Harishchandrapur station the accused who was the assistant station-master tried forcibly to make the Petitioner get down from the carriage on the ground that the carriage had been reserved and in so doing caused hurt to the Petitioner. On the complaint of the Petitioner the accused was placed on his trial and convicted under sec. 323, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25, in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a fortnight. The accused was also directed to pay Rs. 13-4 as costs to the complainant and out of the fine the sum of Rs. 20 was ordered to be paid to complainant as compensation. The Magistrate found that the Petitioner did suffer from bodily pain by the act of the accused. The Petitioner moved the High Court for enhancement of the sentence passed on the accused and a Rule was issued by Imam and Chapman, JJ., to show cause why the sentence passed upon the Opposite Party should not be enhanced on the ground that the sentence passed under sec. 323 I. P. C., was too light having regard to the gravity of the offence and wanton nature of the assault. At the hearing of the Rule the Vakil for the Opposite Party took the objection that the Petitioner had no locus standi to press for enhancement of sentence and that the Government or any competent officer on its behalf should have been moved in the matter. It was contended for the Petitioner that he had brough the matter to the notice of the Court which had ample power to interfere if it was satisfied that justice had not been done in the case.

Their Lordships overruled the objection and on a consideration of the whole case made the Rule absolute and passed the following order.

We think that the sentence passed on the Opposite Party, Lolit Mohon Mazumdar, in this case has been inadequate. But we understand that he has lost his appointment. Regard being had to that fact we refrain from enhancing the sentence of fine to one of imprisonment. But we are of opinion that the fine in this case should be Rs. 100 (Rupees one hundred) out of which, if realised, a sum of Rs 50 (Rupees fifty) should be given to the petitioner as compensation and we order accordingly.

We are informed that out of the fine of Rs. 25 originally inflicted, a sum of Rs. 20 was allowed as compensation. By this order we enhance the the fine from Rs. 25 to Rs. 100 and raise the amount of compensation from Rs. 20 to Rs. 50. In the event of a failure to pay the fine, Lolit Mohun Mazumdar will undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month.

The order of the Magistrate regarding costs remains untouched.

The rule is made absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD AND SHARFUDDIN, JJ. REV. No. 197 OF 1914. MURALIDHAR LAHA Petitioner v JOGESH CHANDRA MITRA Opposite Party. The 26th February 1914.

Excise Act (1 E B. and A. of 1910) sec. 53 (a)—Illicit sale of exciseable article—Ice cream mixed with bhang—Duty of prosecution to prove exciseable nature of article sold—Necessity for expert evidence.

This was a Rule against an order of Babu Hari Charan Das, Deputy Magistrate of Maldah, dated the 25th September 1913, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 53 (a) of the Excise Act I of 1910 (E. B. and A.) and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 20.

Petitioner appeared in person when he obtained the Rule. No one was present at the time of the hearing of the Rule.

The Magistrate's Judgment was as follows :—

"The complainant who is the Excise clerk deposed that the accused sold him three pice worth of preparation of sidhi and ice-cream in the Excise Office yesterday at about 5 P. M. Sasi Bhusan Jha, Income tax clerk, has supported the statement of the complainant regarding sale of the preparation for which the accused was paid three pice.

"I find that the sale of the preparation of bhang and ice-cream has been satisfactorily proved and I find the accused guilty under sec. 53 (a) of the Excise Act of 1910 (E. B and A.)"

Their Lordships delivered the following judgment :—

This Rule must be made absolute on the ground on which it was issued There appears to be no evidence whatever that sidhi or bhang was mixed with the ice cream We would point out to the learned Deputy Magistrate who tried the case that statement of a clerk in the Excise Office that he bought three pice worth of preparation of sidhi ice-cream is not evidence establishing that the pound contains sidhi and we should also point that it is not for the defence to show that there no bhang in the ice cream. It is for the cution to establish that fact affirmatively. It is perfectly clear that in cases of this kind expert evidence must be examined to show the presence of any deleterious or exciseable article.

The conviction and sentence are set aside and the fine if paid must be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and CHATTERJEE, J. LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 95 OF 1913. BADIAHANNESSA BIBI, Defendant No. 2, Appellant v. AMBICA CHARAN GHOSE, Plaintiff, Respondent. 27th March 1914.

Purdanashin lady—Deed, execution of—Mahomedan family—Burden of proof—Undue influence—Third party—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 16.

The suit was brought by a mortgagee against a man and his wife, a Mahomedan purdanashin lady, on a mortgage bond. The transaction was one from which the wife derived no direct benefit for herself, as she was giving a mortgage by way of security for her husband.

At the time when the document was executed the lady was living with her husband, and it was found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court that she evidently acted under the influence of her husband in consenting to mortgaging her house for her husband's debt.

The Plaintiff was a mukhtear and he was present on the only occasion when the contents of the document were read. The husband whose undue influence procured the execution of the document by his wife, was present when the reading of the document and explanation took place. The mortgagee knew that.

Held, that the burden of proving that the deeds taken from purdah women have been fairly taken, that the party executing them has been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about, rests on him who claims against the purdanashin lady.

Girish Chunder v. Bhuggobutty (13 Moo. I. A. 419) referred to.

An undue influence which may affect a purdanashin lady's understanding of a document may proceed from a third party.

Bank of Montreal v. Stuart, (1911) A. C. 120, referred to.

Held—That the findings in this case fell short of establishing that the mortgage was fairly taken or that the lady executing it was a free agent duly informed of what she was about, and it had not been shown that any independent person free from any taint of the relationship, or of the consideration of interest which would affect the act had been consulted that it, was not put before the lady what were the nature and consequences of the act, and the advice, if advice was given, was not removed entirely or at all from the suspected atmosphere, nor had the lady an opportunity of learning from the clear language of an independent mind, precisely what she was doing.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 11 OF 1913. SACHINDRA KISHORE DEY AND OTHERS, Defendants, Appellants v. RAJANI KANTA CHAKRAVARTY, Plaintiff, Respondent. 2nd April 1914.

Limitation Act, Art. 141—Property of Hindu inherited by two daughters—Dispossession by stranger—Death of one daughter—Other daughter if succeeds by inheritance or survivorship—Suit for recovery—Limitation.

This was an appeal by the Defendants. It arose out of a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of title. The material facts are as follows: One Kirti Narain died in 1865, leaving behind him two married daughters named Harasundari and Kasiswari, who were his legal heirs and a widowed daughter-in-law, named Umatara. Umatara after having been in possession of the estate left by Kirtinarain for over 12 years to the exclusion of his two daughters, sold away the same by a registered kabala to the Plaintiff's father in 1886. The Plaintiff, who had succeeded to the property after his father's death, was dispossed in 1909, by Kasiswari and her two sons, (who were the Defendants in this suit) Harasundari having died in 1899, without having either taken possession of, or, effecting a partition of, the inheritance. The Court of first instance decreed the suit to the extent of a moiety share of the lands. The lower Appellate Court decreed the whole suit and that decree was affirmed by Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee on second appeal.

It was contended for the Appellant that so far as the moiety share of Harasundari was concerned, it passed, after her death in 1899 to Kasiswari, who was entitled to the benefit of Art. 141 of the Limitation Act, as the next reversioner and that the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover the same. For the Respondent it was submitted, on the authority of the ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Amirtalall v. Rajanikant, L. R. 2 I. A. 113, that the two daughters succeeded to the estate of their father as joint-tenants, and that Kasiswari took by survivorship the share of Harasundari on her death, and that she, not being a reversioner, could not have the benefit of Art. 141 of the Limitation Act.

Held, the two daughters succeeded to the estate of their father as joint-tenants and not as tenants in common, and Kasiswari having taken by survivorship the share of her sister on her death, could not have the benefit of Art. 141 of the Limitation Act. Amirtalall v. Rajani Kant, L. CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE and D. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 37 OF 1912. THAKUR NATH, Defendant, Appellant v. GIRIJA NAND JHA AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 8th April 1914.

Ejectment—Notice to quit—Licensee, if entitled to notice.

Babu Mahendra Nath Ray who appeared for the Appellant in opening stated that the Appellant Defendant who was a Sadhu, had been on the land for several years, and had improved it.

When a criminal proceeding was instituted against him by the landlord, a chitta was given to him confirming his possession by a 4 as. co-sharer landlord. The chitta, though not registered, ought to have been admitted in evidence. He was a licensee under the 4 as. co-sharer landlord and no trespasser hence notice to quit should have been given to him. Referred to Foa's "Landlord and Tenant," 4th Ed. pp. 9 and 603. Unless the license is determined by reasonable notice or otherwise, he cnn not be ejected. See I. L. R. 16 Mad. 97.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Respondents contended that mere possession did not give one any right to notice to quit. Brown and Shepherd, Transfer of Property Act, p. 353. Here all the landlords have joined to eject him as tres asser. Even if the Defendant were supposed to be a licensee, he was not entitled to notice Kuch v. Hall, Smith's Leading Cases, p. 494.

Held—That a licensee was not entitled to notice to quit in an action in ejectment.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER AND RICHARDSON JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER NO. 125 OF 1913. JUGAL KISHORE MARWARI AND ANOTHER, Decree-holders, Appellants v. CHINTAMONEY ROY AND ANOTHER. Judgment-debtors, Respondents. 15th April 1914.

Limitation—Step in aid of execution.

This appeal arose out of an application for execution of a decree which the decree-holders obtained on 14th April 1903 against the judgment debtors in the Munsif's Court of Gobindapur, District Manbhum. The first application for execution was filed on 23rd July 1903 and it was dismissed for default on 5th September, 1903. The second application for execution was filed on 9th July 1906. Notice for service of process on the judgment-debtors was issued on 21st July 1906 and service of notice was actually made on 27th July 1906 and one of the decree-holders actually went with the peon to serve the notice and identify the judgment-debtors on 27th July 1906. The case was dismissed on 4th August 1906, as no affidavit of service was filed, and the order passed on that date was "service of notice not proved. Case dismissed infructuous." The third application for execution was filed on 27th July 1909. The office submitted a note that the application was barred and on 28th July 1909 the decree-holders were ordered to shew within a fortnight why the application should not be treated as having been time-barred. On 9th August 1909 the Court passed the following order "having regard to rulings reported in 22 W. R. 484 and 23 W. R. 195, I order the petition to be registered." On 4th September the following order was passed "service of notice not proved. No steps taken. Case dismissed, infructuous." The fourth application for execution was filed on 24th April 1911 in the Munsif's Court at Amta within District Hughli after having been transferred from the Munsif's Court at Govindpur where the three previous applications for execution were made. The judgment-debtors pleaded that the present application for execution is not maintainable as the third application was time-barred, having been filed more than three years after 21st July 1906, the date of issue of notice to the peon in the course of the second application for execution. The first Court held that the present application is not time-barred as the order of the executing Court on 9th August 1909 holding that the said application for execution was not time barred is a judicial order and in face of the said order he cannot go into the question of limitation relating to the application of 1909. On appeals the lower Appellate Court held that the application was barred by limitation. The decree-holders thereupon preferred this second appeal.

On behalf of the Appellants it was contended that on the authority of Mungul Prosad Dichit v. Girja Kant Lahiri, I. L. R. 8 Cal. 51 (P. C.), the case is not time-barred. The order passed on 9th August 1909, was a judicial order and so long as it was not set aside, the judgment-debtors cannot raise the plea of limitation. It was also contended that 27th July 1906 should be considered as the starting point for limitation as on that day the decree-holders by accompanying the peon for service of process on the judgment-debtors took some step in aid of execution of the decree and in that case the third application for execution was within time.

Held—That the order passed on 9th August 1909 is not binding on the judgment-debtors as the said order was not passed after notice to the judgment-debtors and that they are entitled to raise the plea of limitation in the present case. That 27th July 1909 the date on which the decree-holders accompanied the peon to serve the process and identify the judgment-debtors was not the starting point for the period of limitation as such act does not constitute a step in aid of execution.

SATCOWRI CHATTERJEE v. PRIYANATH BASU.

tenures subordinate to the putni. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit and hence this Appeal.

In my opinion the lower Appellate Court is right. Several cases have been cited to show that the putni merged in the zemindari at the sale. The Plaintiff himself did not take this view as he afterwards sold an interest in the putni. And the point of law is by no means free from doubt. But whether the doctrine of merger applies to such transactions or not, no authority whatever has been shown us for holding that it can prejudice the rights of innocent strangers. If any one else had purchased the zemindari the present Defendants would have been safe. If the Plaintiff had surrendered the putni they would have been safe. It seems unreasonable to hold that the only contingency that destroys their rights is the purchase of the zemindari by their immediate landlord by whose predecessors-in interest their tenures were created.

If this view is correct it is unnecessary to deal with the other points raised in the Appeal. The Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 2, February.

BIJOY GOPAL MUKERJI and ors., Appellants,
v.
GIRINDRA NATH MUKERJI and others, Respondents.

*Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Consent of reversioners, evidence of legal necessity—*Ijara for 60 years, executed to save property from destruction owing to litigation—Expectant reversioners taking the benefit of the lease, conduct showing sanction to alienation.

S, a Hindu widow, who came into possession of her husband's estate on his death in 1832 as his sole heiress, was dispossessed by one of her husband's relations B, against whom and his brothers one of whom was A, she brought a suit for recovery of possession which was finally decided in her favour by the Privy Council in 1858. Being still unable to get possession, and as meanwhile adverse rights were (under the Limitation Act then in force) accruing in favour of persons in actual possession who refused to pay rent under the pretext that the title had not been settled, S in 1863 entered into an arrangement with the expectant reversioners, under which inter alia a 60 years' ijara was granted to two of them one being A. The term was fixed at 60 years to facilitate practical settlement of the property so as to obtain its full value, though S being then 42 years old, it was evident to all concerned that the ijara would extend beyond her lifetime. A died in 1882 and S in 1893, whereupon A's sons who from 1882 to 1893 as A's heirs took the benefit of the arrangement sued to set aside the ijara :

Held, affirming the High Court, that the arrangement of which the ijara formed part was dictated by the necessities of the case, and the choice of the term of 60 years as the term of the ijara was made for the benefit of the estate and did not injure any one.

That the conduct of the Plaintiffs themselves in taking for 11 years the benefit of the ijara showed that they believed that the arrangement had been made in good faith and under such circumstances of necessity as would give it validity according to Hindu Law.

BIJOY GOPAL MUKERJI v. GIRINDRA NATH MUKERJI.

That the Privy Council attached great weight to the sanction by expectant reversioners of an alienation of property by a Hindu woman as affording evidence of legal necessity, and the conduct of the Plaintiffs could be relied on as such evidence.

This Appeal raised the question whether an ijara executed by a Hindu widow for a term of 60 years was binding on the reversioners after her death. The facts sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment and the judgment of the High Court (Caspersz and Coxe, JJ.), dated the 4th June 1908, which was as follows:—

"The points arising for determination are: first—Whether Sayamoni Debi executed the ijara, dated the 7th September 1863, for legal necessity and whether, for any other reason, the ijara does or does not bind the present reversioners; secondly,—whether the doctrine of ratification bars the suit; and, thirdly, whether the suit is defective, because the Plaintiffs seek to recover not the whole property, but a ¾ths share of same.

"The third contention may be dismissed in a few words. The Plaintiffs did not sue to set aside the ijara but to recover possession of their share of the immoveable properties in dispute, and in accordance with the view adopted by the Judicial Committee on the question of limitation the suit cannot be defeated because the Plaintiffs did not sue to recover the entire property of Chandra Bhusan Mukerji.

"The facts do not appear to be seriously disputed, and learned Counsel and the learned Vakils representing the different parties in this and the other appeals, have argued on the inferences to be drawn from the facts and on pure questions of law. Sayamoni Debi brought her suit in 1844 not only against Baman Das Mukerji, but also against Annada Prasad Mukerji, the father of the Plaintiffs, and Gouri Prasad Mukerji, the father of Sarada Prasad Mukerji, and she was assisted by her cousin Umesh Chandra Roy, otherwise known as Moti Babu to whom she, on the 25th November 1851, gave an ekrar which is printed at page 227 of the paper-book in Appeal No. 71 of 1899 It was recited in that ekrar that the lady had become indebted to the extent of Rs. 38,000 for which she had executed a mortgage bond in favour of Umesh Chandra Roy's brother, Bhagaban Chandra Roy. She undertook to pay Rs. 50,000, including the previous Rs. 38,000, with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. when she had realized the costs and mesne profits due to her under the decree of the Sudder Court, and she gave security for that amount. This ekrar was entered into shortly after the decree of the Sudder Dewani Adalat, in favour of Sayamoni Debi, passed on the 30th September 1850. The litigation continued until the decree of the Privy Council (in 1858) to which we have already referred.

"There can be no doubt as to the bonâ fides of the claim advanced by Sayamoni Debi and the fact cannot be controverted that she had been involved in protracted litigation for the attainment of her just rights and the rights of her husband's reversioners.

"After obtaining her decree from the Privy Council Sayamoni Debi recovered possession of the three properties mentioned in the ijara of the 7th September 1863, where it was recited that she was in possession of those properties by collecting rent. Reading the ijara we find that Sayamoni Debi leased for a term of

BIJOY GOPAL MUKERJI v. GIRINDRA NATH MUKERJI.

60 years the whole of the taluks, indigo factories, gardens, tanks, &c., described in the schedule, possession of which had not been taken, together with the three properties possession of which had been recovered. The lessees undertook to pay Sayamoni a balance of Rs. 5,300 annually after paying the Government revenue amounting to Rs. 7,030 odd. They, also, undertook to assist Sayamoni in duly executing the decree of the Privy Council and she covenanted that she would do so. The arrangements were embodied in the ijara lease and the ekrarnamas, Exs. A and A (2)—all of the same date. At that time the lessees Annada Prasad Mukerji and Sarada Prasad Mukerji were disputing with Baman Das Mukerji But they adjusted their differences in the year 1866 when Baman Das Mukerji took a dar-ijara of the ⅓ d interest in the ijara of the 7th September 1863 This dar ijara was in the name of Baman Das Mukerji's son, but there can be no question that Baman Das was the person beneficially interested. The Defendants Nos. 9 to 13, the Appellants in the present appeal, derive their title, as we have already stated, from Baman Das Mukerji.

"The Plaintiffs did not bring the suit in their capacity of sons of Annada Prasad, one of the original ijaradars, but as the reversionary heirs of the husband of Sayamoni Debi, who granted the ijara. But in considering the circumstances in which that ijara was granted we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the Plaintiffs are standing upon a technical legal right and not upon any equities affecting the welfare of the descendants of Mahadeb Mukerji, who effected the partition in the year 1814.

"We have already observed that the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit for all properties with the exception of certain properties lying within the districts of Mymensingh and Faridpur, the claim to which in his opinion could not prevail, because the Plaintiffs had ratified the ijara in respect of those properties after Sayamoni's death in 1893. On the question of legal necessity the Subordinate Judge held that the ijara was at most a beneficial arrangement not amounting to legal necessity in the sense in which that expression is used in Hindu Law. It will be convenient to consider this question first.

"The doctrine of legal necessity has been elaborated in a series of judicial decisions. Each case must be judged upon its own facts. There can be no doubt that when Sayamoni entered into the arrangement with Annada Prasad Mukerji and Sarada Prasad Mukerji, her fortunes were at a very low ebb. She was in debt and her cousin Moti Babu and her gomashta had been convicted by a Criminal Court in connection with some case arising out of an attempt to execute decrees for rent in the property of which she had obtained nominal possession. The ijara arrangement turned out to be eminently successful because her principal opponent Baman Das Mukerji took a dar-ijara in the year 1866 and the numerous parties who have been impleaded in the present litigation, or rather, such of them as were then alive, regarded the ijara as a sound and honest disposition of her property by Sayamoni Debi. It can be said that, as the term of 60 years was evidently beyond the then expectation of life of Annada Prasad and Sarada Prasad, it may be reasonably inferred that they considered it a beneficial arrangement not only for themselves but for their descendants. A sense of peace and security was induced.

BIJOY GOPAL MUKERJI v. GIRINDRA NATH MUKERJI.

For thirty years, until the death of the widow in 1893, derivative titles were created and acted upon. The Plaintiffs must establish a very strong case indeed to induce a Court of justice, equity and good conscience to set aside a beneficial arrangement of this kind and one that has had such far-reaching consequences.

"For the Plaintiffs it has been argued that Sayamoni Debi was coerced by cruel necessity into granting the ijara and that she might very well, if she had been desirous of parting with her life estate, have granted it for the term of her natural life and not for 60 years. We, however, think that the very fact that the term actually adopted was sixty years and not the uncertain space of human life is a very strong indication that all the parties interested sought to make a definite arrangement possessing the best elements of finality, and, if we find that the arrangement was for the benefit of the estate, and did actually benefit the estate, we should apply and even broaden the principle adopted in the case of Dayamani Debi v. Srinibash Kundu (1). There it was said that a Hindu widow, as regards her management of the estate, has not less power than the manager of an infant's estate and that the reversioners were not entitled to set aside permanent leases granted by her which were found to be beneficial to the estate and by which they were found to have been benefited. The principle is based upon the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and it was applied in Venkaji Shridhar v. Vishnu Babaji Beri (2), where Sir C. Sargeant, C. J., said: "A widow like a manager of the family must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided she acts fairly to her expectant heirs:" a fortiori, if Sayamoni Debi made a good bargain for herself and if that bargain did not prejudice the position of the then reversioners, it should be given effect to, and the present reversioners ought not to be allowed to obliterate the history of nearlyhalf a century. No doubt the authorities to which we have been referred as showing that costs of litigation may amount to legal necessity are not precisely in point. It does not appear that the ijara was entered into merely to meet the costs incurred by Sayamoni Debi in the litigation. But the concurrent ekrarnama is provided for the liquidation of all her debts and if the widow chose to become an annuitant and to make over her estate to the next taker some of whom accepted the arrangement then and there, and some of whom subsequently accepted it, there is no reason on principle or authority why such an arrangement should be set aside. We are disposed to give a broad meaning to the word "arrangement." It does not necessarily imply an agreement, see Manning v. Eastern Counties Railway Company (3), but here it proceeded on representations of facts, not of mere intentions. Narain Das v. Ramanuj Dayal (4). In connection with the subject of subsequent assent we rely on Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Baksh Singh (5), where their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed that the consent of the reversioners was sufficient and that it was immaterial that it was given after the execution of the deed then in question and they applied the maxim "Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori acqui patatur." Transactions of this kind may become valid by the consent of all those who are likely to be interested in disputing them. Rajlukhee Dabea v. Gokool Chandra Choudhry (6). The circumstances of the present case warrant an application of the further principle that if parties arrange to avoid the necessity for legal proceedings, their arrangement is supported by sufficient consideration. Apart from legal necessity a widow can validly alienate property that has devolved on her from her husband with the consent of the reversioners. The widow can make such an alienation by the entire surrender of her own interest and thereby accelerate the interest of the reversioners, or, she can, as in the present case, part with her direct interest in the estate and convert it into an annuity. Subject to the payment of the annuity the transferee would acquire an absolute interest. Behari Lal v. Madho Lal (7), Hem Chandra Sanyal v. Sarnamoyi Debi (8).

"Our attention has been called to the judgment of Sir John Stanley, C. J, and Burkitt, J, in Gobind Krishna Narain v. Khunni Lal (9), where quoting Mr. J. C. Ghosh's book on Hindu Law, it was said "A decree against a widow to bind the reversioner must have been passed after full contest and a compromise decree, or a decree on an arbitration, can have no higher footing than an alienation by the widow." On the facts of that case, the doctrine of family settlement of doubtful claims was not applied. The case of Imrit Konwar v. Roop Narain Singh (10) was a case of compromise by a widow as against her minor daughter. But the ijara of the 7th of September 1863 was not a compromise. There was no settlement then effected of doubtful claims. Nevertheless, the principle of family settlements in our opinion is applicable to an arrangement by which the persons interested in the property mutually consent that the property shall be managed in a particular and convenient manner, and, if the arrangement does not seriously prejudice the parties to it or those who come after them, a Court of Equity will be slow to set it aside.

"How, then, have the Plaintiffs been prejudiced by the ijara of the 7th September 1863? We have been unable to find a satisfactory answer to this question. The test is how long has the arrangement been acted upon. In Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (11), Lord Macnaughten observed: "The unbroken usage for a period of 19 years is, as against the Appellant, conclusive evidence of a family arrangement to which the Court is bound to give effect,* It was one which the Court would, no doubt, have sanctioned, if its authority had been invoked." In Helan Dasi v. Durga Das (12), the test of long usage was not necessary because other considerations were found to be sufficient. See Williams v. Williams (13) and Stapilton v. Stapilton (14). Sayamoni lived for 30 years after 1863, the suit of the Plaintiffs was instituted on the 30th April 1897. This long period of rest was attributable to the measures taken by Sayamoni. She had executed her decree and obtained possession of three properties; she had entered into negotiations for an adjustment of her claims, and had actually remitted Rs. 1,72,000 on account of mesne profits to Baman Das Mukerji; she had received a sum of Rs. 42,000 up to 8th February 1861. Apart from legitimate and natural influences no coercion had been exercised on Sayamoni. She was in a position of superiority to Baman Das Mukerji owing to the decree of the Privy Council. He actually begged her to show him some consideration. In a deposition given by Sayamoni on the 6th June 1889 (pages 1 to 9 of the paper-book in Appeal No. 94 of 1899) the lady, shortly before her death, said: "In the execution case Baman Das Babu alone was the judgment-debtor, Annada Prasad and Gouri Prasad were not judgment-debtors, consequently what I remitted was remitted to Baman Das Babu alone. I made an ijara settlement with Annada Prasad and Sarada Prasad at the time of the family dispute amongst my husband's elder brothers. Being in difficulties on account of my debts, and as both the parties were particularly eager about it, I granted the said ijara settlement for a term of 60 years." Such was the impression left on the mind of this aged lady 26 years after the transaction, and we think that her impression should not be disregarded. A prudent management of the property of Chandra Bhusan Mukerji was called for. It was situated in numerous districts; it had been out of possession for 26 years at least (1832-1858) and adverse rights must have grown up. The usual method of management in such cases is by granting sub-leases of convenient parcels of the estate. Then, the disputes arising in the course of execution proceedings had resulted in loss of collections. Any one conversant with the management of landed property in the mofussil must be well aware that disputes between co-sharers lead to a total cessation of rent collections. In our opinion, therefore, the end justified the means adopted by Sayamoni, who in securing that end, which was a prudent and effective management of the properties decreed to her after a protracted litigation, acted within her powers, and the fact that her principal opponent took a dar-ijara and accepted the situation in the year 1866, conclusively shows that the ijara arrangement was made for the benefit of the estate and did not prejudice any one.

"We have referred to the growth of adverse rights during 1832-1858. It appears that, under the law prevailing before the present Limitation Act came into operation, adverse possession against a widow was held to be adverse possession against the reversioners. The estate of Sayamoni was, therefore, in danger of being lost unless the parties opposing her came to terms and took the management into their own hands.

"For these reasons we think the Plaintiffs should not be allowed to take possession of the properties in suit until the expiry of the ijara term of 60 years."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C, and Mr. Eddis for the Appellant submitted that the ijara was not binding upon the Plaintiffs as it was not shewn to have been made for any legal necessity. On the contrary it was executed under duress when she was in a helpless condition. The ijara was good for her lifetime only. In the absence of legal necessity or the consent of all the reversioners to the transaction the alienation was void under the Hindu Law. Hunooman Parshad v. Munraj Konwaree (15) was applicable to a man—a guardian—only and not to a Hindu widow. She must prove necessity or consent of reversioners. Mayne's Hindu Law, pp. 840 and 841. Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Venkata Narainappa (16). The consent of reversioners either raises a presumption that the widow's alienation was a proper one or it evidences an acceleration of the reversioner's interests. But in order to accelerate the estate of the reversionary heir she must convey to him her estate absolutely. Nobokishore v. Hari Nath (17), Behari Lal v. Madho Lal (7). That was not the case here. The consent of a reversioner only raises a presumption which is rebuttable. Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (18). The High Court erred in treating it as a part of a family arrangement. That case was never set up nor was it supported by evidence. At best a family arrangement was a compromise which was not binding on the reversioners unless fairly and properly obtained. Here it was screwed from her. It was true that the Appellants' father benefited under the ijara, but the Appellants were not bound by their father's acts. Their title is not through him but direct. Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika (5), Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi (19).

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Lowndes, Counsel for the Respondents, were not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON :—The substantial question in this Appeal is the validity of an Ijara executed on the 7th September 1863, for a term of 60 years, by a Hindu widow, named Sayamoni Debi, under circumstances which it will be necessary to refer to in some detail.

Sayamoni Debi was the widow of Chandra Mohan Mukerji. Her husband died in 1832 without leaving any issue, making her his sole heiress. The property consisted chiefly of landed property of considerable value.

Sayamoni was a purdanashin lady and probably not very capable of managing a large estate. She appears to have been dispossessed of the property by one of her husband's relatives, Baman Das Mukerji, and was compelled, in 1844, to bring a suit against him and his two brothers, Gouri Pershad and Annoda Pershad, to recover it. This litigation lasted till 1858, when, on appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the rights of Sayamoni to the estate of her husband were finally established. But although this was the case, it is evident that she did not thereupon obtain possession of the property. Further difficulties were raised and much of the property was threatened with the growth of adverse rights in the actual possessors of the land, who refused to pay rent under the pretext that the title had not been settled, and seeing that, prior to 1858, adverse possession against a widow ranked as adverse possession against the reversioners, there can be no doubt that the whole estate was in very serious peril.

While this state of things was still continuing the Ijara now in question was executed by the widow. Although at this distance of time it is impossible to ascertain with accuracy all that then happened, it is evident that this Ijara was part of a general family settlement whereby the widow divided up the family property amongst the various reversioners, reserving to herself only a comparatively small annual income which may fairly be looked on as representing maintenance. The Ijara itself was granted to Annoda Pershad and Saroda Pershad, who was the son of Gouri Pershad who had died in the interval. The third brother, Baman Das Mukerji, did not directly take any interest under the Ijara, but in October 1863 a Dar-Ijara was granted to his son of a portion of the property, and we find also that a large sum due from him on account of mesne profits was remitted by Sayamoni, so that it is clear that all branches of the family shared in the settlement.

If the term of the Ijara had been for the life of Sayamoni, no question could have arisen such as is now before their Lordships. But doubtless from the necessities of the case, in order to facilitate the practical settlement of the property so as to obtain its full value, the term was made for a fixed period of 60 years. Inasmuch as the lady was 42 years of age at the date when the Ijara was granted, it is evident that all the parties realised that the term would extend beyond her lifetime, and thus affect the rights of the reversioners whosoever they might happen to be. So far as the persons are concerned who then represented the reversion, it is clear that all this was done with their consent. They all took large interests under the arrangement, and have continued to enjoy them so long as they lived.

One of the parties who principally benefited by the Ijara was Annoda Pershad who was one of the actual lessees under the Ijara. He died in 1882, so that Sayamoni (who died in 1893) survived him 11 years. The Appellants are four sons of Annoda Pershad, and on the death of Sayamoni they became entitled directly to share in any family property of which she was the life tenant, and they have brought this action to set aside the Ijara, on the ground that it was an unauthorised interference by the widow with the reversionary interest which did not belong to her. The Court below, in a careful and well reasoned judgment, have decided that, on the facts of the case, the arrangement of which the Ijara formed part was in truth dictated by the necessities of the case, and that the choice of the term of 60 years as the term of the Ijara was made for the benefit of the estate and did not injure anyone.

Their Lordships agree with this Judgment. They are of opinion that the case depends entirely on the facts, and that it raises no new question of law as to the powers of a Hindu widow to deal with family property in case of necessity with the consent of then present reversioners, and they are, therefore, of opinion that the Appeal fails.

Counsel for the Appellants laboured to show that the so-called settlement by which peace for 30 years was brought into the family and, in their Lordships' opinion, the family property was in fact saved, was an outrageous and flagrantly unjust arrangement forced upon a helpless purdanashin widow by her influential relations in whose hands she was, and that any person either at the time or since must have known from its terms that it had been extorted by duress or engineered by fraud. Their Lordships are of opinion that Counsel entirely overlooked the evidence against this contention which is derived from the conduct of his own clients. From the year 1882, when Annoda Pershad died to the year

BIJOY GOPAL MUKERJI v. GIRINDRA NATH MUKERJI.

1893 when Sayamoni died, they themselves took the benefit of this arrangement which they now stigmatise as a gross fraud. It is suggested on their behalf that they thus made themselves participants in it solely because it was profitable so to do. Their Lordships decline to believe them to be as unscrupulous as they desire to be considered. As against them it is a fair inference from their conduct that they believed that the arrangement had been made in good faith, and under such circumstances of necessity as would give it validity according to Hindu law, and as it has always been a feature of Hindu law as administered by this Board to attach great weight to the sanction by expectant reversioners of an alienation of property by a Hindu woman as affording evidence that the alienation was under circumstances which rendered it lawful and valid, their Lordships in this case consider that the conduct of the Appellants themselves during those years affords evidence upon which the Respondents are entitled to rely.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be dismissed. The Appellants will pay the costs.

Per JENKINS, C. J.—The jurisdiction to impugn a previous decree for fraud should be exercised with care and reserve, so as not to encourage in litigants the idea that the final judgment in a suit is to be merely a prelude to further litigation.

Fraud must be established by proof before the propriety of the prior decree can be investigated.

Decrees whether made ex parte or by consent or after contest, apparent or real, are equally liable to be attacked for fraud, the character of the fraud varying with the circumstances of each case. One who seeks to impugn a decree passed after contest takes on himself a very heavy burden, and it is not satisfied by merely inducing the Court to come to the conclusion that the appreciation of the evidence and the ultimate decision in the former suit was erroneous.

A prior judgment cannot be upset on a mere general allegation of fraud or collusion; it must be shown how, when, where, and in what way, the fraud was committed.

No. 182 of 1911, which had been preferred against a decree of Babu R. K. Nag, Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 10th of November 1910, reversing a decree of Babu Basanta Kumar Pal, Munsif at Patuakhali, dated the 30th of September 1909.

The facts of the case are thus set out by Chapman, J.—

"The Plaintiffs are the holders of a six annas share of a howla. The tenure has been partitioned. The Plaintiffs' case was that they were in immediate possession of all the lands allotted to their six annas share and that in spite of this the Defendant No. 1 fraudulently obtained an entry in the Settlement Record to the effect that he the Defendant No. 1 held a nim-howla under the Plaintiffs and that the Plaintiffs were in cultivating possession of the land as his the Defendant No. 1's tenant. After obtaining this entry in the Settlement Record the Defendant No. 1 sued the Plaintiffs for rent and obtained a decree. The present suit was for a declaration that the rent decree obtained by Defendant No. 1 was inoperative and that the Plaintiffs were in possession of the land not as the tenants of Defendant No. 1 but in their own right as howladars."

The Munsif dismissed the suit but on appeal the Subordinate Judge decreed the Plaintiffs' suit.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court and contended that the suit was barred by reason of the previous decision in the suit for rent.

CHAPMAN, J., upheld this contention holding as follows :—"The question at issue in the rent suit was whether the present Plaintiffs held the lands as the tenants of Defendant No. 1 or in an independent capacity. That is exactly the same issue that was raised in the present suit. I am aware that the Court has always been slow to treat the decision in a suit for rent as res judicata upon a question of title and I have endeavoured to distinguish the question decided in the rent suit from the question raised in the present suit but have been unable to do so.

"It is then contended that the Plaintiff was entitled in the present suit to assail the decision in the rent suit upon the grounds that that decision was based upon an entry in the Settlement Record which was obtained by fraudulent means. But the issue whether the entry was obtained fraudulently or not was expressly raised and decided in the rent suit and cannot in my opinion be re-opened. I hold this view quite independently of the principle which has been laid down in this Court that a decree cannot be assailed collaterally merely upon the grounds that it is based upon perjured evidence."

His Lordship accordingly set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit with costs in all Courts.

The Plaintiff thereupon preferred this further appeal under the Letters Patent.

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee for the Appellant.—If the previous decree in the rent suit was obtained by fraud, then it cannot operate as res judicata, sec. 44, Evidence Act. Fraud vitiates everything, even the most solemn proceedings of a Court of law.

[JENKINS, C. J.—What was the fraud here, your client was not prevented from contesting the previous rent suit?]

The fraud here consisted in the perjured evidence by means of which the Defendant got his rent decree. The evidence was not only false, but was known to him to be false. When a man gets a decree by means of evidence which he knows to be false, by means of documents known to be forged and by himself suppressing evidence which if produced would have proved his case to be false, he commits a fraud upon the Court and thereby misleads the Court into making a decree which that Court would not have made if the truth was known to it. There are cases in this Court and also in the Madras High Court where it has been held that a decree obtained by means of perjured evidence known to be false, is liable to be set aside. Kedar Nath v. Hemanta Kumari (5), Lakhmi Charan v. Nur Ali (6) and Venkatappa Naick v. Subba Naick (7). In this case the Subordinate Judge has found that the Defendant when he brought the rent suit against me, knew that I held no karsa (tenancy) under him, that his sub-tenure (nimhowla) was not existing, that the rent receipts he produced were forgeries and that the kabuliyats produced by him were sham documents; these are findings of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court and they are conclusive in Second Appeal. These findings warrant the conclusion that the previous rent decree was obtained by fraud, by gross fraud.

[Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondent.—Cites Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath Ray (8), Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (9) and Abdul Huq v. Abdul Hafez (10)].

The case in Abdul Huq v. Abdul Hafez (10) does not touch the question; it only holds that fraud gives a cause-of-action for a suit for setting aside the decree and so far it is in my favour. The decision in Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath (8) is an obiter, vide page 1006; so also the decision in Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (9). Even if these decisions are held not to be obiter dicta, I submit they are not good law.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Have you got any decided case to show that a decree in a contested suit has been set aside on the ground of fraud?]

There is no Indian case so far as I am aware but there are English decisions which hold that contested decrees may also be set aside on the ground of fraud. Vide Cole v. Langford (11), Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (12) and Vadala v. Lawes (13). Once it is admitted that an ex parte decree obtained by means of fraud could be set aside by a suit, it follows from the provisions of sec. 9, C. P. C. (1908), that a suit will lie for setting aside, on the ground of fraud, a contested decree also. The fraud whether in a contested suit or non-contested suit gives rise to a cause-of-action and a Civil suit lies on such a cause-of-action.

Fraud does not cease to be fraud because the suit is contested. When in a contested suit, a Plaintiff succeeds in getting a decree by his fraud, it only proves that he is a very clever deceiver. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 18, p. 316, we find that a decree obtained by fraud, whether made ex parte or in a contested suit, is liable to be set aside. Of course when the suit was contested, the Court, in order to set aside the decree in that suit, will require very strong evidence of fraud. But the question whether the evidence of fraud in this case was strong or not could not arise in Second Appeal. The lower Appellate Court has believed the evidence of fraud and come to a finding of fact which this Court cannot question.

[JENKINS, C. J.—The English cases you cite are all cases on foreign judgments. In the case of foreign judgments different considerations might arise.]

I submit the decisions would have been the same if the judgments which were set aside on grounds of fraud, were judgments of English Court. There are observations in those English cases which show that the same principles would also apply to judgments of English Courts. Foreign judgments could operate as res judicata (vide sec. 11, C. P. C.) and also they could not be questioned on the merits. Sec. 13, C. P. C., shows foreign judgments are conclusive unless they are vitiated by the circumstances enumerated there.

[JENKINS, C. J.—But in sec. 13 you have the provision that a foreign judgment obtained by fraud is not conclusive.]

Yes, a similar provision we have in sec. 44, Evidence Act, in respect of all judgments.

[JENKINS, C. J.—How do you get over the decision in 21 Calcutta case? When would litigation end, if a defeated Defendant in a contested suit, can re-open the whole question in a fresh suit brought by him for setting aside the decree on the ground of fraud?]

I admit litigation will be somewhat prolonged. But it is better that litigation should be a little prolonged than that a litigant who has succeeded in getting a decree by fraud, should be allowed by law to enjoy the fruit of his own fraudulent act. Two principles are firmly established in equity—one is that multiplicity of action should not be allowed, and the other is that no person should be allowed to be the gainer by his own wrong. Where there is conflict between these two principles, I submit the latter should prevail over the former. A person who has got a decree by his fraud, cannot complain if he is exposed to collateral attacks intended to deprive him of the dishonest advantage he has secured to himself; otherwise his fraud will be perpetuated. This case itself illustrates my point; if the Defendant could successfully plead that my suit to set aside the fraudulent decree does not lie, then the result will be that he will for ever get rent from me and I shall be deprived of my howla right over the land. The learned Chief Justice in Mahomed Galab v. Mahomed Sulliman (9) observes that to obtain a decree by perjured evidence is a fraud of the grossest kind, still he holds that no suit would lie for setting aside the decree. Why? because there would then be no finality to litigation. But the Privy Council decisions in Radha Raman Shaha v. Pran Nath Roy (14) and Khagendra Nath v. Pran Nath (15) go to show that prolongation of litigation is not a matter for consideration in a suit brought for setting aside a decree on the ground of fraud. In those Privy Council decisions, the Defendant first applied to set aside the ex parte decree under sec. 108, C. P. C. (1882), failed there, because it was held that summons were not suppressed, then he appealed and there also failed and then after these litigations he instituted a suit for setting aside the ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. And it was not even suggested in those cases that the suit did not lie because otherwise litigation would be much prolonged.

In this case the question whether a suit for setting aside a contested decree on the ground of fraud, lies or not, does not really arise. Because my suit is for the declaration that the Defendant has no nim howla and by way of anticipation I plead that the decree which the Defendant has got in the rent suit, is inoperative, having been obtained by fraud. This I could do under sec. 44, I. E. Act, as was done in the case of Benode Behari v. Nistarini Dasi (16).

[JENKINS, C. J.—But what is the fraud alleged here and how has fraud been found?]

Fraud alleged and found are these:—The Defendant sued me for rent of a karsa and it has been found by the Sub-Judge and (that finding is unassailable in second appeal) that the karsa is a myth. So the Defendant knowingly sued for rent of a karsa which did not exist. The entry in the settlement record that the Defendant has the nim howla was obtained by suppression of two decrees which had declared that no nim howla existed under the 16 annas howladars. The rent receipts filed were forgeries and the kabuliyats produced were sham documents.

These facts were sufficient to prove that the decree in the rent suit was obtained by fraud.

[JENKINS, C. J.—But two Courts before which witnesses were examined and which had opportunities to observe the demeanour of witnesses had previously held otherwise on the evidence.]

No doubt so, but the law is that the findings of fact arrived at by the Appellate Court even by reversing the findings of the first Court are conclusive in Second Appeal.

My next point is that that the previous decree could not operate as res judicata on the question of existence or non-existence of the nim howla. In an ordinary rent suit where the relationship of landlord and tenant is denied, the only question directly and substantially in issue is whether the Defendant is the tenant of the Plaintiff. The question whether the Plaintiff (landlord) has any title to the land does not become a matter directly and substantially in issue. The words in sec. 11, C. P. C., are "directly and substantially." The landlord's title, may be indirectly in issue, but it is never directly in issue, except in those rent suits in which the tenant sets up a conflicting title to the land either in himself or in some third person and that third person is a party to the suit. The fact that the Legislature has not allowed Appeal or Second Appeal in many rent suits while there is no conflict of title between the landlord and tenant lends support to this view.

It would be disastrous if in a petty rent suit of the value of Rs. 5 or 6, a decision of the Court on the title of the landlord could operate as res judicata in a subsequent title suit. Formerly the rent suits were tried by the Revenue Courts whose decision on the question of the landlord's title could never operate as res judicata, but now ordinary Civil Courts try those rent suits and their adjudication on the question of title may operate as res judicata. But the Legislature did not change its policy as to the question of res judicata by changing the form of rent suits.

The law remains practically the same, because of the provision in sec. 11, C. P. C., which lays down that unless a matter is directly and substantially in issue its adjudication cannot operate as res judicata. It cannot be said that without deciding the title of the landlord the rent suit could not be decided. If A lets out land to B, A is entitled to get rent from B, irrespective of the question whether A has title to the land or not. So it is not always necessary for the Court to decide whether the landlord has title to the land or not, except in one class of cases where the tenant sets up conflicting title in himself. There is no reported case in which an adjudication on the question of landlord's title in a rent suit where the tenant did not set up any conflicting title in himself, has been held to be res judicata in a subsequent title suit. Refers to Dwarka Nath v. Ram Chand (17), Sahadeb v. Ram Rudra (18).

Again in order to plead res judicata, a party must prove the pleadings of the previous suit. In this case the Defendant has not proved the pleadings in the previous rent suit and so it could be determined what questions were precisely in point in that rent suit. Vide Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (19).

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondent.—The decision in the rent suit operates as res judicata on the question of existence or non-existence of the nim-howla. There the tenant not only denied the relationship of landlord and tenant but also denied the existence of the nim-howla, that is the landlord's title. And it was found that the nim-howla did exist. Reads the judgment in the rent suit and cites Ram Behari v. Surendra Nath (20), Lilabati v. Bishun Chobey (21). The question whether the entry in the settlement record was correct or not was also decided in the rent suit, so it is not now open to the Appellant to prove that entry fraudulent. Not only does the decision operates as res judicata but the grounds of the decision may also operate as res judicata. The Munsif has found that the entry in the settlement record was obtained with the knowledge of the tenant. As to the question of fraud, the decision in the rent suit will itself operate as res judicata on the question of fraud. The tenant Defendant contested that suit, produced his evidence to prove that the entry in the settlement record was fraudulent and the evidence produced by my client was false, but the Court held on the evidence adduced by both sides, that my client's case was true and gave a decree in his favour. So the findings of the Munsif in the rent suit will operate as res judicata in this suit in which that decree has been attacked as fraudulent. The tenant could have appealed from the rent decree but he did not do so, so that decree has become final. Refers to Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath Ray (8), Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (9), Abdul Huq v. Abdul Hafez (10).

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee in reply.—The cases cited by the other side are all distinguishable and not in point. The existence of the nim howla was not directly and substantially in issue. I concede that the rent decree may be res judicata on the question whether I held the land as a tenant under the Defendant but the question whether the Defendant had the nim howla under my howladar was not directly in issue in the rent suit. A ground of decision may operate as res judicata only when without that ground the decision could not have been made. But the rent suit could have been decreed without deciding whether the Defendant held the nim howla under me. The finding of the Munsif that the entry in the settlement record was correct was only an expression of his opinion on a piece of evidence and such expression can never operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties. The doctrine of res judicata has its limits and cannot be pushed so far. As to the contention that the decision of the Munsif in the rent suit does also operate as res judicata on the question of fraud, the observation of the learned Judges in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (12) and Vadala v. Lawes (13) give a complete answer. The Munsif was never called upon to decide in the rent suit that fraud was being practised upon him by the Plaintiff in that suit. The question of the Plaintiff's fraud was not before the Munsif.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—By this suit the Plaintiffs seek to establish their title to land. The first Defendant contends that the validity of this title has been decided adversely to the Plaintiffs by the decree of a competent Court in a previous suit between the parties, and so cannot now be tried.

The Plaintiffs reply that the previous decree cannot support the plea of res judicata, and, alternatively, that it was obtained by fraud. Mr. Justice Chapman, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, held that the decree in the previous suit supports the plea of res judicata and that there is no evidence that the decree was obtained by fraud. From this judgment the present appeal has been preferred. The jurisdiction to impugn a previous decree for fraud is beyond question: it is recognised by sec. 44 of the Evidence Act and is confirmed by a long line of authority. But it is a jurisdiction to be exercised with care and reserve, for it would be highly detrimental to encourage the idea in litigants that the final judgment in a suit is to be merely a prelude to further litigation. The fraud used in obtaining the decree being the principal point in issue, it is necessary to establish it by proof before the propriety of the prior decree can be investigated (Mitford on Pleadings, 113). Decrees may be (1) by consent: (2) ex parte, or (3) after contest, apparent or real: and though each is liable to be attacked for fraud, the character of the fraud would vary with the circumstances of each case. One who seeks to impugn a decree passed after contest takes on himself a very heavy burden, and it is not satisfied by merely inducing the Court to come to the conclusion that the appreciation of the evidence and the ultimate decision in the former suit was erroneous. A prior judgment, it has been said, cannot be upset on a mere general allegation of fraud or collusion: it must be shown how, when, where, and in what way, the fraud was committed. [Shedden v. Patrick (1)]. Sir John Rolt, L. J., in Patch v. Ward (2), discussing what is meant by fraud when it is said that a decree may be impeached for fraud, said: "the fraud must be actual positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and obtaining that decree by that contrivance." And Lord Selbourne in Ochtenbein v. Papelier (3) quotes as sound law the dictum of Chief Justice DeGrey in The Duchess of Kingston's case (4) that a judgment, "like all other acts of the highest judicial authority is impeachable from without: although it is not permitted to show that the Court was mistaken, it may be shown that they were misled."

Both suits now under consideration turn on the existence or non-existence of an alleged nim-howla, a question of fact to be determined largely by the appreciation of evidence. The Munsif in the former suit affirmed the existence of the nim-howla, and from his decision no appeal was preferred.

In this suit the Court of first instance came to the same conclusion on the evidence in this case. The lower Court of Appeal, however, for some reason did not agree with this appreciation of the evidence and therefore held the decree in the former suit fraudulent. There is, however, no suggestion that the decree in the previous suit was fictitious or that the [illegible] in this suit were prevented by any contrivance from placing before the Court in the former suit any material relevant to the issue, nor has there been any subsequent discovery of evidence that goes to show fraud, or that the Court was misled in the former suit. In effect, when analysed, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is no more than a retrial of the merits of the original suit and a determination that the Judge who decided that suit was mistaken. But the Court in this suit has no jurisdiction to decide on the merits of the former judgment: its function was to decide whether that judgment was vitiated by fraud

There, therefore, was an error of law committed by the lower Appellate Court and Chapman, J, rightly reversed its decree, for as fraud was not proved, the prior decree sufficiently supports the plea of res judicata.

The Appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The fraud alleged in this case was the wrongful procurement by the Defendant of the entry of the nim-howla in the record-of-rights. The same allegation was made in the rent suit, and the matter was adjudicated upon in the presence of both parties. It was a matter substantially in issue in that case and I think it would be clearly offending against the rule of res judicata to allow the Plaintiffs to re-open that question.

I agree, therefore, in dismissing this Appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 592 OF 1911.

CARNDUFF, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1914,
11, February.

GOBINDA CHANDRA CHUCKERBUTTY, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
NANDA KUMAR DAS and anr, Defendants, Respondents.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 22—Indian Contract Act (I of 1872), sec. 16—Contract for sale of land in lieu of hushing up of departmental enquiry against a public servant, if enforceable—Court of equity, jurisdiction of, to refuse specific performance of contract not invalid or void under the Indian Contract Act.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of land it appeared that in consequence of a charge being laid at the instance of the Plaintiffs against one of the Defendants who was the record-keeper of the Court of the District Judge a departmental enquiry into the matter by a Subordinate Judge was ordered and while this was in progress the two Defendants who were father and son were approached by the Plaintiffs who promised to hush up the said enquiry if the Defendants would execute a conveyance in their favour in respect of certain land and the result was the contract in suit:

Held—That the contract was one of which specific performance ought not to be ordered.

That there may be cases which cannot be brought within the four corners of any of the provisions of the Indian Contract Act as to the invalidity or voidability of agreements but in which nevertheless a Court of equity may properly refuse to exercise its jurisdiction under the Specific Relief Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 13th of March 1911 against the decree of Babu Sripati Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Barisal, dated the 28th of November 1910, confirming the decree of Babu Mohim Chundra Chuckerbutty, Munsif at that place, dated the 9th of June 1909.

The Plaintiffs sued for specific performance of a contract of sale of land. Both the lower Courts dismissed the Plaintiffs's suit. Hence this Second Appeal by the Plaintiff.

The facts will appear from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, the material portion of which is set out below:

"The immoveable properties, said to have been agreed to be sold, formerly belonged to the Plaintiffs themselves. In the year 1890 these were purchased by the late Babu Pyari Lal Ray, for Rs. 39 only at a sale in execution of a decree against the Plaintiffs. The present Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are father and son. The Defendant No. 2, Lalit Kumar Das, now employed as the Head Clerk in the District Judge's Office, formerly was the Record-keeper of that Court. The immoveable properties above referred to were purchased by him or his father, from Babu Pyari Lal's sons, for Rs. 10 and Rs. 90 under two kobalas, in Jaista and Pous 1312. In the year 1907 the Defendant No. 1, Nanda Kumar Das, instituted a suit, No. 91, against one Mohan Nandi, for arrears of rent of some lands he held under one of the properties above referred to. Mohan hotly contested the suit at the instigation and with the help of the present Plaintiffs whom I shall call the Chakerbuttys. During the pendency of that suit Mohan Nandi made a complaint to the District Judge against Lalit Kumar (the Defendant No. 2) charging him with some misconduct as the Record-keeper of his Court. The District Judge made over

GOBINDA CHANDRA CHUCKERBUTTY v. NANDA KUMAR DAS.

Mohan's application to the Second Subordinate Judge for inquiry and report. The contract of sale, sought to be enforced by the present suit of the Chakerbuttys, is said to have been agreed to while the Second Subordinate Judge was actually examining Mohan's witnesses in support of the charges he had brought against Lalit Kumar.

"A young pleader of the Courts here, is one of the most important witnesses on the Plaintiffs' side. It was indeed he who brought about this contract of sale. An old pleader of this place, gave his deposition against Lalit Kumar before the Second Subordinate Judge. This appears to have wholly upset the minds of Lalit Kumar and his relatives. His brother, Moti Lal, with tears in his eyes, approached the young pleader and requested him to see if he could induce the Chakerbuttys to hush up the charges they had brought in Mohan's name. Then Lalit Kumar himself also made the same request to the pleader saying that he (Lalit) would agree to any terms he the pleader would think reasonable and proper. Lalit even agreed to part with all the properties of the Chakerbuttys he had purchased from Pyari Babu's sons. The pleader also believed that Lalit Kumar was in danger of losing his post. It was in this state of mind that the pleader approached the present Plaintiff No. 1, Gobinda Chandra Chakerbutty, with the object above referred to. Gobinda wanted that all the properties purchased by the Defendants from Pyari Babu's sons must be reconveyed to himself and his co-sharers without any consideration whatever excepting that they would hush up the charges brought against Lalit Kumar. The pleader pressed him to pay Rs. 300 and after some haggling he at last agreed to pay Rs. 250 not only for the properties above referred to, but also for all arrears of rents due from all tenants, including all decrees also that the Defendants had already obtained for such arrears and would obtain in their Suit No. 91 of 1907 against Mohan Nandi. Lalit Kumar and his father agreed to this, and it is this contract that is sought to be enforced by this suit.

"The price agreed to was grossly inadequate. That coupled with the circumstances under which the Defendants were compelled to agree to the bargain is clear evidence of undue advantage taken over them by the Plaintiffs."

Babus Nilmadhub Bose and Hirendra Nath Ganguly for the Appellant.

Babus Mahendra Nath Ray and Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CARUDUFF, J.—This Appeal arises out of a suit for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. The suit was dismissed by both the Courts below, and one of the Plaintiffs appeals to this Court.

The land originally belonged to the Plaintiffs. It was sold in execution of a decree against them, and purchased by one Peary Lal Rai. Peary Lal Rai then conveyed it to the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are father and son. The Plaintiffs' case was that these Defendants executed a kobala for the sale of the property to them for Rs. 250, but that the instrument was not registered or delivered and had since disappeared. They sought, therefore, for a decree requiring the execution and registration of a fresh kobala.

The Court of first instance found that the contract alleged had been entered into, but held that it was not a contract which should be enforced by a Court of Equity because it had been obtained by undue influence, the chief consideration for it was opposed to public policy, the price fixed by it was grossly inadequate, and the Plaintiffs had been guilty of unfair practice and had taken advantage of the Defendants. The lower Appellate Court has disposed of the case by assuming, though not finding, the factum of the agreement and affirming the decision of the first Court that specific performance ought not, in the circumstances, to be decreed.

It appears that a charge of some sort had, at the instance of the Plaintiffs, been brought against the second Defendant in respect of his conduct as record-keeper of the Court of the District Judge, and that a departmental enquiry into the matter by one of the Subordinate Judges had been ordered. While this was in progress, the second Defendant and his father were approached by the Plaintiffs who were anxious to recover the land and promised to "hush up the enquiry" which they had been instrumental in initiating, if they would execute a conveyance in their favour.

The learned Vakil for the Appellant contends that these facts do not bring the case within the scope of the provisions of sec. 16 of the Contract Act, which deal with "undue influence." He further contends that it is impossible to say that the agreement to hush up the enquiry into the conduct of the second Defendant was opposed to public policy when there is nothing on the record to show what the charge or complaint against that Defendant was. He argues that, although the jurisdiction of a Court to decree specific performance is discretionary, the discretion, which is expressly given by sec. 22 of the Specific Relief Act of 1879, must be exercised judicially, that is to say that in this country, in connection with a matter of contract, the Courts should be guided by the rules laid down in the Indian Contract Act of 1872, and by those alone. There remains, then, only the ground of the grossly inadequate price fixed, and that is not sufficient unless the inadequacy was so gross as to lead to an inference of fraud.

It seems to me, however, that there may be cases which cannot be brought within the four corners of any of the provisions of the Indian Contract Act as to the invalidity or voidability of agreements, but are nevertheless cases in which a Court of Equity may properly refuse to exercise its jurisdiction under the Specific Relief Act. Sec. 22 of the latter enactment itself shows that this is so: and both principle and authority appear to point to the same conclusion. There are—see Fry on Specific Performance, 5th Ed., p. 195—"many instances in which, though there is nothing that actually amounts to fraud, there is nevertheless a want of equality and fairness in the contract which are essential in order that the Court may exercise its extraordinary jurisdiction in specific performance." "In judging of the fairness of a contract" —see ibid, page 200—"the Court will look not merely at the terms of the contract itself, but at all the surrounding circumstances;" and "it is enough, generally speaking, to induce the Court to refuse performance, that there are any circumstances about the making of the contract which render it not fair and honest to call for its execution."

I think, therefore, that the proposition for which the learned Vakil contends, is not one that can be accepted; and, having regard to all the circumstances of the case before us, I think that the Courts, below were right in holding that the contract was one of which specific performance ought not to be decreed. I would, consequently, dismiss this appeal; but, in view of the conduct of the Defendants, who pleaded, first, that there had been no contract at all, and, secondly, that it had been induced by undue influence and so forth, and of the circumstance that they did not venture into the witness-box, I would make no order as to costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed without costs.

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 484 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.
N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.
1912,
21, June.

HARIHAR SINGH,
Petitioner,
Appellant,
v.
MAHESHUR PROSAD,
Opposite Party,
Respondent.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), sec. 43—Insolvent, acts of bad faith of—Proceedings in their nature criminal—Necessity of framing charge, etc.

A proceeding against a debtor under sec. 43 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is in the nature of a criminal proceeding, and, as in all criminal cases, it is necessary in such a proceeding that there should be a charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for the sentence, and everything should be strictly and accurately pursued, and if on any of these three points a substantial defect should appear, it would be a ground for reversing the proceeding.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 9th of September 1911 against an order of B. A. Cullis, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Mozufferpur, dated the 28th of August 1911.

The Appellant who was arrested in execution of a decree obtained by the Respondent, was released by the Court on bail on his expressing his desire to apply for adjudication as an insolvent. Subsequently he applied for such adjudication but the Respondent decree-holder opposed his application alleging that the Petitioner had sufficient properties to pay off his debts and that he had not disclosed all the properties owned by him, many of which he had transferred in the farzi names of his relatives; and alleged, amongst other instances one, viz., of a Touji bearing No. 17791, which Petitioner had inherited from his cousin, but which he had fraudulently got entered in the name of his grandson Parbodh Singh under his own guardianship. The Receiver appointed by Court in reporting on the Petitioner's assets and liabilities, substantially confirmed this allegation. He reported that the Petitioner's story that Parbodh Singh was the adopted son of his cousin was falsified by a plaint filed by the Petitioner himself. Upon receiving this report and after some further proceedings the District Judge on 28 8 11 recorded an order to the following effect: "I have read the Receiver's report. . . . The insolvent has been examined and cross-examined on the subject of T. No. 17791 and merely re-asserts what he said before. I agree with the finding of the Receiver and regard it as clearly proved that the insolvent has wilfully made false entries in his inventory of property. He is therefore under sec. 43 of Act III of 1907 sentenced to one year's simple imprisonment. If at any time he should satisfy his creditors in full or as far as they consider he is able, I should be prepared to deal more leniently with him."

The Petitioner appealed.

Babu Jogendra Chandra Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

JENKINS, C. J.—In my opinion the order of the Judge sentencing this insolvent to a maximum term of imprisonment of one year cannot be sustained. It must be understood that proceedings such as these are in the nature of criminal proceedings: and, "in all criminal cases it is necessary that there should be a charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for the sentence. Everything should be strictly and accurately pursued: and if on any one of these three points a substantial defect should appear, it would be a ground for reversing the proceeding." The section itself provides safeguards which have not been observed, for it is prescribed that the Court "in every such case shall record the facts constituting the offence with the statement (if any) made by the debtor." More than that, the Judge has arrived at his conclusion of guilt not on evidence but substantially on the report of the Receiver. It is true that there was also a deposition of the debtor, but the learned Vakil who appears to support the order of the learned Judge is unable to suggest that there was anything in the deposition of the debtor that would justify the order and the sentence that has been passed. In the circumstances there is but one course open to us, and that is to reverse the order of the Judge and to direct that the insolvent be set at liberty.

The Respondent must pay the insolvent's costs of the appeal—hearing-fee, two gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 4171 OF 1910.

STEPHEN, J.
MULLICK, J.
1913,
9, July.

IMAM ALI PATWARI,
Defendant, Appellant,
v.
ARFATUNNESSA*,
Plaintiff, Respondent.

Mahomedan Law—Kabinnamah—Condition that husband should live with wife in wife's father's house as khanadamad and for divorce upon breach, if valid—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) or. 40, r. 22—Point not decided Respondent's favour, if may be urged without cross-objection.

A condition in a kabinnamah that the husband shall live with the wife in her father's house and that if he broke this condition she would be entitled to divorce him is invalid under the Mahomedan Law, and her claim for deferred dower following upon such a divorce must fail.

The Respondent in an appeal can urge in support of the judgment a point not decided in his favour without presenting a cross-appeal.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 19th of December 1910 against a decree of M. Yusuf, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Noakhali, dated the 23rd of November 1910, reversing a decree of Babu Ananta Nath Mitra, Munsif at Lakhipur, dated the 2nd of June 1910.

The Appellant who had another wife living married the Respondent in Sraban 1312, on executing a kabinnamah whereby he stipulated inter alia that he would live with the Respondent in her father's house as khanadamad and that on his failure to do so, the Respondent would have power to divorce him on expiry of one year from the date of the breach of contract. On account of an alleged breach of this contract the Respondent divorced the Appellant on 4th Aughran 1316, and brought this suit to recover Rs. 550 payable to her under the kabinnamah as dower, Rs. 250 on demand and Rs. 300 on dissolution of marriage.

The Munsif gave her a decree for the former amount only holding that there was "no valid reason for her divorcing the Appellants. On appeal, the District Judge reversed this finding holding that the Defendant had broken the condition in the kabinnamah in Bhadra 1314, and gave her a decree for the full amount of her claim.

The Defendant preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Ramesh Chander Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This suit is brought by a Mahomedan wife for declaration that she is divorced and for prompt and deferred dower. There is now no question as to the justness of the demand for the prompt dower. As to the deferred dower the question rests on certain terms in a kabinnamah between the two parties. The condition which is laid down by the terms to which we have referred is that the husband is to live with the wife in her father's house and that if he breaks this condition she is to have a right to divorce him. That of course implies that the wife will continue to live in her father's house.

The first Court held that the contract was not illegal, but the condition we have referred to was not fulfilled. He accordingly gave a decree only for the prompt dower. Against this the wife appealed to the lower Appellate Court. In considering the question the Judge refused to consider whether the condition to which we have referred was or was not illegal on the ground that the Respondent had not entered any cross-appeal on the subject.

We are now asked to say that this decision of his was wrong and that the contract was in fact an illegal one. The findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court are sufficient for us to proceed to the determination of the case on the validity of the contract. We have no doubt that the Defendant had a right to ask for a decision on this point in the lower Appellate Court, since it was a point on which he could have upheld the decision of the Court below. Therefore the Judge was wrong in not considering it.

There is some good authority for the statement that the condition that the wife shall be at liberty to live with her parent is void. We may for this refer to Wilson's Digest of Anglo Mahomedan Law, sec. 56, Abdur Rahim's Institutes of Mussalman Law, Article No. 7, para. 3 and to the decision in the case of Abdul Piroj Khan v. Husseinbi (1). We hold therefore that this condition is illegal and that the Plaintiff is accordingly not entitled to use it for supporting her claim to divorce and consequently to the deferred dower.

Accordingly we allow this Appeal and though we differ from the Munsif in the reasons given for his decision we affirm his decree. The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

RADHA GOBINDA MISRA, Auction-purchaser, Petitioner,
v.
RAGHU NATH MISRA and others, Claimants, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 101—Joint possession with judgment-debtor if possession in one's own interest—Scope of section.

A claimant who has an interest in the land of which possession has been delivered in execution of a decree either as a member of the family of the judgmentdebtor or otherwise and who is affected by the delivery of possession, is a person who is in possession in respect of his own interest, though jointly with the judgment-debtor, and he can claim to be in possession of the property on his own account within the meaning of r. 101, Or. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of April 1913 against an order of the Munsif of Jajpur, dated the 6th of January 1913.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Susil Madhub Mullick for the Petitioner.

Mr. Misra and Babus Probodh Kumar Das and Promatha Lal Dutt for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order under Rule 101 of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. That Rule provides for an adjudication of a claim preferred by persons who have been dispossessed by a decree-holder auction-purchaser, and lays down that where the execution Court is satisfied that a claimant of this description was in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, it shall direct that the applicant be put in possession of the property. The Petitioner before us obtained a mortgage decree against a member of a joint Mitakshara family. He became the purchaser in execution of that decree. When possession of the property was delivered to him, a person who claimed to be a purchaser from a member of the family other than the judgment-debtor preferred a claim under sub r. (1) of r. 101. The contention of the claimant, who is the Opposite Party in this Rule, was that he was in possession of the property on his own account and that consequently he was not liable to be dispossessed by the auction-purchaser. The Court below has found as a fact that the claimant was in joint possession of the property along with the judgment-debtor. The question consequently arises whether his claim may be allowed under r. 101. On behalf of the execution purchaser, it has been contended that rr. 100 and 101 do not apply to a case of this description. It has been urged that when two persons are jointly in possession of a property, and in execution of a decree obtained against one of such persons, the decree-holder proceeds to take possession of the property, or if a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained against one of such persons proceeds to take delivery of the property, the other person who is dispossessed cannot contend that he is in possession on his own account, as his possession admittedly is joint possession with the judgment-debtor. In support of this view reliance has been placed upon the case of Cooverji Heruji v. Dewetsey Bhojal (1). In this case, Mr. Justice Strachey observed that "a member of a joint Hindu family cannot say that he is in possession of any particular portion of the joint property on his own account, as his possession is possession of the family, unless there is evidence to show that he set up a right to a particular piece of land adversely to the family, which, it has always been held, must be very strictly proved. In so for as the learned Judge lays down that a member of a joint Mitakshara family cannot say that he is in possession of a specific portion of the joint property on his own account, the proposition is unquestionably correct ; but in so far as the learned Judge lays down that a person who is in joint possession is not in possession on his own account, the proposition appears to us to be open to criticism. The point now taken was raised before this Court in the case of Sankar Nath v. Madan Mohan (2), where it was observed, on the assumption that r. 100 and 101 were applicable to a case of this character, that an order for restoration of possession ought not to specify the share held by the claimant. It was pointed out in this case that, upon the question raised, there was a divergence of judicial opinion and that, in the case of Gobinda Nair v. Kesava (3), a view had been taken contrary to that adopted in the case of Cooverji v. Dewey (1). The point, however, was left open, as the case was decided on other grounds. We are of opinion that the view taken in Govinda Nath v. Kesava (3), is well-founded on principle. In this case Mr. Justice Mutu Swami Ayyar held that a claimant, who has an interest in the land, of which possession has been delivered, either as a member of the family or otherwise and who is affected by the delivery of possession, as he himself is in possession, is really a person who is in possession in respect of his own interest though jointly with the judgment-debtor, and he can, consequently, claim to be in possession of the property on his own account within the meaning of sec. 331 of the Code of 1882. His joint interest with the judgment-debtor cannot prevent him from claiming in good faith in respect of his own interest. The effect of his obstruction and claim may be to set up a case in favour of the judgment-debtor against the execution purchaser, if the joint right of the judgment debtor is in every respect similar to his." But this can make no difference, as the claimant should not lose his joint right, because his co-tenant cannot set up his right as against the execution purchaser. In our opinion the terms of r. 101 are comprehensive enough to cover a case of this description. There is no anomaly involved in the view we take. The only effect of our order in favour of the claimant is to restore him to joint possession in the same manner as before-in other words, the execution purchaser is placed in possession only to this extent that the possession of his judgment-debtor is terminated and he has to remain in joint possession, along with the claimant, as his judgment-debtor had previously done. We must hold accordingly that the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the claim.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute in part and the order of the Court below varied to this extent only, namely, that the claim is allowed and the claimant is restored to joint possession as before, so that he will be in joint possession with the execution purchaser. There will be no order for costs in this Rule.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 26, r. 10 (2)—Commissioner, right of parties to examine—Court's leave if may be withheld arbitrarily—Report not giving reasons for conclusion —Stamp Act (II of 1899), sec. 36, Sch. I, Art. 1 —Acknowledgment.

A statement to the effect as follows: "Rs. 2,115—balance due" followed by the date and the debtor's signature is an acknowledgment and should be stamped as such.

But under sec. 36 of the Evidence Act if such a statement, though unstamped, has been admitted in evidence by the Court of first instance, it cannot be rejected by the Appellate Court.

The Legislature in making the report of the Commissioner admissible in evidence by itself and his examination in connection therewith subject to the Court's leave intended to afford protection to him from vexatious examination at the instance of either party. The permission to examine the Commissioner cannot however be arbitrarily withheld.

When the Commissioner has not given reasons for his conclusions it is a proper case for the examination of the Commissioner as a witness.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1911, against the decree of L. C. Adami, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Cuttack, dated the 31st of July 1911, affirming the decree of Babu Probodh Chandra Sinha, Munsif, 2nd Court at Puri, dated the 12th of September 1910.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money from four persons as Defendants. Of these, the first two are brothers, and they are the step-brothers of the other two Defendants. The case for the Plaintiff is that the Defendants were members of a joint family, that the first Defendant was the head and as such looked after their affairs. The Plaintiff asserts that the Defendants have from time to time borrowed money from him to carry on a trade in rice, that accounts were adjusted between the parties on the 25th October 1908, when a sum of Rs. 2,115-9 was found due ; and that the third Defendant on behalf of himself and his brothers signed the statements. The Plaintiff allows credit for payments alleged to have been subsequently made to him, and seeks to recover the balance of Rs. 2,000.

SITARAM v. RAMA PROSAD RAM.

The two sets of Defendants filed distinct written statements. The first two Defendants admitted that there had been transactions between them and the Plaintiff; but they alleged that although a sum of more than 10,000 had been paid to them on different occasions, the debt had been repaid. The third and fourth Defendants denied that there had ever been any transactions between them and the Plaintiff; they further stated that they were separate in mess and residence from the other Defendants and had no concern with them. In substance, they repudiated all liability under the transaction mentioned in the plaint. On these pleadings, four issues were raised in these terms: first, "whether the third and fourth Defendants are liable for the transaction, secondly, whether there was an adjustment of accounts between the parties on the 25th October 1908, and Rs. 2,115-9 was then found due by the Defendants and whether they had signed the Plaintiffs' account book in acknowledgment of that debt; thirdly, to what rate of interest are the Defendants liable? and fourthly, whether the debt had been paid off? When the case came up for trial before the Court of first instance, the matter was referred for disposal to a Commissioner on the assumption that the case was one for adjustment of accounts. This order was made apparently with the assent of both the parties. Before the Commissioner, the parties went into evidence in detail and the proceedings were much protracted. He ultimately submitted a report in favour of the Plaintiff. This report was rejected by the Court of first instance and the Court proceeded to consider the case on the merits. As regards the statement signed by the third Defendant, the Court came to the conclusion that it was not properly stamped and was not admissible in evidence. The document was consequently rejected and the result was that upon the remainder of the evidence on the record, no decree could be made in favour of the Plaintiff. Upon appeal that decree of dismissal has been affirmed by the District Judge. In the present appeal, the decree of the District Judge has been assailed on the ground that the procedure adopted by the Court of first instance was substantially erroneous and had produced an error in the decision of the case on the merits. The argument has been developed under three heads; first, that the statement of account should not have been thrown out in view of the provisions of sec. 36 of the Indian Stamp Act of 1899; and if the statement is accepted, it is good evidence against the third Defendant and affords sufficient foundation for a decree against him; secondly, that even if the statement is not held to be admissible, the first two Defendants are liable upon the admission made in their written statement, namely, that they had from time to time received large sums of money from the Plaintiff; and the burden of proof was upon them to establish that the debt had been repaid as alleged in their written statements; thirdly, that the report of the Commissioner should not have been rejected, that even if it was rejected, the Court should have either directed a fresh enquiry by the Commissioner or based its decision upon the entire evidence on the record, that is, the evidence taken in Court as also the evidence taken by the Commissioner. In our opinion, it is clear that the suit has not been properly tried.

SITARAM v. RAMA PROSAD RAM.

In so far as the statement alleged to have been signed by the third Defendant on the 25th October 1908 is concerned, the District Judge has found that it was as a matter of fact executed by the third Defendant. Its genuineness cannot consequently be questioned in second appeal. The only question for consideration is, whether it was inadmissible in evidence, because it was not stamped. On behalf of the Appellant it has been contended that it was not an acknowledgment within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act; and in support of this view reliance has been placed upon the decision in Galstaun v. Hutchison (1). We are not prepared to accept this contention as well-founded The statement is in these terms:—"Rs. 2,115 baki dena niti Kartick sudi ekom sambat 1965, Bakalam Gouri Sankar." This plainly is an acknowledgment that Rs. 2,115 was due at the date when the statement was signed. The terms of this statement are in material particulars different from those before the Court in the case of Galstaun v. Hutchison (1). This was clearly a document which was required to be stamped under the provisions of the Indian Stamp Act. But it was accepted in evidence by the Court of first instance, and in view of the provisions of sec. 36 of the Indian Stamp Act, it is plain that it should not have been, at a subsequent stage of the proceeding, rejected by the Court. [Punchanund v. Taramoni (2)]. The document must thus be treated as part of the evidence on the record; it is primâ facie good evidence against the third Defendant and affords foundation for a decree against him, unless he is able to explain how and why it came to be signed by him. He may possibly be able to show that he executed it under circumstances which do not make it binding as against him; this, therefore, will be the first point for consideration.

If it is found that the document binds Gouri Sankar, the next question will be, does it bind the other Defendants, that is, had Gouri Sankar authority to make an acknowledgment so as to prejudice their position. If this is answered in the negative, the case against these Defendants must be investigated on the accounts between the parties. As already stated, the Plaintiff founds his claim on the transactions mentioned in the plaint which, according to his allegation, culminated in a settlement of accounts on the 25th October 1908. If the Defendants or some of them are able successfully to repudiate that statement, the matter will be reopened; and in that event, the case will be retried on the basis of the pleadings. The first two Defendants admitted in their written statement that they received large sums from the Plaintiff from time to time. Their allegation is that these sums have been repaid. The burden of proof primarily rests upon them to establish the plea of payment.

As regards the report of the Commissioner, we may point out that the course adopted by the Court of first instance was not quite in accordance with law. The Defendants applied for the examination of the Commissioner as witness. The Court rejected the application, on the ground that the Defendants were not entitled to examine the Commissioner as a witness. The Court had apparently in view the provisions of r. 10 (2) of Or. XXVI of the Code of 1908 which corresponds to sec. 180 of the Code of 1859 and sec. 393 of the Code of 1882. That sub rule is in these terms :—"The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him (but not the evidence without the report) shall be evidence in the suit and form part of the record; but the Court or with the permission of the Court, any of the parties to the suit may examine the Commissioner personally in open Court touching any of the matters referred to him or mentioned in his report or as to his report or as to the manner in which he has made the investigation." It will be observed that the Commissioner may be examined with the permission of the Court by any of the parties to the suit. The object of this provision is obvious. The Legislature intended to afford protection to the Commissioner who is a quasi-judicial officer, and such protection is afforded on grounds of public policy so as to make it impossible for either of the parties to subject the Commissioner to a vexatious examination. As was explained by the Judicial Committee in the case of O'Rourke v. The Commissioners for Railways (3), and by the House of Lords in Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of works (4), a similar protection is afforded to every person occupying a quasi-judicial office; and in the provisions of sec. 121 of the Indian Evidence Act the Legislature in this Country has adopted the same principle. In the case before us, the permission of the Court was sought by one of the parties; that permission cannot be arbitrarily withheld. The District Judge has made it a matter of adverse comment against the Plaintiff that the Commissioner was not examined; apparently his attention was not drawn to the circumstance that the application for examination of the Commissioner had been made by one of the parties but had been refused by the Court of first instance. In the circumstances of this case, the application should have been granted, because one of the objections taken to the report of the Commissioner is that it does not give reasons for the conclusions. It is precisely in a case of this description that the examination of the Commissioner may prove useful. We must hold accordingly that the report of the Commissioner has been rejected on insufficient grounds and that an opportunity should have been afforded to the parties to clear up matters by the examination of the Commissioner.

(3) 15 App. Cases 371, (377) (1890).

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of the Courts below set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance to be retried in accordance with law. The Court will consider whether a Commissioner should or should not be appointed. If a Commissioner is appointed, the matter referred to him for investigation must be specified. We feel bound to add that a Commissioner was appointed by the Court of first instance originally, not so much for the benefit of the parties as to suit the convenience of the Court. The result has been that four years have been wasted without any appreciable advantage to the parties. The cost incurred up to this stage will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145—Non-examination of witness on either side—

JUTHAN SINGH v. RAM NARAIN SINGH.

Final order on documentary evidence dating back to ten years previous to date of proceeding—Magistrate's duty under cl. 4—Jurisdiction.

In a proceeding under sec. 145 Cr. P. C. no witness was examined on either side but the Magistrate decided the case on the documents filed before him, the latest of those documents dating back to about ten years before the date of the proceeding. It appeared that one of the parties was present in Court but was not examined:

Held—That the Magistrate was bound to take such further evidence as became necessary after a consideration of the documents, and the final order was without jurisdiction.

Cl. 4 of sec. 145 clearly provides that the Magistrate shall not exercise his jurisdiction under the section unless and until he has sufficient evidence before him.

This was a Rule granted on the 22nd of January 1914 against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra, dated the 28th of November 1913, declaring the Opposite Party to be entitled to possession of the disputed land until evicted therefrom in due course of law.

On the 14th October 1913, on receipt of a police report, the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra directed under sec. 144 Cr. P. C. Ram Narain Sing and Juthan Sing forbidding them to do anything on the disputed land and on the 5th November 1913, after hearing arguments drew up proceedings under sec. 145 Cr. P. C. in respect of land bearing survey Nos. 1054, 1056, 1086, and fixed the 28th November 1913 for hearing. Both sides filed written statements and the 28th November 1913 the final order was made. The material portion of the Magistrate's judgment is set at below.

"No witness is present on behalf of either party. As the case under sec. 145 Cr. P. C. entirely depends on documentary evidence I proceeded with the case. Heard arguments of both sides and also perused the documentary evidence.

"2nd party claims the land bearing survey Nos. 1054, 1086. The name of Ram Narain Sing 2nd party is entered in survey khatian in respect of plot No. 1034 as his zerait land. It appears that a civil suit was brought by Kesho Dharri and two brothers in respect of the said plot and it was decreed in favour of the 2nd party on the 12th July 1902 and upheld by the appellate Court on the 4th March 1903. In the said suit Gunraj was Defendant along with Ram Narain Sing 2nd party and stated that he Gunraj Sing had no interest or connection with plot No. 1054. In the face of the above fact, the police report that the 1st party got the said plot from Gunraj Sing falls to the ground and appears to me unreliable. As regards plot No. 1086 it is entered in the name of Sudarsan Sing as bataidar under Ram Narain Sing 2nd party in the survey khatian. Sudarsan Sing is said to be servant of Ram Narain Sing and does not claim the said plot.

"From the zurpeshgi deed as well as from the sale deed both dated 29th April 1902 executed by Krishna Ram in favour of 1st party it is quite clear that the eastern boundary of plot No. 1056 is plot No. 1086 belonging to Ram Narain Sing 2nd party. First party's own documents mentioned above go to prove that 2nd party is in possession of plot No. 1086.

"Under the above circumstances I am satisfied that Ram Narain Sing 2nd party is in possession of the land bearing survey Nos. 1054 and 1086 and that Juthan Sing 1st party is in possession of the land bearing survey No. 1056 and I declare them to be entitled to possession thereof until evicted therefrom in due course of law."

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:

This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Saran and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order under sec. 145 Cr. P. C, should not be set aside as made without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the trying Magistrate had not any evidence before him of later date than 1903 and his jurisdiction in this case only extends to deciding who was in actual possession on the date of his proceeding.

It is urged before us in showing course against the Rule that the mistake made by the Magistrate is merely a wrong inference or insufficient inference from the evidence that was before him, and this is an error of law and not a point of jurisdiction. But it is clearly a point which goes directly to the jurisdiction. There was evidence available. The Second Party was himself in Court. He had only to go into the witness box and say that the possession which is evidenced by these documents of 1903 is continuing up to the present date, and there being no rebutting evidence, the Magistrate would then have jurisdiction to decide the matter. Sec. 145, cl. 4 has clearly provided that the Magistrate shall not exercise that jurisdiction unless and until he has sufficient evidence before him. "The Magistrate shall then without reference to the merits of the claims of any of such parties to right to possess the subject of dispute, peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties, receive the evidence produced by them respectively, consider the effect of such evidence, take such further evidence, if any, as he thinks necessary." Now it is obvious when the Magistrate has taken these documents and considered their effect, he was bound to hold that they were not sufficient proof that the possession so evidenced had continued up to the date of his proceeding, and he was found to take such further evidence as thereby became necessary; and in these sec. 145 proceedings where the Magistrate acts suo motu in order to prevent breaches of the peace in his District, it is most important that he should have the power of directing the course of the proceedings, and it is certainly a defect in the exercise of his jurisdiction when he leaves the case on the record absolutely unproved.

The order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., must therefore be discharged, and if necessary fresh proceedings should be taken according to law.

Rule made absolute.

LALIT MOHAN SINGHA, Petitioner,
v.
KUNJO BEHARY GHOSH, Accused, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 250—Compensation to accused—Final order if should be contained in order of discharge or acquittal—Proviso, meaning of—Imprisonment in default of payment of fine, when to be ordered.

Where in discharging the accused under sec. 253, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate in his order of discharge declared the case to be vexatious and directed the complainant under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., to pay compensation to the accused subject to any cause being shown by him, and no cause being shown by the complainant the Magistrate the day after made his previous order absolute and further directed the complainant to suffer simple imprisonment for 30 days in default of payment of the compensation :

Held—That the Magistrate's order directing the payment of compensation was in strict compliance with sec. 250, Cr. P. C.

It is sufficient that the Magistrate fixed the compensation in his order of discharge. The proviso to sec. 250 clearly contemplates that the direction in the first paragraph of the section shall be considered as in the nature of a rule and that that rule shall not be made absolute until the complainant has shown cause.

HARU TANTI v. SATISH ROY (1) distinguished.

So far as the sentence of imprisonment in default of payment was concerned the High Court held that there was an obvious error and ordered it to be amended in terms that the compensation shall be recovered as if it were a fine and in the event of its not being so recovered there shall be simple imprisonment.

This was a Reference from the Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 26th of September 1913, under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., for revision of the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Barasat, dated the 8th and 9th of August 1913.

On the complaint of the Petitioner the Opposite Party was placed upon their trial before the Deputy Magistrate of Barasat on a charge under sec. 379, I. P. C. The Magistrate after trial discharged the accused under sec. 253, Cr. P. C., and passed an order to the following effect in the judgment: "I therefore declare the case to be vexatious and direct under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., that subject to any cause to be shown by him the complainant do pay Rs. 50 to the accused as compensation."

The day after the Magistrate passed the following order :—"No cause shown by complainant who was present yesterday. Above order made absolute, complainant to suffer simple imprisonment for 30 days, in default of payment of the compensation." The complainant thereupon moved the Sessions Judge of 24-Pergunnahs who under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., made a reference to the High Court recommending that the order should be set aside.

Babu Harendra Nath Mukerjee for the Accused Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference made to us by the learned Sessions Judge of the 24 Pergannahs in a case in which the Magistrate has directed compensation of 50 Rupees to be paid by the complainant to the accused on the ground that the case was frivolous and vexatious. There is also an error in the form of the order to which the learned Judge has drawn our attention, namely, that the order directs that in default of payment the accused is to suffer simple imprisonment for 30 days. This is an obvious error. Before dealing with the main question we direct that this portion of the order of the Magistrate be set aside and in lieu thereof it is said that the compensation shall be recovered as if it was a fine, and in the event of its not being so recovered there shall be simple imprisonment for 30 days. This is a mere formal amendment.

LALIT MOHAN SINGHA v. KUNJA BEHARY GHOSH.

But as regards the main question we are referred to the ruling in Haru Tanti v. Satish Ray (1) in which the facts are clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case, inasmuch as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate there had discharged the accused on the 3rd September 1910, called upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay 20 rupees to each of the accused as compensation under sec. 250, and then on the 6th of September directed the complainant to pay 10 rupees to each of the accused. The Judge in that case freely admitted that the course taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate did seem to be perfectly clear and reasonable but that his procedure might not fulfil the requirements of sec. 250, Cr. P. C, strictly speaking. On the face of the facts therein set out, that was so. But this is not at all the state of facts in the present case. In the present case, the Magistrate in his order of discharge and in the very same sentence in which he was discharging the accused declared the case to be a "mistake of law" and morally speaking maliciously false. But as the factum of the taking away of the kobala was true he held he could not prosecute under sec. 211, but that the case had been instituted against the accused for the purpose of vexing and harassing them and to force them to return the kobala; he therefore declared the case to be vexatious by his order of discharge and directed the complainant to pay Rs. 50 compensation to the accused subject to any cause to be shown by him. Now the learned Judge in the case in Haru Tanti v. Satish Ray (1), in giving reasons for their decision, may seem at first sight to lay down that the Magistrate must necessarily stop in the middle of his judgment and call upon the complainant and say "I cannot discharge the accused until you have shown cause why I should not discharge him." That cannot be the law, and if the learned Judges had intended to lay down any such proposition we should respectfully dissent from them. But we must apply the order which we find in the report to the circumstances of the case with which the learned Judges were dealing, and the law that they lay down that the requirements of sec. 250, Cr. P. C, must be fulfilled in every case is perfectly sound and good law; and we do not think that the learned Judges intended to lay down an impossible procedure in these cases. It is sufficient that the Magistrate fixed the compensation in his order of discharge. If the complainant was not in Court at the time the order of discharge was passed the Magistrate certainly would not be justified in keeping the accused person in custody with the charge hanging over him while the complainant is being fetched to show cause. It might be that the complainant could not be procured for a month. The words of the section are perfectly clear—the Magistrate may in his discretion by his order of discharge or acquital direct the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made to pay to the accused such compensation not exceeding 50 rupees as the Magistrate thinks fit,—and this is exactly the course that has been followed here. Then comes the proviso—before making any such direction the Magistrate shall record and consider any objection which the complainant may urge against the making of the direction. That clearly contemplates that the direction in the first paragraph shall be conditional or in the nature of a Rule and that that Rule shall not be made

The Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill.

The Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure which has been introduced in the Supreme Legislative Council proposes to introduce a very large number of amendments. It is fairly comprehensive and carefully drafted. Since the passing of Act V of 1898 a large number of judicial decisions have accumulated which it is necessary to incorporate by legislation. Some very useful changes which the actual working of the Code showed to be necessary have been embodied in the Bill but in several instances the changes proposed are so very radical that we cannot but view to them with misgivings.

The absence of a definition of an "accused" in the Code has very often presented many difficulties and raised complications especially on account of the fact that the Code of Criminal Procedure not merely provides for the procedure of trials for offences but deals with the prevention of crime and other incidental matters necessary for the maintainance of peace and order. The proposed change in sec. 340 of the Code practically supplies a definition of an 'accused' and under the new sec. 340 any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court or against whom proceedings are instituted under the Code in any such Court is an accused person. The inclusion within the category of accused persons of every one on whom a Criminal Court may exercise jurisdiction carries with it the disadvantage that an accused person cannot take oath and give evidence, but the Legislature has been careful enough to enact that persons against whom proceedings under secs. 133, 144, 145, 488, 552 of the Code may be pending will be competent to examine themselves as witnesses. This change is quite in accord with the trend of judicial opinion.

Another very important and necessary change introduced by the Bill is the addition of a new clause to sec. 418 whereby it is provided that when in the case of a trial by jury any person is sentenced to death any other person convicted in the same trial with the person so sentenced may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. We have had occasion to refer to this subject from time to time and have pointed out the gross anomaly of the existing law and we are glad to find that the Legislature has thought fit to set it right.

The law relating to the settlement of differences of opinion between Judges in the High Court in matters of appeal and revision is also sought to be changed and we think that the change is for the better. It has been uniformly held that the whole case is open before a third Judge hearing a reference under sec. 429 and he can differ from both the Judges who heard the case in the first instance. The Legislature now provides that in such cases of difference of opinion the matter will be re-heard before a Bench consisting of the first two Judges with the addition of a third Judge and the opinion of the majority will be the judgment of the Court.

It is a well-known proposition of law that every Court has inherent jurisdiction to take such steps as may be necessary to give effect to its order but when the law on any particular subject is codified the absence of a provision to this effect in express terms is sometimes misleading and in cl. 136 of the Bill it is proposed to enact a new sec. (561A) to the effect that nothing in the Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under the Code and to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. Even if superfluous this new provision will be of use in the practical application of the Code.

The change in law relating to first offenders is also an important one and we entirely approve of it. The new sec. 562 in the Bill very much enlarges the scope of the present section which contemplates only cases of convictions for offences punishable with 2 years' imprisonment. Under the new section Courts will have power to release offenders on probation in cases of conviction for offences punishable with 3 years' imprisonment and in cases under secs. 317, 325, 335, 381, I. P. C. It is now made clear that the section does not merely apply to the cases of youthful offenders. The period for which an offender may be released under this section has been extended from one to three years and in the case of a minor provision has been made that a bond for good behaviour shall be executed by a surety only.

Turning now to the other changes we find that it is intended in cl. 12 of the Bill to enact that a person refusing to attend and witness a search by a police officer shall be punishable under sec. 187, I. P. C., and the refusal of any person attending a search to sign the list of the articles seized shall not affect the legality of the search. We fail to see the necessity for this change and we believe that there has seldom been a case in which a search has been frustrated by the obstinacy of witnesses. The rule that a search shall be conducted in the presence of two respectable men and the search list shall be signed by them is one not merely of technicality but of substance in that it is enacted to guarantee the reality of the search and the discoveries made thereat. If the section is enacted in the form proposed in the Bill all that will be necessary for an unscrupulous police officer conducting a search in violation of law will be to step into the witness box and say that the persons called upon by him to witness the search refused to do so or that they refused to sign the search list. We do not see the wisdom of giving a weapon in the hands of the police which is open to serious misuse and the abuse of which may bring the procedure itself into discredit.

We also do not approve of the amendment of sec. 165 in the manner suggested in order to obviate, as the framers of the Bill put it, the difficulties arising from the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Ishwar Chandra Ghosh v. King-Emperor, 12 C. W. N. 1066, and Bajrangi Gope v. King-Emperor, 15 C. W. N. 343. In the first of the aforesaid cases it was held by Brett and Ryves, JJ., that sec. 94 of the Code cannot be taken to apply to the case of an accused person on his trial to whom a notice has been issued to produce an incriminating document. In the second case it was laid down by Holmwood and Sharfuddin, JJ., that sec. 165 of the Code does not authorise a general search by the police for stolen property in the house of an absconding offender. It speaks of a specific document or thing which may be the subject of summons or order under sec. 94. The new sub-section to be added to sec. 165 gives authority to a police officer to make a search if he has received information or has reasonable grounds for believing that anything necessary for the conduct of an investigation into any offence which he is authorised to investigate may be found within the limits of the police station of which he is in charge.

We fail to see how this sub-section will obviate the difficulty created by the case reported in 12 C. W. N. 1016 which deals with an accused undergoing trial in a Court and not one whose case is under investigation by the police. So far as the other ruling is concerned the framers of the Bill propose to overrule it and the change seems to us to be retrograde and quite uncalled for. The material words in the present section are "production of any document or thing necessary to the conduct of an investigation." The words, as they are, are wide enough. But the words proposed to be put in are "anything necessary for the conduct of an investigation." The language is indeed so very vague that no police-officer of any intelligence need feel the slightest difficulty in furnishing an excuse within its meaning for holding a search of any person's house. It will practically authorise an investigating police-officer to hold a roving enquiry with power to ransack peoples' houses on the mere chance of lighting upon something likely to assist him in the investigation. Such a law would be opposed to the very spirit of fair investigation embodied in a long line of English authorities too well-known to need citation.

We notice that cl. 9 of the Bill proposes to give power to a private person to arrest any person against whom a reasonable suspicion exists that he has committed a non-bailable and cognizable offence thus extending the present sec. 59 of the Code which authorises only the arrest of a person who commits a non-bailable and cognizable offence in view of the person arresting him. It is said that this change is made following the analogy of English law but we apprehend that this provision would be liable to abuse by men of the class of informers and spies and this makes us diffident about the expediency of extending the power of arrest by a private person in the manner contemplated in the Bill.

Cl. 27 of the Bill proposes to add a new section to sec. 162 permitting the use of a statement recorded under sec. 161 for corroborating the evidence of a witness when such statement or a part thereof is used to impeach the credit of such witness. The ruling in I. L. R. 36 Cal. 281: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 197, King-Emperor v. Fanindro, is to some extent responsible for this amendment but this decision is at variance with other decisions and we do not think that a sufficient case has been made out for the Legislature giving effect to this decision in preference to a plurality of others to the contrary. We discussed in detail this particular point, namely, the bearing of sec. 157 of the Evidence Act on sec. 162, Cr. P. C, quite recently (Vide 18 C. W. N. 98, 107N.) We propose to continue our examination of the provisions of this Bill in subsequent issues.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

The definition of 'easement' in the Easements Act applies just as much to a projection of eaves in a dry country where there is no discharge of rainwater as in a country where there is an abundant rainfall and there is discharge of water (Chotalal Haria Chand v. Manilal Bhagalbhai, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 491).

If the Defendant has acquired an easement from a projection of eves ten inches over the Plaintiff's land he can raise the height of those eaves so long as he does not throw an increased burden upon the servient tenement. That is provided by sec. 23 of the Easements Act, (Harvey v. Walter, L. R. 8 C. P. 162.)

Limitation—Art. 181.

DALTO ATMARAM v. SHANKER, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 32.

A consent decree provided for satisfaction of the decretal debt by instalments. Three years from the due date of the last instalment becoming payable expired and an application was made for a decree absolute for sale of the property of the Defendant under the terms of a consent decree.

Held—That this was an application under the Civil Procedure Code and as such fell within the scope of Art. 181 of the Limitation Act. (Amlook Chand Panack v. Sarat Chandra Mukherji, I. L. R 38 Cal. 913).

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1899)—Compensation.

DAYA KHUSHAL v. THE ASSISTANT COLLECTOR, SURAT, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 37.

Where land is acquired for the purpose of quarrying what the Court has to determine is the market value of this land and it may be that a willing purchaser would increase the price otherwise payable for the land by reason of its adaptability as a quarry and this is a matter which ought to be considered in awarding compensation.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD, AND CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2970 OF 1911. KALA GAJI AND OTHERS Defendants Appellants v. MAHESWAR CHOWDHURY, Plaintiff Respondent. 8th April 1914.

Ejectment—Under-raiyat—Denial of landlord's title—Previous rent suit.

The Plaintiff was the gomasta of the landlord of the village. He obtained certain lands from the landlord and let them out to the Defendant. In a previous rent suit brought by the Plaintiff against the Defendant, the Defendant pleaded that he always paid his rent to the Plaintiff for the benefit of the landlord and that the Plaintiff was nothing more than a gomasta, and he was a raiyat holding directly under the landlord. That rent suit was decided in his favour and the Plaintiff sued again, alleging that on establishment of his title as raiyat he could eject the Defendant without notice as trespasser.

Held, that the Plaintiff having pleaded that the Defendant was an under-raiyat and the Defendant not having denied tenancy in the land but having stated that he held it on a higher basis he still remained an under-raiyat and could only be ejected upon notice.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 19—Acknowledgment of liability.

The appeal arose out of a suit on a hatchitta, instituted on the 10th November, 1904. The suit was dismissed on some preliminary point but was remanded by the High Court for trial on the merits. The lower Court disbelieved the hatchitta but gave the Plaintiffs a decree on the hatchitta of the previous year, and held that the suit was saved from limitation by reason of certain acknowledgments made in a letter Ex. 4 c. The letter said that the writer after looking into the account would sign it.

Held, that was not an acknowledgment of liability on an account stated.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before D. CHATTERJEE AND CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO 3109 OF 1911. BAISNAB CHARAN DE AND ANOTHER, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. RAMKUMAR KOR AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 22nd April 1914.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 85, sub sec. 2—Under-raiyati lease for term exceeding 9 years erroneously registered if void—Previous possession as tenant not claimed.

This was a suit for khas possession by the Plaintiffs of a certain piece of land. Plaintiffs' case was that Defendants Nos. 12 and 13 had raiyati right in the land and they granted a sub-lease of the land to Plaintiffs by a patta dated 26th Sravan 1270 M. E. The lease purported to be a kayemi lease and was registered. Defendants were trespassers upon the land in the sense that their right in the land had been sold away in execution of a rent decree obtained against them by Defendants Nos. 12 and 13 and they had not been ousted from the land. Plaintiffs averred that Defendants Nos. 1 and 5 in collusion with Defendants Nos. 6 and 11 refused to give up possession of the land and dispossessed the Plaintiffs in Bhadra 1270 M. E. by destroying the standing crops upon the land.

Both the lower Courts dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit and held that the under-raiyati lease to the Plaintiffs, although registered, being for a term exceeding 9 years was wholly void and did not confer any title to the Plaintiffs. The lower Courts further held that Plaintiffs were not admittedly in possession of the land by virtue of their lease and therefore they had no subsisting interest in the land which they could prove by other means independent of the written lease which was void being for a term exceeding 9 years. They further held that the said lease being void Plaintiffs' title could be questioned by any one, namely, the superior landlord, or the raiyat or trespassers like the Defendants.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das (with him Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarti) for the Appellants submitted that an under-raiyati lease for a term exceeding 9 years was merely voidable and the lease having been admitted to registration it should have been held valid at least up to the term of 9 years. There was nothing in sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act which would make the sub-lease in question wholly void. Defendant being trespassers on the land were not competent to dispute Plaintiffs' title.

[D. CHATTERJEE, J.—The decision in 17 C. W. N. 59 has settled the point.]

That case did not decide the broad question whether the sub lease would be wholly void.

Babu Kshitish Chandra Sen for the Responde was not called upon.

Held, that the point in this Appeal was covered by the decision of Jarip Khan v. Dorta Bewa reported in 17 C. W. N. 59.

H. C. S. Appeal dismissed.

LALIT MOHAN SINGHA v. KUNJA BEHARY GHOSH.

absolute until the complainant has shown cause, for, as we have pointed out, it is quite impossible to imagine that in every case the complainant will be in Court at the time the order of discharge is passed. We think that the case of Haru Tanti v. Satish Roy (1) is clearly distinguishable from the present case, and that not only was the Magistrate's order in this case reasonable and proper, but that he complied strictly with the requirements of sec. 250, Cr. P. C.

We therefore direct that the order be confirmed subject to the formal amendment which we have directed in the earlier part of our judgment.

V of the China and Corea Order-in Council 1904, the Supreme Court of China and Corea has civil and criminal jurisdiction over a "foreigner" as such have no application to "British protected persons" who even when in fact natural born foreigners are "British subjects" as defined by Art. III and so subject to the jurisdiction of that Court under cl. (1) to Art. V.

The accused, a natural born subject of the Ameer of Afghanistan, was duly enlisted and enrolled in a British Indian regiment, took the oath of allegiance to his Majesty and made a solemn declaration undertaking among other things to go wherever ordered by land or sea, and whilst serving with the detachment of that regiment which was encamped on Shameen Island at Canton as a guard of the Concession, was alleged to have murdered a Subadar of that regiment. The Acting Consul at Canton, who also served as Judge under Art. XIX of the Order-in-Council, gave evidence (which was uncontradicted) "that the place of murder was within his jurisdiction and that the jurisdiction exercised at Canton on Shameen was the same ex-territorial jurisdiction as was exercised throughout China by the Supreme Court, that Indian soldiers enjoy His Majesty's protection in Shameen, Canton, and the Court exercises jurisdiction over them, and that consular protection extends to trying persons and protecting them if they are improperly arrested."

IBRAHIM v. THE KING.

Held—That sec. 4 (1) of the Foreign Jurisdictions Act 1890 did not make this evidence inadmissible to prove that by "usage, sufferance or other lawful means" His Majesty has jurisdiction at Canton.

That the accused being, during his service in the Indian Army, subject to military law was entitled to His Majesty's protection and was a "British protected person" within Art. III.

When the Crown lawfully enlists in its forces aliens along with British subjects and requires of them the same service, loyalty and allegiance as are the duties of British enlisted subjects, it extends to them the same protection in a foreign country where all are serving together in the armed forces of His Majesty.

Protection enjoyed by virtue of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act 1890, "or otherwise," as mentioned in Art. III, includes that derived from other statutes, Imperial or Indian, applicable to the person in question.

Quære:—Whether the Court could take judicial notice of the political change in China in considering the question of jurisdiction.

Quære:—Whether it may not be reasonably inferred from the practice (which is a matter of public knowledge) of enlisting native Afghans in the Indian Army whereby they are de facto brought under the authority of His Majesty, that the Ameer does in fact consent to such enlistment with its consequences, so as to bring such enlisted Afghans within the terms of cl. (4) Art. V, i.e., "foreigners with respect to whom any State, King, Chief or Government whose subjects they are consents to the exercise of power or authority by His Majesty."

The officer commanding the detachmen who spoke to the accused shortly after the occurrence, deposed to having asked the accused why he had done such a senseless act—not thereby meaning to convey a threat or inducement—and to the accused having replied that he was being abused by the deceased three or four days and that without a doubt he had killed him. The Judicial Committee found that the words of the officer though formally a question were really an exclamation of dismay.

Held—That the prosecution having by the evidence of this officer proved to the satisfaction of the trial Judge that the statement of the accused was voluntary in the sense that it had not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority, its admission in evidence was not in breach of the long established rule of English Criminal law which makes statements obtained from the accused by pressure of authority and fear of consequences inadmissible in evidence and which casts on the prosecution the onus of proving that the statement relied on was voluntary.

On the question whether the statement should not have been excluded from evidence on the ground of its having been made by a person in custody in answer to a question put by a person having authority over him and having custody of him through his subordinates.

Held, on a review of English authorities, that the English law on the point was still unsettled, some Judges being of opinion that such a statement is admissible in evidence without exception, whilst others treat its exclusion from evidence as a matter for the judge's discretion depending largely on his view of the impropriety of the questioner's conduct and the general circumstances of the case.

IBRAHIM v. THE KING.

That the trial Judge in admitting this evidence decided in accordance with what at any rate was a "probable opinion" of the present law if it was not actually the better opinion, and his so doing was not a violation of "the principles of natural justice," calling for His Majesty's interference.

That even if the evidence was admissible in the exercise of the trial Judge's discretion, that discretion in the present case was not shown to have been exercised improperly.

With reference to Act XXXV (2) of the China and Corea Order-in-Council which provides that, subject to the provisions of that order, criminal jurisdiction under the order shall, as far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principle of and in conformity with English law for the time being:

Held—That in the absence of any provision in the order on the point modifying or excluding the principles and practice of English law, the question of the admissibility of the statement of the accused might justly be treated as if English criminal law and practice applied to the criminal jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Hong-Kong, subject, however, to the following reservations · (1) That such law and practice are not to be considered as in all respects and particulars binding on that Court; (2) That regard must be had to the necessary distinction that must be drawn between the criminal procedure of a European country whose jurisprudence has a defined history extending over many centuries and that applicable to a British possession in the Far East, where a mixed and fluctuating population is subject to the administration of law by European Judges whose duty it is to have regard alike to the principle of British justice and to the necessities of local order; (3) That the words "so far as circumstances admit" may well (i) refer to absence of facilities at Hong Kong for formal proof of Statutes passed and administrative orders made in various parts of His Majesty's dominions, and (ii) be intended to cover some necessary departures from the formalities only as distinguished from the essentials of English justice, when as in the present case a force detailed for the protection of European residents beyond His Majesty's dominions in the midst of a population often turbublent and at the particular time disturbed, was itself disturbed by such a crime as the murder of a Subadar by a native private in the ranks.

That in view of the position which the Privy Council held in regard to criminal proceedings, the Judicial Committee did not in this case decide what the rule of English law should be with regard to the admissibility in evidence of statements made by an accused person in answer to a question put by a person in authority in whose custody he is, that should be left to a Court which exercises the revising functions of a general Court of criminal appeal.

CLIFFORD v. THE KING-EMPEROR (23) referred to.

The Privy Council cannot in a criminal matter allow an appeal on grounds that would not have sufficed for granting leave to appeal. Misdirection as such or irregularity as such will not suffice. There must be something which in the particular case deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial and the protection of the law, or which, in general, tends to divert the due and orderly administration of law into a new course, which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future.

RIEL v. THE QUEEN (24), In re DILLET' (25) referred to.

The jurisdiction of the Privy Council in appeals in criminal matters involves a general consideration of the evidence and of the circumstances of the case in order to place the irregularities complained of, if substantiated, in their proper relation to the whole matter.

Held, upon a review of the evidence, that the preponderance of unquestioned over the questioned evidence (the accused's statement to the commanding officer) was so great, that it was impossible, at any rate highly improbable, that the Jury was substantially influenced by that evidence. Therefore, the fact that the Judge left the objectionable evidence for the consideration of the jury without any warning to disregard it did not justify the conclusion that there was any miscarriage of justice, substantial, grave or otherwise.

Semble :— Where it is highly improbable that evidence improperly admitted can have had any influence on the verdict of the jury, the Appellate Court will be justified in refusing to interfere.

MAKIN v. A. G. FOR NEW SOUTH WALES (29) considered.

This was an appeal by special leave from a conviction for murder and sentence of death. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordship's judgment.

Mr. A. Romer Macklin, for the Appellant, submitted that he was a subject of the Ameer of Afghanistan and was therefore not amenable to the jurisdiction of His Britannic Majesty's Court. The Treaty of Tientsin, 1858, conferred criminal jurisdiction in China on His Majesty over British subjects only. The Crown had failed to prove that the Court had jurisdiction over the Appellant. The Full Court wrongly decided that he was a British subject within Arts. 3 and 50 of the China and Korea Order-in-Council. It was not shewn that the Crown had acquired jurisdiction from the Republic of China or the Ameer. The Indian Legislature had no jurisdiction to enlist foreigners in the army.

[Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., for the Crown interposed and said that he relied upon "de facto service" under secs. 2 and 10 of the Indian Army Act.]

Again, the confession alleged to have been made by the Appellant to Major Barrett was inadmissible and if that had not been wrongly admitted the jury would probably have acquitted him as they did at the first trial. Reliance was placed on Makin v. A. G. for New South Wales (29).

Their Lordships reserved judgment without hearing Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Hansell who appeared for the Crown.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by land or sea. On September 4th 1912, he was a private serving with the detachment of that regiment which was encamped on Sha-mien or Shameen Island at Canton as guard of the Concession. On Shameen are situated the various European Settlements including the British. About 10-30 p.m. Subadar Ali Shafa, a native officer in the same regiment, was murdered. Ibrahim was charged with the crime, tried before the Supreme Court of Hong Kong, and convicted. He was sentenced to death, but sentence was respited pending the hearing of this appeal, which is brought by special leave in formâ pauperis. His grounds are two: first, that the jurisdiction of the Court was not established, and, second, that there was a grave miscarriage of Justice by reason of the misreception of evidence.

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of China and Corea is conferred by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, and by the China and Corea Order-in-Council, 1904 and includes criminal jurisdiction. Art. V provides that: "the jurisdiction conferred by this order extends to the persons and matters following, in so far as by Treaty, grant, usage, sufferance or other lawful means, His Majesty has jurisdiction in relation to such matters and things, that is to say:

"(1) British subjects, as herein defined, within the limits of this order . . . ;

"(3) foreigners, in the cases and according to the conditions specified in this order and not otherwise;

"(4) foreigners, with respect to whom any State, King, Chief or Government, whose subjects or under whose protection they are, has, by any treaty as herein defined or otherwise, agreed with His Majesty for, or consents to the exercise of power or authority by His Majesty."

By Art. VI it is provided that "all His Majesty's jurisdiction, exerciseable in China or Corea for the hearing or determination of criminal or civil matters . . . shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of this Order in Council and not otherwise."

The contention, therefore, is that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, conferred by and only exerciseable in accordance with the Order-in-Council, was not shown to extend, and therefore for the purposes of this case, did not extend, to Ibrahim, who is admittedly an Afghan and a subject of the Ameer.

Art. III of the Order defines a "British subject" thus: "British subject includes a British protected person, that is to say, a person, who either (a) is a native of any protectorate of His Majesty and is for the time being in China or Corea, or (b) by virtue of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, or otherwise enjoys His Majesty's protection in China or Corea."

There was no evidence of any treaty or other instrument by which the Ameer had agreed with the Crown for the exercise by His Majesty of power or authority over his subjects; but it may be reasonably inferred from the practice of enlisting native Afghans in Indian native regiments, whereby they are de facto brought under the authority of His Majesty, a practice which is matter of public knowledge, that the Ameer does in fact consent to such enlistment with its consequences. Whether or not this suffices to bring such enlisted Afghans within the terms of Art. V. (4) of the Order-in-Council, "foreigners, with respect to whom any State, King, Chief or Government whose subjects . . they are . . .

consents to the exercise of power or authority by His Majesty," it is not necessary for their Lordships now to determine.

The British Vice-Consul, who in September 1912 was also Acting Consul at Canton, is Judge of a Provincial Court, held at Canton under Art. XIX. of the Order, which is a Court of Record, and by Art. XXII. exercises "all His Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, not under this Order vested exclusively in the Supreme Court." He was called as a witness at Ibrahim's trial and deposed that the place of the murder was entirely within his jurisdiction; that the jurisdiction exercised at Canton on Shameen is the same exterritorial jurisdiction as is exercised throughout China by the Supreme Court; that it is still in force; that "the Indian soldiers enjoy His Majesty's protection in Shameen, Canton, and the Court exercises jurisdiction over them"; and that consular protection extends to trying persons and protecting them if they are improperly arrested." This evidence was not modified under cross-examination or contradicted in any way by evidence for the defence. The witness went on to say that he conducted the preliminary examination in this case and considered it expedient that the case should be sent for trial to Hong Kong (an opinion in which Major Barret, commanding the detachment, concurred), thus satisfying the provisions of Art. L. of the Order with regard to the transfer of the case from Shameen to Hong Kong.

Their Lordships are of opinion that s. 4 (1) of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, does not prevent this evidence from being admissible upon the question and that in the absence of contradiction and of any grounds for real doubt, this evidence by itself satisfied all the conditions of proof requisite to establish the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Hong Kong. It shows that, by usage, sufferance or other lawful "means," His Majesty has jurisdiction at Canton; that it in fact extends to persons of the class to which Ibrahim belongs; that in the case of Ibrahim himself it was exercised, so far as the preliminary examination went; and that its exercise, both generally and in this particular case, was suffered by the Chinese authorities holding office de facto, and that they made no objection. Incidentally it disposes of a point taken in argument, that whatever jurisdiction may have been ceded, agreed or suffered by the Imperial Government of China, it could not be deemed to persist by sufferance or otherwise since recent changes in the constitution and form of government of China took place. Even if such change had been proved, as it was not, or even if the Court could under the circumstances in any way take judicial notice of a political change in a neighbouring State, this evidence was sufficient to show that no change in the exercise of the jurisdiction and no diminution of the usage or the sufferance of it had occurred. It was suggested that the Vice-Consul was not testifying to the exercise of jurisdiction and sufferance thereof in fact, but was only expressing his opinion that jurisdiction ought to extend to such a case as Ibrahim's, which he said was the first case committed to the Supreme Court from Canton. The judges of the Supreme Court, on the hearing of the points reserved to the Full Court, did not so take it, neither do their Lordships, and were it not for the gravity and importance of the case they would not think it necessary to pursue this question of jurisdiction further.

Ibrahim v. The King.

Was Ibrahim a British-protected person because, "by virtue of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, or otherwise he enjoys His Majesty's protection in China"? The words "or otherwise" must at least include the operation of other statutes, Imperial or Indian, applicable to the person in question, and the various legislative provisions referred to in the elaborate and valuable judgments in the Court below amply establish that, after enrolment and during service in the Indian Army, Ibrahim was a soldier of the Crown and subject to military law while stationed at Shameen. That being so, their Lordships think that it needs no express provision to entitle him to His Majesty's protection. When the Crown lawfully enlists in its forces aliens along with British subjects and requires of them the same service, loyalty and allegiance as are the duties of British enlisted subjects, it extends to them the same protection in a foreign country, where all are serving together in the armed forces of His Majesty. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that Ibrahim as of right "enjoyed His Majesty's protection" in China, and in virtue thereof was subject also to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of China.

Lastly, under this head reliance was placed on the words "and not otherwise" in Art. V (3) of the Order. These words do not import that, if a person is in fact a foreigner, he can only be brought under the jurisdiction set forth in the Order "in the cases and according to the conditions specified therein." They are not words limiting other provisions by which a person is clearly brought within the jurisdiction. They mean that when a "foreigner," as such, is to be brought within the jurisdiction, he can be so dealt with only in the cases and according to the provisions specified, but when a person is brought under the jurisdiction as "a British-protected person," and the fact that he is a foreigner is only accidental, the limitation contained in the words "and not otherwise" in Art. V (3), does not apply.

Their Lordships think it unnecessary further to pursue the points argued as to the necessity for proof of the Treaty of Tientsin, 1858; the validity of the proof of the Indian Army Act, 1911 (which, for reasons hereinafter appearing, is so formal a matter as to be immaterial on the present appeal); the conditions under which the Crown may enlist aliens in its Indian forces; and the effect of the preamble and recitals in the China and Corea Order in Council, 1904.

The second ground for this appeal is as follows:—Some 10 or 15 minutes after Subadar Ali Shafa was shot Major Barrett, the officer commanding the detachment, who had been summoned from a little distance, arrived at the camp. He found Ibrahim in custody and in bonds, sitting on the step of the guard-room. "When I got up to Ibrahim," says the Major, "I said, 'Why have you done such a senseless act?' I said nothing else. Did not threaten him in any way. I offered no inducement of any kind, nor did anybody else to my knowledge or in my presence . . . when I spoke to accused I was sorry for him because he had killed the Subadar." This last observation their Lordships treat only as evidence of the way in which the question was put, tending to show that it did not convey a command or inducement to Ibrahim of any kind. In truth, except that Major Barrett's words were formally a question they appear to have been indistinguishable from an exclamation of dismay on the part of a humane officer, alike concerned for the position of the accused, the fate of the deceased, and the credit of the regiment and the service. To this Ibrahim replied in Hindustani, "Some three or four days he has been abusing me; without a doubt I killed him."

It is argued that Ibrahim's statement was inadmissible, (a) as not being a voluntary statement but obtained by pressure of authority and fear of consequences; and (b) in any case as being the answer of a man in custody to a question put by a person having authority over him as his commanding officer and having custody of him through the subordinates who had made him prisoner.

On this it becomes incumbent on their Lordships to consider the rule of English criminal law applicable to such circumstances. This somewhat exceptional duty arises because, by Art. XXXV (2) of the China and Corea Order in Council, it is provided that "subject to the provisions of this order criminal jurisdiction under this order shall, as far as circumstances admit, be exercised on the principles of and in conformity with English law for the time being." There are no provisions in the order material on this point as modifying or excluding the principles and practice of English law, and their Lordships think that the matter may be justly treated as if English criminal law and practice applied to the criminal jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Hong Kong. At the same time they are not to be understood to decide, that such law and practice are in all respects and particulars binding on that Court, nor do they overlook in any way the necessary distinction that must sometimes be drawn between the criminal procedure of a European country, whose jurisprudence has a defined history extending over many centuries, and that applicable to a British possession in the Far East, where a mixed and fluctuating population is subject to the administration of the law by European Judges, whose duty it is to have regard alike to the principles of British justice, and to the necessities of local order. Nor do their Lordships fail to observe that the words, "so far as circumstances admit" may well be applicable to such circumstances in the present case as the facts, that the facilities for formal proof of statutes passed and administrative orders made in various parts of His Majesty's dominions cannot be as copious in Hong Kong as they are in this country, and further that when, as in the present case, a force detailed for the protection of Europeans resident beyond His Majesty's dominions in the midst of a population, often turbulent and at the particular time disturbed, is itself disturbed by such a crime as the murder of a Subadar by a native private in the ranks, such words may well cover and be designed to cover some necessary departure from the formalities only as distinguished from the essentials of English justice.

It has long been established as a positive rule of English criminal law, that no statement by an accused is admissible in evidence against him unless it is shown by the prosecution to have been a voluntary statement, in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority. The principle is as old as Lord Hale. The burden of proof in the matter has been decided by high authority in recent times in R. v. Thompson (1), a case, which, it is important to observe, was considered by the trial judge before he admitted the evidence. There was, in the present case, Major Barrett's affirmative evidence that the prisoner was not subjected to the pressure of either fear or hope in the sense mentioned. There was no evidence to the contrary. With R. v. Thompson (1) before him, the learned Judge must be taken to have been satisfied with the prosecution's evidence that the prisoner's statement was not so induced either by hope or fear, and, as is laid down in the same case, the decision of this question, albeit one of fact, rests with the trial Judge. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the admission of this evidence was no breach of the aforesaid rule.

(1) [1893] 2 Q. B. 12.

IBRAHIM v. THE KING.

The Appellant's objection was rested on the two bare facts that the statement was preceded by and made in answer to a question, and that the question was put by a person in authority and the answer given by a man in his custody. This ground, in so far as it is a ground at all, is a more modern one. With the growth of a police force of the modern type, the point has frequently arisen, whether, if a policeman questions a prisoner in his custody at all, the prisoner's answers are evidence against him, apart altogether from fear of prejudice or hope of advantage inspired by a person in authority.

It is to be observed that logically these objections all go to the weight and not to the admissibility of the evidence. What a person having knowledge about the matter in issue says of it is itself relevant to the issue as evidence against him. That he made the statement under circumstances of hope, fear, interest or otherwise strictly goes only to its weight. In an action of tort evidence of this kind could not be excluded when tendered against a tortfeasor, though a jury might well be told as prudent men to think little of it. Even the rule which excludes evidence of statements made by a prisoner, when they are induced by hope held out, or fear inspired by a person in authority, is a rule of policy. "A confession forced from the mind by the flattery of hope or by the torture of fear comes in so questionable a shape, when it is to be considered as evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it." [R. v. Warwickshall (2)]. It is not that the law presumes such statements to be untrue, but from the danger of receiving such evidence Judges have thought it better to reject it for the due administration of justice. [R. v. Baldry (3)]. Accordingly, when hope or fear were not in question, such statements were long regularly admitted as relevant, though with some reluctance and subject to strong [illegible] as to their weight.

In the earlier part of the nineteenth century there was strong judicial authority for admitting a prisoner's statements, even though obtained by constables, who had him in custody, by considerable insistence in the way of interrogation [R. v. Thornton (4), R. v. Wild (5), R. v. Kerr (6)]; and even so late as R. v. Baldry (3), a case decided on the rule as to hope and fear, Parke B. observes at p. 445, "by the law of England, in order to render a confession admissible in evidence, it must be perfectly voluntary and there is no doubt that any inducement in the nature of a promise or of a threat held out by a person in authority vitiates a confession. The decisions to that effect have gone a long way: whether it would not have been better to have allowed the whole to go to the jury it is now too late to inquire, but I think there has been too much tenderness towards prisoners in this matter. I confess that I cannot look at the decisions without some shame, when I consider what objections have prevailed to prevent the reception of confessions in evidence . . . justice and commonsense have too frequently been sacrificed at the shrine of mercy." The law, however, was considered to be fairly settled (see R. v. Cheverton (7) and R. v. Reason (8), R. v. Fennell (9), and the references collected in the note to R. v. Brackenbury (10). When Judges excluded such evidence, it was rather explained by their observations on the duties of policemen than justified by their reliance on rules of law (e.g., R v. Pettit (11), R. v. Berriman (12), a case when the accused was not yet in custody)

In 1885 R. v. Gavin (13) re opened these questions. Then A. L. Smith J, excluded a statement made to a constable, who questioned his prisoner in a way that amounted to cross examination. He laid it down that a constable has no right to ask questions without expressly saying that the answers cannot be relevant evidence. In 1893, Day, J., [R. v. Brackenbury (10)] declined to follow this decision, in a case when the question and answer preceded the arrest, and Cave, J., in R. v. Male (14), rejected a statement made by a prisoner in custody to a constable who had cross-examined him, saying merely that the police have no right to manufacture evidence, though in 1896, [R. v. Goddard (15)], he appears to have concurred in the admissibility of very similar matter. Two years later, Hawkins, J., [R. v. Miller (16)], allowed the accused's answers to be proved against him when he had been cross-examined before arrest, saying that he did not expressly dissent from R. v. Gavin (13), but that "every case must be decided according to the whole of its circumstances," but in 1898 (R. v. Histed (17)], he excluded the answers of a prisoner in custody, on the authority of R. v. Gavin (13), saying that the constable was entrapping the prisoner and trying by a trick to set a broken-down case on its legs again. Since then the current of authority has run the other way. In Rogers v. Hawken (18), a case of questions before arrest, a Divisional Court, consisting of Russell, L. C. J, and Mathew, J, judges not prone to lean against a prisoner, held that the statement was admissible and observed that "R. v. Male (14), must not be taken as laying down that a statement of the accused to a police constable without threat or inducement is not admissible. There is no rule of law excluding statements made in such circumstances," and in R. v. Best (19), the Court of Criminal Appeal (including Channell, J.) held that "it is quite impossible to say that the fact that a question of this kind has been asked invalidates the trial," adding that R. v Gavin (13), is not a good decision. however, it is to be observed that the actual decision was that under the proviso of sec. 4 of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, the Court would not interfere in that case. It did not expressly declare that statements of an accused, when in custody, in reply to a policeman's questions, are always admissible evidence against him unless they are rendered involuntary by reason of hope or fear induced by a person in authority. The point has been before the Court of Criminal Appeal more recently. In 1905 (R. v. Knight and Thayre (20), statements were rejected, because obtained from the accused before arrest by means of a long interrogation by a person in authority over him. Channell, J., adverted thus to the case of questions put by a constable after arresting—" when he has taken anyone into custody . . . he ought not to question the prisoner . . . I am not aware of any distinct rule of evidence that, if such improper questions are asked, the answers to them are inadmissible, but there is clear authority for saying that the judge at the trial may in his discretion refuse to allow the answers to be given in evidence." The same learned judge in R. v. Booth and Jones (21), in 1910 observes, " the moment you have decided to charge him and practically got him into custody, then, inasmuch as a judge even cannot ask a question or a Magiste, it is ridiculous to suppose that a policeman can. But there is no actual authority yet that if a policeman does ask a question it is inadmissable ; what happens is that the Judge says it is not advisable to press the matter " ; and of this, Darling, J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal, observes " the principle was put very clearly by Channell, J."

The learned trial judge in the present case, in addition to the argument of counsel for the defence, had before him a case decided in 1908 by the full Court at Hong Kong, R. v. Wong Chiu Kwai (22), in which the English authorities up to that time were very fully examined Before admitting the evidence of the appellant's statement he consulted Gompartz, J., who had been a party to that decision, and accordingly it is clear that he admitted the statement only after the fullest consideration. The English law is still unsettled, strange as it may seem, since the point is one that constantly occurs in criminal trials. Many Judges, in their discretion, exclude such evidence, for they fear that nothing less than the exclusion of all such statements can prevent improper questioning of prisoners by removing the inducement to resort to it. This consideration does not arise in the present case. Others, less tender to the prisoner or more mindful of the balance of decided authority, would admit such statements, nor would the Court of Criminal Appeal quash the conviction thereafter obtained, if no substantial miscarriage of justice had occurred. If, then, a learned Judge, after anxious consideration of the authorities, decides in accordance with what is at any rate a " probable opinion " of the present law, if it is not actually the better opinion, it appears to their Lordships that his conduct is the very reverse of that " violation of the principles of natural justice " which has been said to be the ground for advising His Majesty's interference in a criminal matter. If, as appears even on the line of authorities which the trial Judge did not follow, the matter is one for the Judge's discretion, depending largely on his view of the impropriety of the questioner's conduct and the general circumstances of the case, their Lordships think, as will hereafter be seen, that in the circumstances of this case his discretion is not shown to have been exercised improperly.

Having regard to the particular position in which their Lordships stand to criminal proceedings, they do not propose to intimate what they think the rule of English law ought to be, much as it is to be desired that the point should be settled by authority, so far as a general rule can be laid down where circumstances must so greatly vary. That must be left to a Court which exercises, as their Lordships do not, the revising functions of a general Court of Criminal Appeal [Clifford v. The King-Emperor (23)]. Their Lordships' practice has been repeatedly defined. Leave to appeal is not granted "except where some clear departure from the requirements of justice" exists [Riel v. The Queen (24)], nor unless "by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done" [In re Dillet (25)]. It is true that these are cases of applications for special leave to appeal, but the Board has repeatedly treated applications for leave to appeal and the hearing of criminal appeals as being upon the same footing [Riel's case, ubi supra; ex parte Deeming (26)]. The Board cannot give leave to appeal where the grounds suggested could not sustain the appeal itself; and conversely, it cannot allow an appeal on grounds that would not have sufficed for the grant of permission to bring it. Misdirection, as such, even irregularity as such, will not suffice [Ex parte Macrea (27)]. There must be something which, in the particular case, deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial and the protection of the law, or which, in general, tends to divert the due and orderly administration of the law into a new course, which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future [R. v. Bertrand (28)].

Their Lordships were strongly pressed in argument with the case of Makin v. A. G. for New South Wales (29), in which Lord Herschell, L. C, delivered an elaborate exposition of the principles on which a Court of Criminal Appeal should act. Although in that case these observations are technically obiter dicta, since the Board held that the evidence complained of at the trial had been rightly admitted, they are most weighty in themselves, and they have since been adopted by the Court of Criminal Appeal in Rex v. Dyson (30) though with some later qualification. In Makin's case, however, their Lordships had to determine the true construction of sec. 423 of the New South Wales Act, 46 Victoria, No. 17, which in defining a strictly appellate jurisdiction in criminal matters, provided "that no conviction or judgment thereon shall be reversed, arrested or avoided in any case so stated, unless for some substantial wrong or other miscarriage of justice." It was held there that to transfer the decision of the guilt of the accused from a jury, acting on oral testimony, to an Appellate tribunal, possessing that testimony only in writing, cannot be said to involve no miscarriage of justice, and hence that a Court of Criminal appeal is not entitled to dismiss the appeal by retrying the case on shorthand-notes, or by holding that, if the trial judge had excluded the evidence, which he wrongly received, the verdict would probably have been the same. In other words such a proviso is not to be construed as investing a statutory Court of criminal review with the functions of the original trial Judge and jury. This is a very different matter from the duty of this Board in advising His Majesty as to the exercise of his prerogative in relation to facts as they are made to appear to this Board by admissible material. Even in Makin's case, however, reservation was made of cases "where it is impossible to suppose that the evidence improperly admitted can have had any influence on the verdict of the jury," and this reservation is not to be taken as exhaustive. In England, where the trial Judge has warned the jury not to act upon the objectionable evidence, the Court of Criminal Appeal under the similar words of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, sec. 4, may refuse to interfere, if it thiks that the jury, giving heed to that warning, would have returned the same verdict, R. v. Lucas (31), R. v. Stoddart (32), R. v. Norton (33), R. v. Loates (34), R. v. Wilson (35), or where evidence has been admitted inadvertently or erroneously, which is inadmissible but of small importance R. v. Westacott (36), R. v. Mullins (37), or most unlikely to have affected the verdict, R. v. Solomon (38). Where the objectionable evidence has been left for the consideration of the jury without any warning to disregard it, the Court of Criminal Appeal quashes the conviction, if it thinks that the jury may have been influenced by it, even though without it there was evidence sufficient to warrant a conviction R. v. Fisher (39). The rule can hardly be considered to be settled, but at any rate it seems to go so far as to substitute highly improbable" for "impossible" in Lord Herschell's reservation above quoted.

Their Lordships think that the jurisdiction, which they exercise in appeals in criminal matters, involves a general consideration of the evidence and of the circumstances of the case in order to place the irregularities complained of, if substantiated, in their proper relation to the whole matter. The facts of the present case must, therefore, be stated. They are briefly as follows :—

During the hot weather of 1912 the Sepoys of the 126th Beluchistan Regiment at Shameen lived and slept a great deal in the open air.

The camp was near the Central Avenue, shaded by trees and lit by the electric light standards in the Avenue. On the night in question the native officers, including Subadar Ali Shafa, were sitting in chairs near the road. Ibrahim and three other Sepoys were not far off in a group playing cards. The time was about 10-30 p. m. The Subadar went up to them, accused them of gambling, searched them; took away $3.80 of Ibrahim's money and ordered them to be confined to the lines. He abused Ibrahim with offensive language, against which Ibrahim protested, and then returned to his chair. A little time afterwards the sentry saw a man going into the camp itself to the place where the men's rifles were kept, and gave an alarm. A shot was fired, and the Subadar after calling to the guard to turn out, and walking a few steps, fell dead, a bullet having passed through his body. Almost at once a man was seen a few paces from the sentry, standing behind a tree and pointing his rifle in the direc ion of the place where the native officers were sitting. This last significant fact was elicited by the jury themselves. He was immediately seized and proved to be Ibrahim. He had his own service rifle in his hand, iden ified by its number Five rounds, enough to fill one clip, were missing from his bandolier. Four cartridges were in the magazine of his rifle, the bolt of which was open , one, empty and still hot, was found on the ground. The rifle was fouled from recent discharge. No one else with a rifle was seen outside the camp when Ibrahim was seized.

This story, which did not depend at any point on the evidence of one witness only, was amply corrobora ed in various ways. Beyond an indefinite suggestion that Ibrahim had been instigated to commit this crime, which came to nothing the only attack on the witnesses was founded on discrepancies between them in matters of detail, or on the suggestion that they had amplified their evidence between the first trial, when the jury disagreed, and the second. It appears to their Lordships that a clearer case there could hardly be, and that it would be the merest speculation to suppose that the jury was substantially influenced by the evidence of what Ibrahim said to Major Barrett. If not impossible, it is at any rate highly improbable, that this should have been so, and when the preponderance of unquestioned evidence is so great, their Lordships cannot in any view of the matter conclude that there has been any miscarriage of justice, subs'antial, garve or otherwise. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be dismissed.

LORD MOULTON
LORD SUMNER.
LORD PARMOOR
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI
1914,
Heard, 23 and 24, February.
Judgment, 24, February.

SRIMUTTY MANOKARANI DEBI, Appellants,
v.
HARIPADA MITTER and others, Respondents.

Hindu widow, alienation by, for legal necessity—Duty of purchaser to make enquiry—Admission by parents in an affidavit in a different suit against the interest of infants, if admissible in evidence in a subsequent suit by the latter for recovery of property as reversionary heirs of maternal grandfather—Recital in conveyance by Hindu widow of legal necessity, if evidence—Delay of reversioner in bringing suit for recovery of property alienated by Hindu widow, when suit brought within statutory period of limitation—Non-filing of account books when explained—Prejudice.

In a suit by Hindu reversioners for recovery of immoveable property left by their maternal grandfather and sold by their maternal grandmother for alleged necessity, the purchaser's representative adduced oral evidence to show that the widow had sold it for her husband's debts. This evidence was found by the trial judge to be unreliable but the learned judge, adverting to documentary evidence, chiefly relied on an affidavit which was filed in another suit and was signed by the reversioners' mothers and fathers and which contained a statement to the effect that certain other premises had been mortgaged by the widow (grandmother) for her husband's debt and that her daughters and sons-in-law had joined for protecting the reversioners' (the present Plaintiffs') interest, and the Judge held that the affidavit was admissible, regarding "the parents as the guardians of the Plaintiffs and as capable of making admissions against their interest on their behalf:"

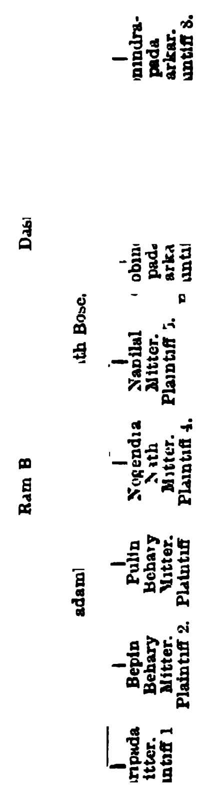
Held (on appeal by JENKINS, C. J., and WOODROFFE, J, and affirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council) that there is nothing in the Indian Evidence Act to support the view of the learned Judge or make the affidavit relevant.

That the present Plaintiffs had in no sense derived their interest in the subject-matter of the suit from their parents, nor could their parents be regarded as having been expressly or impliedly authorised by them to make the admission.



That when the suit was brought long after the alienation but within the period of limitation and the delay was explained as being due to the pendency of another suit and also to want of means:

Held, that the delay did not operate to the prejudice of the Plaintiffs' suit for declaration and possession.

This was an Appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 4th February 1910, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in its Appellate Jurisdiction, which reversed a judgment and decree dated the 30th March, 1909, of Stephen, J., of the same High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows:—

The litigation relates to house No. 26, Prinsep Street, in the town of Calcutta, which was originally owned by one Ram Bulluv Bose, whose relationship to the Plaintiffs will appear from the following pedigree:—

The said Ram Bulluv Bose died in 1857, leaving his widow Monmohini Dasi, his son Lokenath Bose and two daughters him surviving, and the son became his heir under the Hindu Law.

On the 15th July, 1857, one Jadunath Mitra applied to the Supreme Court of Judicature of Fort William, in Bengal, for grant of letters of administration in respect of the estate of the said Ram Bulluv Bose, deceased. He stated that the said Lokenath Bose was an infant and that the said Monmohini Dasi was unwilling to administer the estate of the said deceased. By an order dated the 12th September, 1857, the Court made the grant, and thereupon the said Administrator Jadunath Mitra administered the said estate.

SRIMUTTY MANOKARANI DEBI v. HARIPADA MITTER.

The said Lokenath Bose died in 1866, still in his infancy, and his mother Monmohini Dasi succeeded to a life estate of a Hindu widow in all the properties left by him, including the house now in dispute.

By a conveyance dated the 21st December, 1867, the said Monmohini Dasi sold the house now in dispute to Juggoo Lall Dobey, husband of the Appellant, and the purchaser obtained possession thereof. On the 26th February, 1896, the said Monmohini Dasi died.

The present suit was instituted on the 5th February, 1908, against the Defendant (Appellant) for possession of the house in dispute with mesne profits and costs.

The Defendant filed a written statement and pleaded that the said Monmohini Dasi conveyed to her (Defendant's) husband an absolute interest in the house in dispute, inasmuch as she did so for legal necessity under the Hindu Law.

Mr. Justice Stephen, who tried the suit, recorded oral and documentary evidence produced by the parties, and delivered judgment on the 30th March, 1909. He held that the Defendant's oral evidence gave "very little basis for the Defendant's case that Monmohini sold this property from necessity." The learned Judge admitted in evidence an affidavit, dated the 15th September, 1873, made by the mothers and the fathers of the present Plaintiffs, relied on a statement contained therein to the effect that the said Ram Bulluv Bose died leaving some debts due from him.

With regard to the oral evidence in the case Mr. Justice Stephen in his judgment observed :—

"Though the evidence of these witnesses (Kedar Nath and Ananda) as to the existence of the debt that the Defendant wishes to prove is thus of the most shadowy possible kind they do a little to enlighten as to some other aspects of the case

. . . . .

"The evidence of a payment to Shama Charan (one of the alleged creditors of Rambullav) is vague; but that of a payment to Sabitri (the other alleged creditor) is vaguer still"

. . . . .

"On the whole this evidence (oral) gives very little basis for the Defendant's case that Monmohini sold the property from necessity."

Regarding the documentary evidence Mr. Justice Stephen observed :—

We have accounts filed by Jadunath Mitter on 31st April 1859, as also the grant of administration to him and the petition on which it was made No traces of the alleged debts appear here and this may tell in the Plaintiffs' favour though I find it hard to draw any decided conclusion from the omission. The conveyance itself seems to have been quite regularly drawn and was prepared by one of the then leading attorneys of this Court. The recital of the existence of the debts is of course not evidence though it goes to enforce the evidence of Kedarnath and Ananda. According to Kedarnath's evidence, however, Dwarkanath was present at the registration of the conveyance and he certainly identified Monmohini on that occasion. Another document to which I attach a good deal of weight is an affidavit made in a suit brought by one Chunamull against Monmohini. The affidavit is signed by Kadambini, Lukhimoni, Dwarkanath Mitter and Nittyagopal. It is there stated than in order to pay off debts due from Rambullav, Monmohini executed a mortgage of certain premises not including those now in suit, and that Nittyagopal and Dwarkanath joined in it with a view of protecting the reversionary interests of their sons the present plaintiffs, and were anxious to prevent the sale of the mortgaged premises in a suit brought by the mortgagees. It is argued that this is not evidence against the plaintiffs as they do not claim through their parents but as heirs to Lokenath. I admitted the affidavit, however, regarding the parents as the guardians of the plaintiffs and so capable of making admissions against their interests on their behalf. And I take the affidavit as showing that Rambullav did leave debts which were not liquidated in 1871, the date of the mortgage to Chunamull. This goes to show that Rambullav left some debts that had to be met by the widow selling a part of his estate and there may very well have been more.

In conclusion the learned Judge observed as follows :—

Taking all this evidence together I consider that the Defendant has made out a kind of case in favour of her contention. It is undeniably a weak one; but in considering whether it is too weak for me to rely on it I must consider the circumstances under which it is brought. A remarkable feature of the plaintiffs' case is that he has brought it only three weeks before the expiration of the time when the Statute of Limitation would have applied. The fathers of the plaintiffs who would probably have had some knowledge of the circumstances under which the Conveyance was made are both dead, and their mothers are not called. The two fathers Dwarkanath and Nittya seem to have died before Monmohini, but Pulin Behari the Plaintiff, who gave evidence, admits that he did not know of the property in question or that he could claim any interest in it before 1897 when he became aware of it in the course of another suit. He alleges poverty as a reason for not asserting his rights at an earlier period but there seems no particular reason for supposing that he was in worse circumstances in 1897 than he was when this suit was brought. The facts on which the Plaintiffs rely are not disputed and the onus of proving her case therefore lies on the Defendant. At the same time the plaintiffs' delay and his inability to produce more cogent evidence than he has justified me in accepting a weaker proof of the Defendant's case than I should require in other circumstances. I therefore hold that the Defendant has proved that Monmohini sold to her predecessor in title for necessity and that her predecessor was justified in believing that she did so. I accordingly give judgment for the Defendant with costs on Scale No. 2.

Against the said decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the said High Court in its Appellate jurisdiction, and the appeal was heard by Sir Lawrence Jenkins. C. J. and Woodroffe, J. The learned Chief Justice delivered his Judgment (in which Woodroffe, J. concurred) on the 4th February, 1910.

After stating the facts Jenkins, C. J., in his Judgment observed :—

"Though oral evidence was adduced the learned Judge placed no reliance on it, for he held that it gave "very little basis for the Defendant's case that Monmohini sold this property from necessity," and he therefore directed his attention to the documentary evidence on which alone his conclusion rests. I accept the learned Judge's appreciation of the oral evidence, and I therefore will, as he did, consider whether the documentary evidence suffices to establish the defendant's case. What principally impressed the learned Judge was an affidavit made in a suit brought by one Chunamull against Monmohini which he admitted, notwithstanding the plaintiff's objection, as an admission, "regarding the parents as the guardians of the plaintiffs and so capable of making admissions against their interests in their behalf." But the relevance of an admission must be determind by reference to the terms of the Evidence Act, and I can find nothing in that Act which supports the view of the learned Judge.

The present Plaintiffs in no sense derive their interest in the subject-matter of the suit from their parents nor can their parents be regarded as having been expressly or impliedly authorised by them to make the admission. I therefore hold that the affidavit is not admissible in evidence against the plaintiffs.

Then what else is there in the case on which to rest the Defendant's claim? There is no proof of an entry in any family books of account, for none are produced. The absence of these books might, if unexplained, excite a certain amount of suspicion against the plaintiffs, but the suggestion made by Pulin Behari, one of the plaintiffs, in explanation of their disappearance evidently impressed Stephen, J. favourably and I see no reason for not accepting it.

In the conveyance to Juggoo Lal the existence of two debts is no doubt asserted but the authorities show that this is not proof, and beyond this there is no other document on which reliance has been placed either by Stephen, J., or by counsel before us.

Nor is the meagreness of the evidence adduced on her behalf, the only difficulty in the defendant's way.

In 1857 Jadu Nath Mitter presented a petition to the Court for the grant to him of Letters-of-Administration to the estate and effects of Ram Bullav Bose during the minority of his cousin, Loke Nath, and in that petition it is alleged that Ram Bullav left Company's paper belonging to him. But neither in this petition nor in the accounts filed by Jadu Nath Mitter as administrator is there any trace of this debt.

Then again the petition for a certificate of guardianship to her son Loke Nath presented by Monmohini in 1866 shows that Ram Bullav left property including two money-lending businesses, one in Calcutta and the other at Sonamoyi, and this agrees with the evidence of the defendant's own witnesses, Kedar Nath Mozumdar and Anundo Chunder Chatterjee, that Ram Bullav when he died was a man of some means.

Then the sale was after the death of Loke Nath, and more than 10 years after the death of Ram Bullav and the purchase money was only Rs. 2,500.

It is true that in the conveyance Monmohini is said to have been identified by her sons-in-law, but the suggestion on the part of the Plaintiff is that it was the extravagance of one of them Dwarkanath that led to the sale, and it was elicited in the cross-examination of Kedar Nath that he was very extravagant and was constantly going to Monmohini for money, and it is further shown that Dwarkanath had something to do with the handling of the purchase-money.

It is true that there has been considerable delay in the institution of this suit, and this delay appears the greater because of the length of time that elapsed before the reversion fell in. But it is not usual for a reversioner to sue during the lifetime of the widow and in fact this suit is within time. The delay that has occurred since the widow's death has been reasonably explained as attributable to the pendency of another suit and the lack of means to meet the expenses of the litigation.

The conclusion then to which I come is that the defendant has failed to prove the existence of legal necessity, nor has it been shown that the purchaser used reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such legal necessity or acted in good faith. The appeal therefore should in my opinion be allowed and a decree passed that the defendan[illegible] document to which [illegible]

were some evidence of the existence of actual pressure on her estate and the existence of the debts which were discharged. The Appellate Court was not quite correct in thinking that Stephen, J, had disbelieved the oral evidence. That evidence consisted of very old men and at this distance of time it was difficult to produce better evidence. The Respondent did not produce the accounts which would have shewn that there were debts due from the estate. Further, the affidavit was admissible in evidence. It was made by the fathers of the plaintiffs, who were their natural guardians. They made it in order to safeguard the interests of the plaintiffs and it was binding upon them. In any case the purchaser paid full consideration and acted in good faith and after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of pressure on her estate and necessity for the sale. Section 38 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applied, and it must be presumed that there was necessity for the sale. A Hindu widow's powers resemble those of a manager. [ORDINARY ORIGINAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.]

the charges. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the first and the fourth charges and differed as to the other counts, there being not as many as six who agreed in opinion. The Judge discharged the jury under sec. 305, Cr. P. C., and directed a retrial. On the retrial of the accused before a fresh jury on the remaining counts of the indictment the accused pleaded not guilty as also autrefois acquit and it was urged in defence (1) that as the accused had been acquitted of the charge of murder of A he could not be tried again for committing culpable homicide on him and (2) that as he had been acquitted of an offence under sec. $\frac{302}{34}$, I. P. C., in relation to the murder of N, he could not be convicted of an offence in relation to the same man under sec. $\frac{302}{109}$ or $\frac{302}{114}$, I. P. C.

Held—That sec. 403 protected the accused only against a trial for murder and any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him "might have been made." But the offence of culpable homicide for which he was tried again was one of the charges actually made against him and on the terms of sec. 403, Cr. P. C., the first objection failed. If the accused had been charged with murder alone a verdict of not guilty would have protected him from another trial for culpable homicide and were he acquitted of culpable homicide he would be protected from a trial for any offence involving hurt, but where a charge was made the case fell outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it might have been made.

That for the purposes of sec. 403, the accused was not being tried again but was being tried on the original indictment and on his first plea of not guilty. Sec. 308, Cr. P. C, did not effect the construction of sec. 403.

That sec. 403 should not be construed with reference to the English law relating to criminal pleading. Secs. 271 and 272, Cr. P. C., contain all that is necessary as to pleading and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature.

That the plea of Not Guilty was one not recognised by the Code of Criminal Procedure and it was not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except guilty or a claim to be tried.

Sec. 403 has nothing to do with pleading, but is in terms of a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court. A defence under that section may be set up at any time before verdict in any form.

That even assuming the case to be governed by the English law of pleading, autrefois acquit was not properly pleaded.

That the accused had already pleaded Not Guilty in the first trial and that plea was still awaiting adjudication and the second plea was therefore unnecessary and of no effect.

That even if the principles of English law were to be applied to the present case the acquittal for murder was no bar to the retrial for culpable homicide.

That the killing being, according to the evidence, done by one person who was not the accused and not by several persons, sec. 34 did not apply to the case and the finding of Not Guilty by the jury on the charge under sec. $\frac{302}{34}$, I. P. C, under the direction of the Judge for an acquittal decided nothing and could not be taken as negativing the common intention of the accused and the man who in fact killed N.

That there is no reason for saying that a man must be absent in order to abet under sec. 109, I. P. C.

That instigating the unknown murderer by accompanying him to the place and by aiding him in his flight afterwards, which the accused on the evidence did, might have taken place though the accused was not present at the murder but on the evidence he being so present sec. 114 applied to the case.

The facts of this case necessary for the purposes of this report are as follows. On the night of the 19th January 1914 at about 8 P. M. one Nripendra Nath Ghosh, an Inspector of Police, was shot dead by a revolver. It was alleged that two persons took part in the murder, but the shots from the revolver of only one of them had taken effect. The accused Nirmal Kanto Roy, was alleged to have been one of the two persons who fired at the Inspector, but did not actually hit him. The prosecution also alleged that both the assailants were thereupon pursued, the other escaped, and the accused on being further pursued was caught hold of by his chadar by a little boy named Ananto Teli. Thereupon, it was alleged, the accused fired and killed Ananto Teli, and continued running on till he has captured.

The case was committed to the High Court Sessions and tried before a Special jury. The charge contained five counts and was as follows :—

1. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy on or about the 19th day of January 1914 in Calcutta aforesaid in conjunction with another person in furtherence of the common intention of himself and of that other person did commit murder by intentionally or knowingly causing the death of one Nripendra Nath Ghose and thereby he the said Nirmal Kanta Roy committed an offence punishable under sec. 302 read with sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code :

2. That some person unknown at or atout the time and in the place aforesaid committed murder by causing the death of the said Nripendra Nath Ghose and he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy, who if absent would have been punishable as an abettor of such offence in consequence of such abetment, was present when such offence was committed and thereby he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under secs. 114 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

3. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy at or about the time and in the place aforesaid abetted some person unknown in committing the offence in the first charge mentioned which offence was committed in consequence of such abetment, and thereby the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under secs. 109 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

4. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy at or about the time and in the place aforesaid committed murder by causing the death of one Ananto Teli otherwise called Antu Teli and thereby he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

5. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy at or about the time and in the place aforesaid and in course of the said transaction committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder by causing the death of the said Ananto Teli otherwise called Antu Teli and thereby the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under sec. 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

At the close of the evidence, the learned Judge said that he was of opinion that sec. 34, I. P. C, did not apply to the facts of this case and directed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty on the first count and they did so. After retiring, the jury brought in a unanimous verdict of not guilty on the fourth count, viz., that of murdering Ananto Teli, but were divided in the proportion of 5 to 4 on the other counts. The Judge thereupon took the verdict of acquittal on the first and fourth counts, and discharged the jury and ordered a retrial on the three counts as to which the jury were not agreed.

The retrial came on before the same Judge and another special jury. But before the new jury was empanelled or the indictment read, the accused through his counsel took the preliminary plea of autrefois acquit.

Mr. Norton (with Messrs. C. R. Das, J. N. Ray, L. Palit, W. Sen-Gupta and S. N Roy) for the Accused.—Before the charge is read, I want to take the plea of autre fois acquit.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Council, and Mr. E. P. Ghosh) for the Crown.—It ought to be taken after the charges are read.

[STEPHEN, J.—We are not so technical.]

Mr. Norton.—My first point is that my client has been acquitted of the murder of Ananto Teli. The jury could have convicted him of culpable homicide. But they have not done so. No man is to be tried for an offence twice. Your Lordship did not sum up or explain the charge of culpable homicide. You charged them only for murder. My client was acquitted of that. The jury could have convicted him of the lesser offence of culpable homicide, but they did not. Refers to Archbold (last Ed.) p. 177. R. v. Grimwood (4). This principle is incorporated in sec. 403 of Criminal Procedure Code. The test is "was I in jeopardy of being convicted." The point is not what the jury did, but what the jury could have done. Your Lordship not having directed the jury about culpable homicide the jury was bound in law to bring in a verdict of Not Guilty on that minor count. Refers to Reg v. Elrington (5), Reg v. Thos Morris (6), Archbold p. 235.

My next objection relates to the two counts of abetment of the murder of the Inspector. On the last trial, there were three charges regarding this, viz., (1) under sec. 302, I. P. C. read with sec. 34, (2) sec. 302 read with sec. 109, (3) sec. 302 read with sec. 114. Your Lordship directed the jury to acquit my client under sec. 302 read with sec. 34. That necessarily is a bar to a trial under sec. 302 read with sec. 109 or sec. 302 read with sec. 114. Abetment is defined in sec. 107. Firstly, there is no possible evidence of instigation in this case. Secondly, it requires common intention. That is covered by sec. 34.

[STEPHEN, J.—I don't think so. There was no evidence of an illegal act being done by the accused as is contemplated by sec. 34.]

Mr. Norton.—Sec. 34 relates to cases where one person is present in furtherance of the common intention and another does the act, they are both equally guilty. The jury have acquitted my client under sec. 302 read with sec. 34, therefore they have negatived common intention and conspiracy. Therefore there cannot be abetment. See sec. 109 and sec. 114. Some of these cases fall under sec. 34. Therefore an acquittal under sec. 34 would bar a subsequent trial under sec. 109. As regards sec. 114, a person merely by being present does not make himself liable under this section; he must have been liable for abetment even if he were absent. See Queen v. Dwarkanath (7), Abhi Misser v. Luchmi Narain (8), follows Queen v. Dwarkanath (7), Keshvar v. Girish (9).

Mr. C. R. Das.—follows:—The principle of sec. 305, Cr. P. Code, is that the verdict must be one entire verdict. Your Lordship has accepted a verdict, and it must cover all the charges. See Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (10). This shows that the word verdict in sec. 423, Cr. P. C, means one entire verdict. See also, Queen-Empress v. Croft (11), (where the offences were distinct), Kaptan v. Smith (12), Ram Sabak v. Emperor (13), Sharbekhan v. Emperor (14), Queen-Empress v. Subadar Krishnappa (15), Queen-Empress v. Erramreddi (16). These cases show that there must be one entire verdict. See also Kenny's Criminal Law pp. 470, 471. If two charges are substantially the same, acquittal on one bars a trial on the other, e. g., acquittal on common assault bars a trial on grievous hurt. Your Lordship need not have accepted the verdict under sec. 302, as it was not one entire verdict. But as my client was once placed in jeopardy of a conviction, he cannot be tried again. The same bundle of facts have been adjudicated upon, and there cannot be a trial on the same facts. See Russel on Crimes (7th Ed.) p. 1982; Archbold p. 235; Harris' Criminal Law p. 379.

Your Lordship's direction to the jury amounted in law to this that if the jury believed those facts, it was murder and nothing less than murder. The jury have found it was not murder. Therefore, in law, they must be taken to have negatived anything which falls short of murder.

As regards the charges of abetment of the murder of the Inspector the case for the prosecution is that both the accused and the other man fired, and the result was that the shots of the other man hit the Inspector and he died. Under these circumstances, the offence clearly is under sec. 34 read with sec. 302. I will not enter into the discussion whether sec. 34 and sec. 114 are mutually exclusive. The jury under your Lordship's direction has acquitted me of sec. 34. It is not open to the prosecution to try me again under sec. 114. The language of sec. 114 is so clear that the facts on which the Crown relies cannot come under sec. 114. This section applies only to cases where the accused is already an abetter before he is present at the transaction itself. Under sec. 34, it is not necessay that all of them must do something. Common design is all that is necessary. See Queen v. Gora Chand (17).

Mr. Sinha.—I am bound to point out that this plea of autrefois acquit has not been taken at the proper time. See Roscoe's Criminal Procedure (8th Ed.) p. 169; 9 Vol. Halsbury, p. 355. There must be formal proof of acquittal, identity of accused, &c. This can be done by formally tendering in evidence the original indictment and the minutes of the Court, &c.

[STEPHEN, J.—The Court can refer to its own notes.]

Mr. Sinha.—Of the five charges on which the accused was tried on the first trial, there is no verdict before the Court on three of those charges, viz., culpable homicide of Antoo Teli, and two charges of abetment of the murder of the Inspector. Therefore the accused is being retried on these three charges. It has been contended by the other side that the accused was once in jeopardy of being convicted, and therefore he cannot be retried again. This principle of jeopardy, as stated, is too broad. If this principle were correct, then in every case where a jury disagrees, there cannot be a retrial. See sec. 403, Cr. P. C. The words are 'might have been.' The true principle is stated in O'Connell v. Queen (18). Each count in an indictment is a separate indictment. See Archbold, p. 82. Therefore there must be separate verdicts on each count. The contention that the verdict must be one entire verdict on all the charges is absurd. For instance, if two persons are jointly indicted and one of them is let off, but there is disagreement with regard to the other, is it to be said that if the second is to be retried, the man who has been let off should be tried again? Suppose again, a man is charged with murder, culpable homicide, grievous hurt, and simple hurt. The jury are unanimous with regard to the graver offences that the man is not guilty but are not agreed as to simple hurt. If he is tried again, must he be tried again for the offences of which he was acquitted, because "there must be one entire verdict" for the whole lot? That would be absurd. According to the practice of this Court also, re-trials have taken place under circumstances similar to this. From the Court minutes in the Crown Office it would appear that in 1906, a man was tried for culpable homicide, grievous hurt and simple hurt. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the graver charges but was divided in the proportion of 5 to 4 as regards hurt. A re-trial was ordered. In 1904, in another case a man was tried for forgery for the purposes of cheating and also using as genuine a forged document. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the first charge and were divided, 5 to 4, on the second charge. A re-trial was ordered.

In Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (10), there was a trial in the mofussil for murder and grievous hurt. There was no charge of culpable homicide. The jury were unanimous for acquittal with regard to one charge but were not agreed with regard to the other. The High Court set aside the verdict under sec. 423, Cr. P. Code, and it was held that it must be taken to have set aside everything, namely, even the verdict of Not Guilty. This case therefore does not help the other side.

The doctrine underlying these pleas is set forth in Queen v. Miles (19). The principle is analogous to that of res judicata. It applies only "where a criminal charge has been adjudicated upon." See Queen v. Miles (19). Where the substratum of a charge is taken away, the more aggravated offence cannot be tried In this case the jury only negatived the murder of Antoo Teli. But they did not negative culpable homicide. They expressly said so. They could not arrive at a conclusion. The case in R. v. Grim- wood (4), is a case similar to Queen v. Miles (19). The cases may be put thus. If there is a charge of a minor offence and there is an acquittal, you cannot try him on a graver charge. If there is conviction on the minor offence, you cannot try him on the major offence, because that would mean punishing him twice over. But does it follow from this that where a man has been acquitted of the major offence, the minor charge is necessarily negatived? I submit not.

As regards the charges of abetment, the other side says that there being an acquittal on sec. 34, there cannot be any trial on sec. 114 or sec. 109. But abetment is a substantive offence. It is not a minor offence. A man cannot be convicted of abetment, if there is no such specific charge. Each charge being a separate indictment must be adjudicated upon separately.

Mr. C. R. Das, in reply. See Archbold p. 189, the doctrine of res judicata does not apply. But I don't say that the question of adjudication is not to be considered. Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (10), is a direct authority that "verdict" means one entire verdict. See Archbold, p. 82. Where the offences are distinct offences, I don't say that my argument will apply. But where the offences are not different you cannot retry. If there are different offences, the verdict may be a different verdict for each offence. See Latham v. Queen (3), where there were different offences.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—The accused in this case has been indicted under five counts. These are, firstly, the murder of Nripendra Nath Ghose under secs. 302 and 34 of the I. P. C.: secondly, murder of the same man under secs. 114 and 302, I. P. C.: thirdly, abetting the murder of the same man under secs. 109 and 302, I. P. C.: fourthly, the murder of Ananto Teli: fifthly, culpable homicide of Ananto Teli. To these charges he pleaded Not Guilty. I told the jury that there was no evidence of an offence under the first count and they acquitted him accordingly. The jury differed as to his guilt under the second and third charges and there were not as many as six who agreed in opinion. The jury unanimously acquitted him of murder under the fourth charge, and differed as to the fifth charge, without six agreeing in opinion. I accordingly discharged the jury under sec. 305, Cr. P. Code.

The accused was then tried again in accordance with sec. 308 of the Code: and as he wished to raise a defence under sec. 403 I allowed him to be charged and to plead again though I doubted if this were necessary or had any legal effect.

To every remaining charge of the indictment, that is to the second, third and fifth, he pleaded Not Guilty and that he had been previously acquitted: care being taken that he should make the two pleas at the same time.

The points that have been argued on his behalf are that as he was acquitted of the charge of murder of Ananto, he cannot be tried again for committing culpable homicide on him; that as he has been acquitted of an offence under sec. 302 read with sec. 34 in relation to the murder of Nripendra he cannot be convicted of an offence in relation to the same man under sec. 302 read with sec.

109 or sec. 114: that, as I told the jury, that if they believed the facts related as to the killing of Ananto I did not see how they could convict the accused of any offence less than murder, the jurors had no right to convict him of any less offence, and consequently those of the jurors who considered him guilty of culpable homicide ought to have found him Not Guilty in which case there would have been a unanimous verdict of Not Guilty.

For reasons I shall state in a moment I do not consider that it is necessary to refer this matter in any way to the jury: but in case my opinion as to this should be dissented from hereafter, I propose to take a verdict on the plea relating to a previous acquittal though as there are no facts for them to decide, I shall tell them that as a matter of law they are bound to return a verdict that the plea is not made out.

The first point depends, and in my opinion, depends solely on the construction to be put on sec. 403, Cr P. C. This provides that a person who has "once been tried . . for an offence" and acquitted "shall not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under sec. 236, or for which he might have been convicted under sec 237."

By sec. 236 "if a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences." By sec. 237 "if in the case mentioned in sec. 236, the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence, for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it." I am of opinion that sec. 235 dealing with acts in a series so connected together as to form one transaction has no application to the present case; consequently neither sub-sec. (2) nor any of the other sub-sections need be immediately considered. In this case the evidence discloses only one illegal act as far as Ananto is concerned, and the accused has been charged in the alternative with having committed murder or culpable homicide of Ananto, a procedure the correctness of which has not been disputed. Sec 403, however, protects him only against a trial for murder and "any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him" might have been made. But the offence of culpable homicide for which it is now proposed to try him is the same charge that was made against him, and on the terms of the section therefore this defence must fail. If he had been charged with murder alone, no doubt a verdict of Not Guilty would protect him from another trial for culpable homicide: and should he be acquitted of culpable homicide he will be protected from a trial for any offence involving hurt: but where a charge was made, the case falls outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it might have been made. Then the procedure relating to the discharge of the jury seems to me to be wholly inconsistent with the possibility of a verdict on one charge acting as a decision of another. By sec. 303 (1) of the Code the jury are to return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried. They have returned a verdict on two; there remain three that have to be dealt with by another jury under sec. 308 This procedure seems to me as obvious as it is reasonable.

Also, for the purposes of sec. 403 I do not consider that the accused is being tried again. He is being tried on the original indictment, and I consider that he is being tried on his first plea of Not Guilty. The duty of the Court is to continue the trial of the accused before another jury: and the process may continue till a verdict is passed on all the counts without the accused being "tried again" under sec. 403. I am aware that sec. 308 refers to the accused being retried, but this does not affect the construction of sec 403.

It is however, if I have rightly understood the argument for the accused, contended that sec 403 must be construed with reference to the English Law relating to criminal pleading. I think this is an erroneous view, and that for the following reasons.

Secs. 271 and 272 of the Criminal Procedure Code contain all that is necessary as to pleading, and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature. The accused can plead Guilty under sec. 271, he can claim to be tried, or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried. The plea of Not Guilty is thus one not recognised by the Code and this has been the law since 1872 at least: and I suppose that this is intentional, and is designed to get rid of a great mass of English Law relating to criminal pleading which for more than half a century has been discredited, and is in fact falling into an oblivion which for practical purposes it well deserves.

I consider, therefore, that it is not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except guilty or a claim to be tried. If an accused claims to be tried I am of opinion that, subject to special provisions, he can take any objection to his trial or conviction at any time, before verdict at any rate, and in any form, that the Court sees fit to allow. In particular I conceive that sec. 403 has nothing to do with pleading but is in terms of a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court; for if a man is not liable to be tried, the Court has no jurisdiction to try him. I consequently think that a defence under that section may be set up at any time before verdict, in any form; and that it is to be decided on the terms of sec. 403 which seem to me to decide clearly and reasonably all the questions that have, as far as I know, arisen in England as to the effect of the pleas of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, several of which still remain undecided for practical purposes.

Under these circumstances I hold that the question whether the accused can now be tried for culpable homicide is a question of law to be decided by me without reference to the jury: and I decide accordingly that he is, can, and indeed must, be so tried.

With a view, however, to what may happen hereafter I propose to put the matter to the jury in the way I have mentioned.

Although I have thus decided this matter without reference to English law, I have been referred to a considerable number of English authorities on various points.

But, in the first place, supposing the acquittal of the accused to have been properly made the subject of a plea, the accused is met by difficulty as to the form in which he has pleaded which seems to me fatal to his contention. For though he pleaded Not Gulity at the time that he pleaded autrefois acquit and thus brought himself within the rule laid down in Archbold's Criminal Pleading, page 181, which is of authority in such matters, he had already pleaded Not Guilty in the previous trial, and that plea is still awaiting adjudication. The second plea was therefore unnecessary and of no effect. The case falls therefore within the decision of Alverstone L C J., in R. v. Banks (1) where, after saying that the point before him is an extremely technical one (though not more technical than the present one) and may therefore be met with a technical answer, lays down that "a defendant having pleaded Not Guilty to an indictment is not entitled, while that plea is standing, to have a plea of autrefois acquit put on the record. The accused in fact seems to have pleaded double in circumstances in which that course is not allowed by law. Assuming this case therefore to be governed by the English Law of pleading, I hold that autrefois acquit has not been properly pleaded.

It would seem from the same authority and the cases there quoted that the proper course to have followed according to English Law would havs been to take a verdict from the jury at once, if indeed one is needed, when all the facts to be ascertained are on the record. It is said however that a jury that is already empanelled may decide issue, Russel on Crimes 17th Ed., p. 1996, and R. v. Parry (2).

(2) 7 C. and P. 836 (1837)

The English law applicable to an indictment for manslaughter after an acquittal for murder on the same facts is beyond doubt, as an indictment for the major puts the accused in jeopardy of a conviction for the minor offence, Russell p. 1963; but I have searched Russell and the article "Criminal Law and Procedure" in Halsbury's Laws of England in vain for any decision or any rule as to the effect of a verdict on one count on the decision on another. All the numerous cases that I have been able to verify refer to indictments following acquittals or convictions or previous indictments or informations, and in most of the cases it is decided in terms that the indictment is good or bad as the case may be. This follows from the fact that in England an indictment is a highly formal document, and the finding of a fresh indictment is the criterion of the institution of a new trial. But in this case there is no question of the indictment being unimpeachable. Each count in an indictment is for the purposes of evidence and judgment a separate indictment. Latham v. Queen (3), see Archbold p. 82, and also Stephen's Digest of Criminal Procedure. . . . . The one reported case where a conviction on one count was held to support a plea of autrefois convict on a subsequent trial on another count is R. v. Grimwood (4), to which I have been referred. Here, on an indictment for causing grievous bodily harm and other offences involving assault and for common assault, the jury disagreed as to the major charge and convicted of assault. The Recorder sent the indictment to Assizes for the re-trial on the major counts and Pollock B. held that the prisoner was autrefois convict and could not be tried again. The same result would, one may assume, have followed had the first verdict been one of acquittal, though in that case the basis for the major charges would have been negatived. But I cannot regard this case as of any high authority. It was decided on circuit without further consideration. It is, as far as I am aware, only reported in R. v. Grimwood (4). It is referred to in Archbold at p. 235, but is not referred to in the far more authoritative Russell, though the 17th Ed. of that work is edited by Mr. Crails, the very learned editor of the 24th Ed. of Archbold. The silence of other works of authority on the matter is significant and I cannot regard the report in R. v. Grimwood (4), as showing more than that the very experinced Judge who tried the case considered it inexpedient that the case should proceed further. I consider therefore that there is no English authority for the contention that a verdict on one count can in the case of re-trial after disagreement of the jury affect the trial on another count. And on principle I can see no reason why a verdict on one count should have an effect in a re-trial on the same indictment that it would not have at the original trial. I therefore hold that even if the principles of English law are to be applied to the present case the acquittal for murder is no bar to the re-trial for culpable homicide. But in finding that the acquittal for murder is no such bar I rely on my finding that the case is to be decided solely on the effect of sec. 403, Criminal Procedure Code.

The second point depends on the terms of sec. 34. This provides that "when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone." In this case the killing of Nripendra was, according to the evidence, done by one person who was not the accused. It was therefore not done by several persons and I do not see how the section can apply. I directed an acquittal. The finding of the Jury, therefore, decided nothing, and cannot be taken as negativing the common intention of the accused and the man who in fact killed Nripendra.

The accused now stands charged with abetting the murder of Nripendra by force of sec. 109 and sec. 114.

Abetting is defined by sec. 107, and the evidence to my mind, if relied on, shows that the accused instigated and aided whoever it was that committed the murder, and there is therefore a case made out under sec. 108, for there is no reason for saying that a man must be absent in order to abet under sec. 109. The instigating the unknown murderer by accompanying him to the place, and by aiding him in his flight afterwards, which the accused on the evidence did, might have taken place though the accused was not present at the murder. But on the evidence he was so present, and sec. 114 therefore applies to the case. The cases that have been quoted to me in this matter are decided on the sections in question but seem to me to have no bearing on the case.

I may have misapprehended the third point, at any rate I do not understand it. I expressed my opinion that if the facts given in evidence were believed, the accused was guilty of murder: but the question was one of fact, and if the Jury disagreed with me in point of fact they had a right to do so. I cannot understand

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No 3085 OF 1911.

COXE, J. RAY, J. 1913, Heard, 12 and 13, May. Judgment, 23, May.	SYED ALI and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. SARJAN ALI and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Right of pasturage, suit for declaration of, and for injunction—Mere thirty years' uninterrupted user if enough—Presumption of right.

In a suit for declaration that the Plaintiffs who were cultivating tenants had a right of pasturage over certain lands and for an injunction on the landlord to remove fences, etc. therefrom, the finding of the lower Appellate Court in decreeing the suit was: "The land has been lying unoccupied from time immemorial and the villagers have been grazing their cattle here for more than 30 years. Their user was open and peaceful, without interruption and should be in the circumstances of this case presumed to be as of right also":

Held—That this finding was not sufficient to establish the Plaintiffs' right of pasturage over the land in suit.

It being a customary right, it must be reasonable, and it would be unreasonable to hold that no land over which cattle had grazed should ever be brought under the plough.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1911 against a decree of Babu Debendra Mohan Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 27th of June 1911, reversing that of Babu Bokulal Biswas, Munsif at Brahmanbaria, dated the 23rd of July 1910.

The Plaintiff-Appellants who were all agricultural tenants and residents of village Ulchapara instituted the present suit for the declaration of their right and that of other tenants of the village to graze their cattle on certain pieces of waste land and for an injunction restraining the Defendants who were some of them the landlords of the village and the rest cultivators with whom portions of the waste land had been settled by the landlords from ploughing up the lands in suit and erecting fences thereon and from otherwise rendering the land unfit for grazing cattle. The Defendants denied that the Plaintiffs had the right alleged by them and also pleaded limitation. The Munsif found that other pieces of waste land had been encroached upon more than 3 years previously and that therefore the suit was barred by limitation. He further held on the evidence that the tenants grazed their cattle on the land by the landlord's permission. In this view he dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the Munsif was wrong in relying on the evidence as to encroachment upon other pieces of waste land for his finding on the question of limitation, and that the pieces in suit had been cultivated within two years.

On the merits, he held that the Plaintiffs had grazed their cattle on the lands in suit more than 30 years, openly and peaceably and without objection on the part of the maliks and without permission taken from the Plaintiffs, "that the land had been lying unoccupied from time immemorial and the villagers have been grazing their cattle here for more than 30 years. Their user was open and peaceful, without interruption and should be in the circumstances of the case presumed to be as of right also." In the result he held that the Plaintiffs and their co-villagers had a right of pasturage over the land in suit both by prescription as well as by grant presumable from immemorial user. In the ordering portion of his judgment he recorded that Plaintiffs' right of pasturage and that of the villagers of Ulchapara be declared and that they do recover possession of it by removing the fences and other obstructions raised by the Defendants and that the Defendants be enjoined from ploughing up the land or otherwise obstructing the right of pasturage declared.

The Defendants preferred this Second Appeal.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Upendra Kumar Roy for the Appellants.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Sasadhar Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of a suit by certain cultivating tenants for a declaration that they have a right of pasturage over the land in suit and for consequential relief. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the suit and the Defendants appeal.

The first point taken is that of limitation but in the view that we take of the case, no question of limitation really arises.

The learned Subordinate Judge says: "The land has been lying unoccupied from time immemorial and the villagers have been grazing their cattle here for more than 30 years. Their user was open and peaceful without interruption and should be in the circumstances of this case presumed to be as of right also." In our opinion these findings are hardly sufficient to dispose of the suit. We believe that throughout Bengal, where land is left waste or jungle, the cattle of the villagers graze over it and probably in most cases have done so from time immemorial No one is interested in stopping them and the user is therefore open, peaceful and uninterrupted. But it would be impossible to hold that therefore no landlord is entitled to bring any waste or jungle land under the plough. A right of pasturage arising from immemorial user of this kind resembles a right based upon custom. This has been laid down in Madras and Bombay, sec. 18, Easement Act, 1882, and Secretary of State v. Mathurabahi (1) and the view is in accordance with common sense. Now a custom must be reasonable and it would be wholly unreasonable that no land over which cattle had hitherto grazed should ever be brought under the plough. We may refer in this connection to the case of Leechmutput Singh v. Sadaulla (2). Nor is this view inconsistent with the decision in Bholanath v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (3). Their Lordships' judgment clearly proceeded on the supposition that the landlords were entitled to plough waste land if only sufficient pasturage were left, and the judgment certainly does not go so far as to lay down that immemorial grazing without more makes waste land inviolable. Their Lordships observe :—" It was certainly not the intention of the Subordinate Judge or the Munsif, that the decrees should prevent the Defendants improving their property. And, indeed, the Munsif expressly states that the Plaintiffs admitted the right of the Defendants to improve their property, provided sufficient pasturage were left." And they thought it advisable to add a specific provision to that effect to the decree. We think, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court must find more than that the village cattle have always grazed on this land before he can decree the suit. It may be the case, for instance, that the land in suit has been reserved in some particular manner for pasturage, or that the circumstances of the locality mark it out as suitable for pasture. It may be an island of waste amid a great expanse of cultivated land so that if it is cultivated the cattle of the villagers may have to be driven to an unreasonable distance in order to obtain pasture. Or it may be that the amount of waste remaining in the village is only sufficient for the needs of the cattle. In any of these cases the lower Appellate Court might be justified in holding that the custom underlying the right was reasonable in decreeing the suit. But if there is nothing to show that the land in suit differs in any respect from other waste and if there is plenty of pasturage left in the village the Plaintiffs are not entitled to relief. The Appeal is accordingly allowed and the case will go back to the Court below for rehearing with reference to these observations. It will be open to that Court to allow fresh evidence to be taken either by himself or by the first Court. Costs will abide the result.

SREEMUTTY MAHAMAYA KAR, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
KISHORE CHUNG, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 29—Occupancy raiyat—Enhancement of rent by contract—Stipulation in original kabuliyat—Colourable evasion of statute.

Where a kabuliyat executed by an occupancy raiyat contained a statement that the rent for the holding was Rs. 57-4 in all, but that out of this the sum of Rs. 17-2 was remitted and the rent was fixed at Rs. 40-2 for the period of the kabuliyat, and it was further stipulated that at the end of the term the tenant "shall take a settlement at the rate of Rs. 57-4 and if he does not the landlord shall be entitled to realise that rent by suit"; and the lower Appellate Court found that the rent really settled was Rs 40-2, and that the reference to Rs. 57 4 was merely a device to evade the provisions of sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act:

Held—That sec. 29 was a bar to the recovery of the rent by the landlord at Rs. 57 4.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 28th of July 1911 against the decree of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 22nd May 1911, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 975 of 1909, which had been preferred on the 17th May 1909 against a decree of A. H. Cumming, Esq., District Judge of Zilah Tipperah, dated the 8th of February [illegible] reversing that of Babu J. N. Mukherjee, Munsif of that place, dated the 12th of March 1908.

NOTES

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 65, if available to any but the landlord for the time being.

The judgment of the Privy Council (delivered by the Right Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali) in Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, reported at p. 747 of this issue settles a somewhat vexed question of the interpretation of a section of the Bengal Tenancy Act, viz, sec 65, which authorises a landlord to sell a tenure or holding for its own arrears and proceeds to make the arrears a first charge on the tenancy. The Act as a whole, as also in its details, has for its object the determination of the rights and obligations of landlords and tenants as such and by sec. 148 (h) the Legislature specifically provides that an assignee of a decree for arrears of rents obtained by the landlord cannot execute it unless the landlord's interest also in the land has vested in him. From these and other data, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee drew the conclusion—by no means an unreasonable one—that no sale of a tenure or holding can be permitted to take place in order to realise the arrears of rent due on it except at the instance of the landlord for the time being, in other words, that a decree for arrears of rent cannot be executed by a stranger to the land by a sale under sec. 65 although the severance of the arrears from the interest of the landlord may have taken place otherwise that in circumstances specially referred to in sec. 148, cl. (h).

We think there is considerable force in the arguments adduced by the Right Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali in support of this view, and we also consider it to be our duty to point out that this judgment rehabilitates the decision in Hemchunder v. Monmohini, 3 C. W. N. 605, which is supposed to have been overruled by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Khetra Pal Singh v. Kritartha Moyi, 10 C. W. N. 547. This Full Bench decision is in terms "distinguished" but the reasons of their Lordships' decision obviously cut away the ground from underneath the Full Bench decision, and we venture to submit that by this judgment of the Privy Council the Full Bench decision stands overruled.

Hem Chunder's case, we may note in passing, was decided by O'Kinealy, J., sitting with Ameer Ali, J., and in the case of Chhatraput Singh v. Gopi Chand Bothra, 4 C. W. N. 446, in which a contrary view is supposed to have been taken, the Judges were Macpherson and Ameer Ali, JJ. In this latter judgment Ameer Ali, J., had observed —"After Dhanpat transferred the property to Bhagwanbati Chowdhrain, he obtained decrees for these rents. The sale of these tenures in execution of money decrees could not release the tenures from the lien which had already attached to them." This apparently is contrary to what has been now laid down by the Privy Council, and one therefore need not be surprised to find Sir Robert Finlay relying on Chattrapat's case for the Respondent, while Mr. DeGruyther relied on Hem Chunder's case for the Appellant. The war of authorities has however, we believe, been finally set at rest by the present judgment with, so far as we can infer, the following consequences:—Hem Chunder v. Mon Mohini, 3 C. W. N. 604, is affirmed. Chattraput v. Gopi Chand Boltera, 4 C. W. N. 446: s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal 750, is disapproved, if not overruled. Khetrapal Singh v. Kritartha Moyi, 10 C. W. N. 547: s. c. 33 Cal. 566, though ostensibly distinguished, is overruled.

The Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill.

Very great changes have been made in sec. 195 (Sanction for prosecution for offences against public justice). So far as the curtailment of the period within which action must be taken in pursuance of the sanction from six to two months is concerned, we agree that if a prosecution is intended it must be instituted promptly and the provision that no sanction should be given or complaint made under sec. 211, I. P. C., until the proceedings in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed has been finally disposed of and until the person whom it is sought to prosecute has had an opportunity of showing cause, is in consonance with the view repeatedly expressed by the High Courts, especially the High Court of Calcutta. The change however to which we take the strongest exception is that by which it is proposed that orders passed under sec. 195, Cr. P. C., shall no longer be subject to revision by the High Court under its ordinary powers under secs. 435, 439 of the Code. We always view with apprehension any attempt to curtail the powers of the High Court to revise orders passed by the lower Courts and so far as orders granting sanctions are concerned we feel no hesitation in saying that these orders should on no account be exempted from revision by the High Court. True, an order granting sanction is not an order whereby a man is convicted of any offence, but all the same it exposes him to the risk of loss of liberty and leaves no remedy open to him for redress against infructuous prosecutions. Another change which strikes us as unwarranted is that sanction may be given notwithstanding the fact that an appeal is pending against the sentence, judgment or order of the Court in which the offence was committed. It has been almost the uniform practice of the High Courts not to allow proceedings taken on sanction granted by Courts to go on pending an appeal in the matter giving rise to the sanction, and the Legislature should not, we think overrule the numerous judicial pronouncements establishing a wholesome practice.

Cl. 126 of the Bill amends sec. 526 of the Code. The Legislature wants to make it clear that the powers of the High Court under the section extend to the transfer of miscellaneous proceedings under the Code, e.g., proceedings under Chaps. X, XI, XII, etc. and with this end in view, the word 'criminal' has been dropped before the word 'case' in cls. II and III of sub-sec. 1 of sec. 526. This amendment makes the powers of the High Court quite clear. A similar alteration has been made in sec. 527 which gives power to the Governor-General in Council to transfer Criminal Cases and Appeals from a Court subordinate to the jurisdiction of one High Court to that within the jurisdiction of another High Court. This change does not seem to us to be at all called for. There is a world of difference between sec. 526 and sec. 527 in practical application. We can hardly imagine a case in which it may be necessary for the Governor-General in Council to transfer, say, a proceeding under sec. 107 of the Code calling upon a person to execute a bond to keep the peace or a proceeding under sec. 133 calling upon an individual to remove an alleged obstruction on a public thoroughfare.

The further change in sec. 526 is in cl. (8). By a redistribution of words an attempt has been made to make it clear that on an application under this clause being filed the Magistrate is bound to stay his hands only before an accused is called upon to enter on his defence. Cl. (8) as drafted in the bill surely requires further alteration necessitated by the amendment of cls. II and III of sub-sec. 1 making the section applicable to miscellaneous proceedings under the case. The glaring inconsistency between cl. (8) and the previous part of the section as drafted in the Bill has apparently been overlooked. Under cl. (8) as in the Bill an application for adjournment can only be made, as under the existing Code, by the "Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused" but if miscellaneous proceedings under the code are expressly included within the purview of the section it seems to follow as a matter of course that the parties thereto who do not come within the category of "the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused" should be given the right to apply to the Court to have the proceedings stayed. We hope that the necessary alteration will be made.

One other amendment we miss in cl. (8) as drafted in the Bill. The expression "before the commencement of the hearing" has very often given rise to difficulties. The point of time when the hearing of a case is said to commence under the Code is nowhere defined and the Legislature should supply this defect now that the Code is going to be thoroughly recast. The observations of the late Chief Justice Sir Francis Maclean in Gomir Sarda, 2 C. W. N. 465, may be of use in this connection. His Lordship held that a trial is said to commence when a case is called on, with the Magistrate on the bench, the accused in the dock, and the representatives of the prosecution and the defence, if the accused is defended, are present in Court for the hearing of the case. The proviso added to cl. (8) dealing with Sessions cases makes it obligatory on an accused person to give 7 days' notice in writing to the Sessions Judge of his intention to make an application under the section. We desire to point out that the duration of the notice is too long and it seems to us that the effect of this proviso will make it a practical impossibility for an accused to get a Sessions case transferred from one Court to another. We are fully alive to the fact that the Calendars of Sessions Courts are liable to be upset by the postponement of cases to the inconvenience of jurors, assessors and parties. But still we think that the balance of expediency is in favour of reducing the extent of the inconvenience of an accused person to the possible minimum.

We notice that a new sec. 539A is to be added in order to discourage the making of false and scandalous statements in petitions filed before the Courts, if such petitions seek to impugn the action of subordinate authorities. A Court is empowered, if it thinks fit, to order that evidence of the facts alleged in such application be given by affidavit but no accused person shall be called upon to make any affidavit himself under the section. Courts are further authorised to order any scandalous or unnecessary matter in an affidavit to be struck out or amended and to direct the appearence of any person making an affidavit under the section for cross-examination by the Courts.

It is proposed in the Bill to repeal cl. (2) of sec. 192 and to alter sec. 528 so as to authorise Chief Presidency Magistrates and District Magistrates to empower any subordinate Magistrate to transfer a case. We think sec. 528 should be amended on the same lines as sec. 526 so as to make it clear that miscellaneous proceedings are liable to be transferred under the section. The difficulty arises out of the words "any case of which (the Magistrate ordering the transfer) has taken cognizance." 'Taking cognizance' has a special meaning in the Code of Criminal Procedure and it cannot apply to proceedings under sec. 144, 145 or other miscellaneous proceedings. We hope the section will be so altered as to obviate this difficulty.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 41, r. 3—Memorandum of appeal—Insufficiently stamped.

ACHUT RAM CHAND PAI v. NAGAPPA I. L. R. 38 Bom. 41.

On the last day allowed by the law of limitation the Appellants filed their appeal in the District Court. The memorandum of appeal was however insufficiently stamped and the Appellants' pleader on being questioned as to this replied that he had no funds with which to pay the requisite stamp and requested the Court to grant him time to make the necessary payment. The Court rejected the memorandum of appeal.

Held—That Or. 41, r. 3 provides for the rejection of a memorandum of appeal in certain cases but those cases are limited by the preceding rules to cases where the memorandum of appeal is defective in point of form or in respect of the grounds which it must contain and this rule cannot be interpreted as covering a case where the memorandum of appeal is rejected by reason of insufficiency of stamp.

That the lower Court should have granted time to supply the necessary stamp.

Limitation—Step in aid of execution.

BACHARAJ v. BEHAJI, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 47.

On the 3rd July 1900, the Plaintiff obtained a decree in the terms of an award whereby he was required to pay a certain sum by annual instalments and to reduce the mortgaged property. It was further provided in the decree that if the Plaintiff failed to pay any two instalments to the Defendant in time his right to redeem should for ever be foreclosed. Subsequent to the decree two instalments in full and one instalment in part were paid by the Plaintiff to the Defendant. No other instalment was paid thereafter. An application was made on the 20th July 1905 to the Court for certifying those payments in satisfaction of the decree. This application was signed by the Plaintiff and was consented to by the Defendant. On the 14th December 1907, an application was made for an order of foreclosure in terms of the decree but that application was dismissed for non-prosecution. On the 29th March 1909 a similar application was again made.

Held—That the application was not time barred. The application of 20th July 1905, was sufficient to give a fresh starting point to limitation.

Intention to defraud but no fraud actually committed—Mortgage.

GIRDHARI LAL v. YASHODA BAI, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 10.

The Plaintiff sued to recover the amount due upon a mortgage. The defence was that the mortgage deed was passed in order to protect the property from the Defendant's creditor R. The Defendant stated in his evidence that the consideration for the deed was received in the Registration Office and repaid to the mortgagees outside the office The properties were attached by the creditor R and the mortgagee then made claims on the basis of the deeds for release of the property from attachment. The mortgagor admitted the claims and the Court ordered that the property should be sold subject to the mortgage above mentioned. The properties were however not sold because the Defendant paid off the creditor before the order for the sale was carried into effect.

Held—No fraud being actually effectuated there was no reason why the Court should punish intention of the Defendant by making an order against him. The present case was distinguishable from the cases where it was held that the Defendant could not be allowed to defeat the Plaintiff's claim by pleading his own fraud. The distinction lay in the fact that in the present case the creditor was not defrauded.

THE LAW OF BENAMI TRANSACTIONS. By C. S. Somanatha Sastri and P. Ramanatha Iyer. Published by the Proprietors of the Law Printing House, Madras and the Lawyer's Companion office, Trichinopoley and Madras. 1913. Price Rs. 4.

The Benamdar when he crossed the view of Anglo Indian Judges did not receive a warm welcome. However, he came to stay and room had to be made for him, however unwillingly. He was the nearest approach in Indian law to the English trustee, without however his obligations of honesty, imposed by a jealous Court of Chancery. The Judges however went to work on the institution and by dint of judicial trimming, a fair body of rules tending on the whole to secure a passable amount of justice and fair dealing have been brought into shape. This book is an ably prepared summary and critique of these rules, fairly exhaustive and logically pieced together. It will save the lawyer any amount of unsystematic search for authorities through the mazes of "Digests" and "Indexes of Cases"—and we shall not be surprised if it does more, viz., by aiding in shaping the law itself on lines more in conformity with notions of justice and fair dealing. We give this work a hearty welcome—far heartier indeed than the Judges were inclined to give to its subject, the Benamdar.

This is quite an exhaustive treatment of the subject by one having to administer the law thereon in the capacity of a Judge. The notes are admirable and up-to-date. In an appendix are reproduced the repealed Acts beginning from Act XLII of 1860, the statement of the Objects and Reasons of the Bill which passed into the present Act, the Report of the Select Committee thereon and an abstract of the Proceedings of Council which led up to its enactment.

DESAI'S POINT NOTED INDEX OF CASES JUDICIALLY noticed. 1811—1912. By Balwantrai R. Desai, Fourth Edition. Baroda. Printed by M. V. Shah in his Vidya Vilas Printing Press. 1914. Price Rs. 12.

Mr. Desai's Index proved itself indispensable from the very moment of its publication, and that it has since held the field is due in no small measure to the unceasing efforts of the compiler to improve its usefulness as a book of reference. In the present edition the most notable change is the analysis of the cases reported in the I. L. R. Series in which more than one point has been decided into their component elements and the separate citation of later cases in which the earlier case has been noticed with reference to those special points. It will add to the utility of the work if in citing the cases in which a previous case has been judicially noticed care is taken to show that the references to two or more reports of the same judgment are really not independent references. The book, useful as it is, still admits of further improvement and the compiler will, we are sure, not spare any trouble which will add to its usefulness.

NOTES ON MAINE'S ANCIENT LAW. By Protap Chandra Sen Gupta, M. A. B. L. Rai M. C. Sarkar Bahadur and Sons. Law Publishers and Book Sellers. 75, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1913.

This is a carefully prepared abstract of Maine's classical work intended for use by students preparing for law examinations. Maine's treatment of the subject is somewhat diffuse—though considering the nature of the subject by no means unnecessarily so—and an abstract like the present should prove of great assistance to the beginner in mastering ideas which to him must appear to be both abstruse and unfamiliar.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE INDIAN LAW OF TRANSFER INTERVIVOS. By Satya Ranjan Sen B. L. Chakraburtty Chatterjee & Co., 15 College Square, Calcutta. 1913. Re. 1.

This is another students' book and written with insight into the principles underlying the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and knowledge of the needs of students. There is a large field of work as yet only inadequately exploited for writers of books for law students viz., the adaptation of the provisions of the Indian Codes to the needs of students of law and the exposition of the principles upon which they are based for their benefit. Mr. Mulla's books on the Civil Procedure Code, Hindu Law and Mahomedan Law may serve as models. The Transfer of Property Act and related statutes certainly afford scope for a real text-book prepared on a more ambitious plan than the present note-book and we would very much like to see it undertaken by the author or others engaged in a similar class of work.

ANALYSIS OF THE LAW ON CONTRACTS AND TORTS for the use of students. By A. M. Wilshere M. A. LL. B., and Douglas Robb. B. A., London: Sweet and Maxwell Limited. 3 Chancery Lane, W. C. Toronto. Canada: The Carswell Company. Ld. 1914. Price 6s.

This is another students' book founded on the corresponding portions of Dr. Blake Odgers' "The Common Law of England." These subjects are not dealt with exhaustively in the original work, the object of which is to give students a good grounding in the principles rather than the details of law, and the present authors by epitomising it (at the instance, be it noted, of the Publishers of the original work) have sought to furnish students with fingerposts to guide and direct them in their appreciation of the original work. Part I deals with contracts in general; part II with Torts, part III deals with special contracts, such as contracts for sale of goods, negotiable instruments, contracts of agency, contracts between master and servant and contracts of bailment and carriage, and contracts by persons under disability.

SRIMUTTY MANOKARANI DEBI v. HARIPADA MITTER.

were anxious to prevent the sale of the mortgaged premises in a suit brought by the mortgagees. It is argued that this is not evidence against the Plaintiffs as they do not claim through their parents but as heirs to Lokenath. I admitted the affidavit, however, regarding the parents as the guardians of the Plaintiffs and so capable of making admissions against their interests on their behalf. And I take the affidavit as showing that Rambullav did leave debts which were not liquidated in 1871, the date of the mortgage to Chunamull. This goes to show that Rambullav left some debts that had to be met by the widow selling a part of his estate and there may very well have been more.

In conclusion the learned Judge observed as follows:—

Taking all this evidence together I consider that the Defendant has made out a kind of case in favour of her contention. It is undeniably weak one; but in considering whether it is too weak for me to rely on it I must consider the circumstances under which it is brought. A remarkable feature of the Plaintiff's case is that he has brought it only three weeks before the expiration of the time when the Statute of Limitation would have applied. The fathers of the Plaintiffs who would probably have had some knowledge of the circumstances under which the Conveyance was made are both dead, and their mothers are not called. The two fathers Dwarkanath and Nittya seem to have died before Monmohini, but Pulin Behari the Plaintiff, who gave evidence, admits that he did not know of the property in question or that he could claim any interest in it before 1897 when he became aware of it in the course of another suit. He alleges poverty as a reason for not asserting his rights at an earlier period but there seems no particular reason for supposing that he was in worse circumstances in 1897 than he was when this suit was brought. The facts on which the Plaintiffs rely are not disputed and the onus of proving her case therefore lies on the Defendant. At the same time the Plaintiffs' delay and his inability to produce more cogent evidence than he has justified me in accepting a weaker proof of the Defendant's case than I should require in other circumstances. I therefore hold that the Defendant has proved that Monmohini sold to her predecessor in title for necessity and that her predecessor was justified in believing that she did so I accordingly give judgment for the Defendant with costs on Scale No. 2.

Against the said decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the said High Court in its Appellate jurisdiction, and the Appeal was heard by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. and Woodroffe, J. The learned Chief Justice delivered his Judgment (in which Woodroffe, J. concurred) on the 4th February, 1910.

After stating the facts Jenkins, C. J. in his Judgment observed:—

"Though oral evidence was adduced the learned Judge placed no reliance on it, for he held that it gave "very little basis for the Defendant's case that Monmohini sold this property from necessity," and he therefore directed his attention to the documentary evidence on which alone his conclusion rests. I accept the learned Judge's appreciation of the oral evidence, and I therefore will, as he did, consider whether the documentary evidence suffices to establish the Defendant's case. What principally impressed the learned Judge was an affidavit made in a suit brought by one Chunamull against Monmohini which he admitted, notwithstanding the Plaintiff's objection, as an admission, "regarding the parents as the guardians of the Plaintiffs and so capable of making admissions against their interests in their behalf." But the relevance of an admission must be determind by reference to the terms of the Evidence Act, and I can find nothing in that Act which supports the view of the learned Judge.

The present Plaintiffs in no sense derive their interest in the subject-matter of the suit from their parents nor can their parents be regarded as having been expressly or impliedly authorised by them to make the admission. I therefore hold that the affidavit is not admissible in evidence against the Plaintiffs.

Then what else is there in the case on which to rest the Defendant's claim? There is no proof of an entry in any family books of account, for none are produced. The absence of these books might, if unexplained, excite a certain amount of suspicion against the Plaintiffs, but the suggestion made by Pulin Behari, one of the Plaintiffs, in explanation of their disappearance evidently impressed Stephen, J. favourably and I see no reason for not accepting it.

In the conveyance to Juggoo Lal the existence of two debts is no doubt asserted but the authorities show that this is not proof, and beyond this there is no other document on which reliance has been placed either by Stephen, J., or by counsel before us.

Nor is the meagreness of the evidence adduced on her behalf, the only difficulty in the Defendant's way.

In 1857 Jadu Nath Mitter presented a petition to the Court for the grant to him of Letters of-Administration to the estate and effects of Ram Bullav Bose during the minority of his cousin, Loke Nath, and in that petition it is alleged that Ram Bullav left Company's paper belonging to him. But neither in this petition nor in the accounts filed by Jadu Nath Mitter as administrator is there any trace of this debt.

Then again the peti ion for a certificate of guardianship to her son Loke Nath presented by Monmohini in 1866 shows that Ram Bullav left property including two money lending businesses, one in Calcutta and the other at Sonamoyi, and this agrees with the evidence of the Defendant's own witnesses, Kedar Nath Mozumdar and Anundo Chunder Chatterjee, that Ram Bullav when he died was a man of some means. Then the sale was after the death of Loke Nath, and more than 10 years after the death of Ram Bullav and the purchase money was only Rs. 2,500.

It is true that in the conveyance Monmohini is said to have been identified by her sons-in-law, but the suggestion on the part of the Plaintiff is that it was the extravagance of one of them Dwarkanath that led to the sale and it was elicited in the cross-examination of Kedar Nath that he was very extravagant and was constantly going to Monmohini for money, and it is further shown that Dwarkanath had something to do with the handling of the purchase-money.

It is true that there has been considerable delay in the institution of this suit, and this delay appears the greater because of the length of time that elapsed before the reversion fell in. But it is not usual for a reversioner to sue during the lifetime of the widow and in fact this suit is within time. The delay that has occured since the widow's death has been reasonably explained as atributable to the pendency of another suit and the lack of means to meet the expenses of the litigation.

The conclusion then to which I come is that the Defendant has failed to prove the existence of legal necessity, nor has it been shown that the purchaser used reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such legal necessity or acted in good faith. The appeal therefore should, in my opinion, be allowed and a decree passed that the Defendant do put the Plaintiff in possession of the property."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. and Mr. Dunne for the Appellant submitted that it was proved that the conveyance was made by the widow for legal necessity, namely, for discharging the debts due from her deceased husband. The recitals in the conveyance were some evidence of the existence of actual pressure on her estate and the existence of the debts which were discharged. The Appellate Court was not quite correct in thinking that Stephen, J., had disbelieved the oral evidence. That evidence consisted of very old men and at this distance of time it was difficult to produce better evidence. The Respondent did not produce the accounts which would have shewn that there were debts due from the estate. Further, the affidavit was admissible in evidence. It was made by the fathers of the Plaintiffs, who were their natural guardians. They made it in order to safeguard the interests of the Plaintiffs and it was binding upon them. In any case the purchaser paid full consideration and acted in good faith and after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of pressure on her estate and necessity for the sale. Sec. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applied, and it must be presumed that there was necessity for the sale. A Hindu widow's powers resemble those of a manager. Reference was made to Hanooman Prasad v. Muntaj (1). The Collector of Masulipatan v. Cavaly Vencata Narainapah (2).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Respondents, were not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—Their Lordships have had the case on behalf of the Appellant very fully and forcibly put before them, and their attention has been called to the judgment of the Judge at the trial, and to the judgment of the High Court in its Appellate jurisdiction. They are of opinion that the latter judgment, from which this Appeal is brought, is a judgment based upon proper principles and upon a due appreciation of the evidence in the case, and they can see no reason for differing from it. They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal ought to be dismissed, and the Appellant must pay the costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.]

STEPHEN, J. 1914, 1 and 8, April. } EMPEROR v. NIRMAL KANTA ROY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 403—Autrefois acquit—"Any other offence with which he might have been charged," meaning and effect of—Acquittal on charge of murder if bar to trial on charge of culpable homicide where culpable homicide was charged in the previous trial—Acquittal on charge under sec. $\frac{302}{34}$, *I. murder of one A, fifthly, culpable homicide of A. The accused pleaded Not Guilty to all the charges. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the first and the fourth charges and differed as to the other counts, there being not as many as six who agreed in opinion. The Judge discharged the jury under sec. 305, Cr. P. C., and directed a retrial. On the retrial of the accused before a fresh jury on the remaining counts of the indictment the accused pleaded Not Guilty as also autrefois acquit, and it was urged in defence (1) that as the accused had been acquitted of the charge of murder of A, he could not be tried again for committing culpable homicide on him; and (2) that as he had been acquitted of an offence under sec. $\frac{302}{34}$, I. P. C, in relation to the murder of N, he could not be convicted of an offence in relation to the same man under sec. $\frac{302}{109}$ or $\frac{302}{114}$, I. P. C.:

Held—That sec. 403, Cr. P. C., protected the accused only against a trial for murder and any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him "might have been made." But the offence of culpable homicide for which he was tried again was one of the charges actually made against him and on the terms of sec. 403, Cr. P. C., the first objection failed. If the accused had been charged with murder alone, a verdict of Not Guilty would have protected him from another trial for culpable homicide and were he acquitted of culpable homicide he would be protected from a trial for any offence involving hurt; but where a charge was made the case fell outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it might have been made.

That for the purposes of sec. 403, the accused was not being tried again but was being tried on the original indictment and on his first plea of Not Guilty. Sec. 308, Cr. P. C, did not affect the construction of sec. 403.

That sec. 403 should not be construed with reference to the English law relating to criminal pleading. Secs. 271 and 272, Cr. P. C., contain all that is necessary as to pleading and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature.

That the plea of Not Guilty was one not recognised by the Code of Criminal Procedure and it was not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except Guilty or a claim to be tried.

Sec. 403 has nothing to do with pleading, but is in terms of a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court. A defence under that section may be set up at any time before verdict in any form.

That even assuming the case to be governed by the English law of pleading, autrefois acquit was not properly pleaded.

That the accused had already pleaded Not Guilty in the first trial and that plea was still awaiting adjudication and the second plea was therefore unnecessary and of no effect.

That even if the principles of English law were to be applied to the present case the acquittal for murder was no bar to the retrial for culpable homicide.

Where another person actually killed the deceased, the accused who was stated to have accompanied him and attempted to kill him could not be charged with the murder under sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code.

Sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code is to be read according to the meaning of its terms without reference to any doctrines derived from the English Common Law.

EMPEROR v. NIRMAL KANTA ROY.

The construction put on the section in R. v. MAHABIR TIWARI (5), and GOURIDAS NOMASUDRA v. THE EMPEROR (6) (which is summarised in para. 243 of Mayne's Criminal Law) is wider than the terms of the section justify.

The finding of Not Guilty by the jury on the charge under sec. $\frac{302}{34}$, I. P. C, under the direction of the Judge for an acquittal on legal grounds did not decide any question of fact and could not be taken as negativing the common intention of the accused and the man who in fact killed N.

That there is no reason for saying that a man must be absent in order to abet under sec. 109, I. P. C.

That by instigating the unknown murderer by accompanying him to the place and by aiding him in his flight afterwards, the accused would be abetting the murder under sec. 109, I. P. C., even if he was not present at the murder; his presence there would make him liable for the murder under sec. 114.

The effect of sec. 109 and sec. 114 of the Penal Code is to supersede all the English law relating to principals of the first and second degrees and accessories before the act.

The facts of this case necessary for the purposes of this report are as follows. On the night of the 19th January 1914 at about 8 P. M. one Nripendra Nath Ghosh, an Inspector of Police, was shot dead by a revolver. It was alleged that two persons took part in the murder, but the shots from the revolver of only one of them had taken effect. The accused Nirmal Kanto Roy was alleged to have been one of the two persons who fired at the Inspector, but did not actually hit him. The prosecution also alleged that both the assailants were thereupon pursued, the other escaped, and the accused on being further pursued was caught hold of by his chadar by a little boy named Ananto Teli. Thereupon, it was alleged, the accused fired and killed Ananto Teli, and continued running on till he was captured.

The case was committed to the High Court Sessions and tried before a Special jury. The charge contained five counts and was as follows :—

1. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy on or about the 19th day of January 1914 in Calcutta aforesaid in conjunction with another person in furtherence of the common intention of himself and of that other person did commit murder by intentionally or knowingly causing the death of one Nripendra Nath Ghose and thereby he the said Nirmal Kanta Roy committed an offence punishable under sec. 302 read with sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code :

2. That some person unknown at or atout the time and in the place aforesaid committed murder by causing the death of the said Nripendra Nath Ghose and he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy, who if absent would have been punishable as an abettor of such offence in consequence of such abetment, was present when such offence was committed and thereby he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under secs. 114 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

3. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy at or about the time and in the place aforesaid abetted some person unknown in committing the offence in the first charge mentioned which offence was committed in consequence of such abetment, and thereby the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under secs. 109 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

4. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy at or about the time and in the place aforesaid committed murder by causing the death of one Ananto Teli otherwise called Antu Teli and thereby he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

5. That he the said Nirmal Kanto Roy at or about the time and in the place aforesaid and in course of the said transaction committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder by causing the death of the said Ananto Teli otherwise called Antu Teli and thereby the said Nirmal Kanto Roy committed an offence punishable under sec. 304 of the Indian Penal Code.

At the close of the evidence, the learned Judge said that he was of opinion that sec. 34, I. P. C., did not apply to the facts of this case and directed the jury to bring in a verdict of Not Guilty on the first count and they did so. After retiring, the jury brought in a unanimous verdict of Not Guilty on the fourth count, viz., that of murdering Ananto Teli, but were divided in the proportion of 5 to 4 on the other counts. The Judge thereupon took the verdict of acquittal on the first and fourth counts, and discharged the jury and ordered a re-trial on the three counts as to which the jury were not agreed.

The re-trial came on before the same Judge and another special jury. But before the new jury was empanelled or the indictment read, the accused through his counsel took the preliminary plea of autrefois acquit.

Mr. Norton (with Messrs. C. R. Das, J. N. Ray, L. Palit, W. Sen-Gupta and S. N. Roy) for the Accused.—Before the charge is read, I want to take the plea of autrefois acquit.

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel, and Mr. E. P. Ghosh) for the Crown.—It ought to be taken after the charges are read.

[STEPHEN, J.—We are not so technical.]

Mr. Norton.—My first point is that my client has been acquitted of the murder of Ananto Teli. The jury could have convicted him of culpable homicide. But they have not done so. No man is to be tried for an offence twice. Your Lordship did not sum up or explain the charge of culpable homicide. You charged them only for murder. My client was acquitted of that. The jury could have convicted him of the lesser offence of culpable homicide, but they did not. Refers to Archbold (last Ed.) p. 177. R. v. Grimwood (4). This principle is incorporated in sec. 403 of Criminal Procedure Code. The test is "was I in jeopardy of being convicted." The point is not what the jury did, but what the jury could have done. Your Lordship not having directed the jury about culpable homicide the jury was bound in law to bring in a verdict of Not Guilty on that minor count. Refers to Reg v. Ebrington (7), Reg v. Thos Morris (8), Archbold p. 235.

My next objection relates to the two counts of abetment of the murder of the Inspector. On the last trial, there were three charges regarding this, viz., (1) under sec. 302, I. P. C. read with sec. 34, (2) sec. 302 read with sec. 109, (3) sec. 302 read with sec. 114. Your Lordship directed the jury to acquit my client under sec. 302 read with sec. 34. That necessarily is a bar to a trial under sec. 302 read with sec. 109 or sec. 302 read with sec. 114. Abetment is defined in sec. 107. Firstly, there is no possible evidence of instigation in this case. Secondly, it requires common intention. That is covered by sec. 34.

Mr. Norton.—Sec. 34 relates to cases where one person is present in furtherance of the common intention and another does the act, they are both equally guilty. The jury have acquitted my client under sec. 302 read with sec. 34, therefore they have negatived common intention and conspiracy. Therefore there cannot be abetment. See sec. 109 and sec. 114. Some of these cases fall under sec. 34 Therefore an acquittal under sec. 34 would bar a subsequent trial under sec. 109. As regards sec. 114, a person merely by being present does not make himself liable under this section; he must have been liable for abetment even if he were absent. See Queen v. Dwarkanath (9), Abhi Misser v. Luchmi Narain (10), follows Queen v. Dwarkanath (9), Keshvar v. Girish (11).

Mr. C. R. Das follows:—The principle of sec. 305, Cr. P. Code, is that the verdict must be one entire verdict. Your Lordship has accepted a verdict, and it must cover all the charges. See Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (12). This shows that the word verdict in sec. 423, Cr. P. C., means one entire verdict. See also, Queen-Empress v. Croft (13), (where the offences were distinct), Koplan v. Smith (14), Ram Sabak v. Emperor (15), Sharbekhan v. Emperor (16), Queen-Empress v. Subadar Krishnappa (17), Queen-Empress v. Erramreddi (18). These cases show that there must be one entire verdict. See also Kenny's Criminal Law pp. 470, 471. If two charges are substantially the same, acquittal on one bars a trial on the other, e. g., acquittal on common assault bars a trial on grievous hurt. Your Lordship need not have accepted the verdict under sec. 302, as it was not one entire verdict. But as my client was once placed in jeopardy of a conviction, he cannot be tried again. The same bundle of facts have been adjudicated upon, and there cannot be a trial on the same facts. See Russel on Crimes (7th Ed.) p. 1982; Archbold p. 235; Harris' Criminal Law p. 379.

Your Lordship's direction to the jury amounted in law to this that if the jury believed those facts, it was murder and nothing less than murder. The jury have found it was not murder. Therefore, in law, they must be taken to have negatived anything which falls short of murder.

As regards the charges of abetment of the murder of the Inspector the case for the prosecution is that both the accused and the other man fired, and the result was that the shots of the other man hit the Inspector and he died. Under these circumstances, the offence clearly is under sec. 34 read with sec. 302. I will not enter into the discussion whether sec. 34 and sec. 114 are mutually exclusive. The jury under your Lordship's direction has acquitted me of sec. 34. It is not open to the prosecution to try me again under sec. 114. The language of sec. 114 is so clear that the facts on which the Crown relies cannot come under sec. 114. This section applies only to cases where the accused is already an abettor before he is present at the transaction itself. Under sec. 34, it is not necessay that all of them must do something. Common design is all that is necessary. See Queen v. Gora Chand (19).

Mr. Sinha.—I am bound to point out that this plea of autrefois acquit has not been taken at the proper time. See Roscoe's Criminal Procedure (8th Ed.) p. 169; 9 Vol. Halsbury, p. 355. There must be formal proof of acquittal, identity of accused, &c. This can be done by formally tendering in evidence the original indictment and the minutes of the Court, &c.

[STEPHEN, J.—The Court can refer to its own notes.]

Mr. Sinha.—Of the five charges on which the accused was tried on the first trial, there is no verdic before the Court on three of those charges, viz., culpable homicide of Antoo Teli, and two charges of abetment of the murder of the Inspector. Therefore the accused is being retried on these three charges. It has been contended by the other side that the accused was once in jeopardy of being convicted, and therefore he cannot be retried again. This principle of jeopardy, as stated, is too broad. If this principle were correct, then in every case where a jury disagrees, there cannot be a retrial. See sec. 403, Cr. P. C. The words are 'might have been.' The true principle is stated in O'Connell v. Queen (20). Each count in an indictment is a separate indictment. See Archbold, p. 82. Therefore there must be separate verdicts on each count. The contention that the verdict must be one entire verdict on all the charges is absurd. For instance, if two persons are jointly indicted and one of them is let off, but there is disagreement with regard to the other, is it to be said that if the second is to be re-tried, the man who has been let off should be tried again? Suppose again, a man is charged with murder, culpable homicide, grievous hurt, and simple hurt. The jury are unanimous with regard to the graver offences that the man is Not Guilty but are not agreed as to simple hurt. If he is tried again, must he be tried again for the offences of which he was acquitted, because "there must be one entire verdict" for the whole lot? That would be absurd. According to the practice of this Court also, re-trials have taken place under circumstances similar to this. From the Court minutes in the Crown Office it would appear that in 1906, a man was tried for culpable homicide, grievous hurt and simple hurt. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the graver charges but was divided in the proportion of 5 to 4 as regards hurt. A re-trial was ordered. In 1904, in another case a man was tried for forgery for the purposes of cheating and also using as genuine a forged document. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the first charge and were divided, 5 to 4, on the second charge. A re-trial was ordered.

In Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (12), there was a trial in the mofussil for murder and grievous hurt. There was no charge of culpable homicide. The jury were unanimous for acquittal with regard to one charge but were not agreed with regard to the other. The High Court set aside the verdict under sec. 423, Cr. P. Code, and it was held that it must be taken to have set aside everything, namely, even the verdict of Not Guilty. This case therefore does not help the other side.

The doctrine underlying these pleas is set forth in Queen v. Miles (21). The principle is analogous to that of res judicata. It applies only "where a criminal charge has been adjudicated upon." See Queen v. Miles (21). Where the substratum of a charge is taken away, the more aggravated offence cannot be tried. In this case the jury only negatived the murder of Antoo Teli. But they did not negative culpable homicide. They expressly said so. They could not arrive at a conclusion. The case in R v. Grimwood (4), is a case similar to Queen v. Miles (21). The cases may be put thus. If there is a charge of a minor offence and there is an acquittal, you cannot try him on a graver charge. If there is conviction on the minor offence, you cannot try him on the major offence, because that would mean punishing him twice over. But does it follow from this that where a man has been acquitted of the major offence, the minor charge is necessarily negatived? I submit not.

As regards the charges of abetment, the other side says that there being an acquittal on sec. 34, there cannot be any trial on sec. 114 or sec. 109. But abetment is a substantive offence. It is not a minor offence. A man cannot be convicted of abetment, if there is no such specific charge.

(4) 60 J. P. 809 (1894).
(21) 24 Q. B. D. 423, at p. 430 (1890).

Each charge being a separate indictment must be adjudicated upon separately.

Mr. C. R. Das, in reply. See Archbold p. 189, the doctrine of res judicata does not apply. But I don't say that the question of adjudication is not to be considered. Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (12), is a direct authority that "verdict" means one entire verdict. See Archbold, p. 82. Where the offences are distinct offences, I don't say that my argument will apply. But where the offences are not different you cannot retry. If there are different offences, the verdict may be a different verdict for each offence. See Latham v. Queen (3), where there were different offences.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

STEPHEN, J.—The accused in this case has been indicted under five counts. These are, firstly, the murder of Nripendra Nath Ghose under secs. 302 and 34 of the I. P. C.: secondly, murder of the same man under secs. 114 and 302, I. P. C.: thirdly, abetting the murder of the same man under secs. 109 and 302, I. P. C.: fourthly, the murder of Ananto Teli: fifthly, culpable homicide of Ananto Teli. To these charges he pleaded Not Guilty. I told the jury that there was no evidence of an offence under the first count and they acquitted him accordingly. The jury differed as to his guilt under the second and third charges and there were not as many as six who agreed in opinion. The jury unanimously acquitted him of murder under the fourth charge, and differed as to the fifth charge, without six agreeing in opinion. I accordingly discharged the jury under sec. 305, Cr. P. Code.

(12) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 377 (1895).

EMPEROR v. NIRMAL KANTA ROY.

The accused was then tried again in accordance with sec. 308 of the Code: and as he wished to raise a defence under sec. 403 I allowed him to be charged and to plead again though I doubted if this were necessary or had any legal effect.

To every remaining charge of the indictment, that is to the second, third and fifth, he pleaded Not Guilty and that he had been previously acquitted: care being taken that he should make the two pleas at the same time.

The points that have been argued on his behalf are that as he was acquitted of the charge of murder of Ananto, he cannot be tried again for committing culpable homicide on him; that as he has been acquitted of an offence under sec. 302 read with sec. 34 in relation to the murder of Nripendra he cannot be convicted of an offence in relation to the same man under sec. 302 read with sec. 109 or sec. 114: that, as I told the jury, that if they believed the facts related as to the killing of Ananto I did not see how they could convict the accused of any offence less than murder, the jurors had no right to convict him of any less offence, and consequently those of the jurors who considered him guilty of culpable homicide ought to have found him Not Guilty in which case there would have been a unanimous verdict of Not Guilty.

For reasons I shall state in a moment I do not consider that it is necessary to refer this matter in any way to the jury: but in case my opinion as to this should be dissented from hereafter, I propose to take a verdict on the plea relating to a previous acquittal though as there are no facts for them to decide, I shall tell them that as a matter of law they are bound to return a verdict that the plea is not made out.

The first point depends, and in my opinion, depends solely on the construction to be put on sec. 403, Cr. P. C. This provides that a person who has "once been tried . . . for an offence" and acquitted "shall not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under sec 236, or for which he might have been convicted under sec 237."

By sec. 236 "if a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences" By sec. 237 "if in the case mentioned in sec. 236, the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence, for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it." I am of opinion that sec. 235 dealing with acts in a series so connected together as to form one transaction has no application to the present case; consequently neither sub-sec. (2) nor any of the other sub-sections need be immediately considered. In this case the evidence discloses only one illegal act as far as Ananto is concerned, and the accused has been charged in the alternative with having committed murder or culpable homicide of Ananto, a procedure the correctness of which has not been disputed. Sec. 403, however, protects him only against a trial for murder and "any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him" might have been made. But the offence of culpable homicide for which it is now proposed to try him is the same charge that was made against him, and on the terms of the section therefore this defence must fail. If he had been charged with murder alone, no doubt a verdict of Not Guilty would protect him from another trial for culpable homicide: and should he be acquitted of culpable homicide he will be protected from a trial for any offence involving hurt: but where a charge was made, the case falls outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it might have been made. Then the procedure relating to the discharge of the jury seems to me to be wholly inconsistent with the possibility of a verdict on one charge acting as a decision of another. By sec. 303 (1) of the Code the jury are to return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried. They have returned a verdict on two; there remain three that have to be dealt with by another jury under sec. 308. This procedure seems to me as obvious as it is reasonable.

Also, for the purposes of sec 403 I do not consider that the accused is being tried again. He is being tried on the original indictment, and I consider that he is being tried on his first plea of Not Guilty. The duty of the Court is to continue the trial of the accused before another jury: and the process may continue till a verdict is passed on all the counts without the accused being "tried again" under sec. 403. I am aware that sec. 308 refers to the accused being retried, but this does not affect the construction of sec. 403.

It is however, if I have rightly understood the argument for the accused, contended that sec. 403 must be construed with reference to the English law relating to criminal pleading. I think this is an erroneous view, and that for the following reasons.

Secs. 271 and 272 of the Criminal Procedure Code contain all that is necessary as to pleading, and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature. The accused can plead Guilty under sec. 271, he can claim to be tried, or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried. The plea of Not Guilty is thus one not recognised by the Code and this has been the law since 1872 at least: and I suppose that this is intentional, and is designed to get rid of a great mass of English law relating to criminal pleading which for more than half a century has been discredited, and is in fact falling into an oblivion, which for practical purposes it well deserves.

I consider, therefore, that it is not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except Guilty or a claim to be tried. If an accused claims to be tried I am of opinion that, subject to special provisions, he can take any objection to his trial or conviction at any time, before verdict at any rate, and in any form, that the Court sees fit to allow. In particular I conceive that sec. 403 has nothing to do with pleading: but is in terms of a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court; for if a man is not liable to be tried, the Court has no jurisdiction to try him. I consequently think that a defence under that section may be set up at any time before verdict, in any form; and that it is to be decided on the terms of sec. 403 which seem to me to decide clearly and reasonably all the questions that have, as far as I know, arisen in England as to the effect of the pleas of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, several of which still remain undecided for practical purposes.

Under these circumstances I hold that the question whether the accused can now be tried for culpable homicide is a question of law to be decided by me without reference to the jury: and I decide accordingly that he can, and indeed must, be so tried.

With a view, however, to what may happen hereafter I propose to put the matter to the jury in the way I have mentioned.

Although I have thus decided this matter without reference to English law, I have been referred to a considerable number of English authorities on various points.

But, in the first place, supposing the acquittal of the accused to have been properly made the subject of a plea and supposing the case to be governed by English law the accused is met by difficulty as to the form in which he has pleaded which seems to me fatal to his contention. For though he pleaded Not Guilty at the time that he pleaded autrefois acquit and thus brought himself within the rule laid down in Archbold's Criminal Pleading, page 181, which is of authority in such matters, he had already pleaded Not Guilty in the previous trial or rather at the commencement of this trial, and that plea is still awaiting adjudication. The second plea was therefore unnecessary and of no effect. The case falls therefore within the decision of Alverstone L. C. J., in R. v. Banks (1) where, after saying that the point before him is an extremely technical one (though not more technical than the present one) and may therefore be met with a technical answer, he lays down that "a Defendant having pleaded Not Guilty to an indictment is not entitled, while that plea is standing, to have a plea of autrefois acquit put on the record." The accused in fact seems to have pleaded double in circumstances in which that course is not allowed by law. Assuming this case therefore to be governed by the English law of pleading, I hold that autrefois acquit has not been properly pleaded.

It would seem from the same authority and the case there quoted that the proper course to have followed according to English Law would have been to take a verdict from the jury at once, if indeed one is needed, when all the facts to be ascertained are on the record. It is said however that a jury that is already empanelled may decide the issue, Russel on Crimes, 7th Ed., p. 1996, and R. v. Parry (2).

The English law applicable to an indictment for manslaughter after an acquittal for murder on the same facts is beyond doubt, as an indictment for the major puts the accused in jeopardy of a conviction for the minor offence, Russell p. 1963; but I have searched the modern leading authorities in vain for any decision or any rule as to the effect of a verdict on one count on the decision on another. All the numerous cases that I have been able to verify refer to indictments following acquittals or convictions on previous indictments or informations, and in most of the cases it is decided in terms that the indictment is good or bad as the case may be. This follows from the fact that in England an indictment is a highly formal document, and the finding of a fresh indictment is the criterion of the institution of a new trial. But in this case there is no question of the indictment being in any way defective. Each count in an indictment is for the purposes of evidence and judgment a separate indictment, Latham v R (3), see Archbold p. 82, and also Stephen's Digest of Criminal Procedure, Art. 236, and would seem to stand or fall independently of one another. The one reported case where a conviction on one count was held to support a plea of autrefois convict on a subsequent trial on another count is R. v. Grimwood (4). Here, on an indictment for causing grievous bodily harm and other offences involving assault and for common assault, the jury disagreed as to the major charges and convicted of assault. The Recorder sent the indictment to Assizes for the re trial on the major counts and Pollock B. held that the prisoner was autrefois convict and could not be tried again. The same result would, one may assume, have followed had the first verdict been one of acquittal, though in that case the basis for the major charges would have been negatived. But I cannot regard this case as of any high authority It was decided on circuit without further consideration. It is, as far as I am aware, only reported in J. P It is referred to in Archbold 24th Ed. at p. 235, but is not referred to in the far more authoritative Russell, though the 17th Ed of that work is edited by Mr. Craies, the very learned editor of the 24th Ed of Archbold The silence of other works of authority on the matter is significant, and I cannot regard the report in the Justice of the Peace as showing more than that the very experienced Judge who tried the case considered it inexpedient that it should proceed further. I consider therefore that there is no English authority for the contention that a verdict on one count can in the case of a re-trial after disagreement of the jury affect the trial on another count. And on principle I can see no reason why a verdict on one count should have an effect in a re-trial on the same indictment that it would not have at the original trial. I therefore hold that even if the principles of English law are to be applied to the present case the acquittal for murder is no bar to the re-trial for culpable homicide. But in finding that the acquittal for murder is no such bar I rely on my finding that the case is to be decided solely on the effect of sec. 403, Criminal Procedure Code.

The second point depends on the terms of sec 34 This provides that "when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone." In this case the killing of Nripendra was, according to the evidence, done by one person who was not the accused. It was therefore not done by several persons and I do not see how the section can apply.

The only act that the accused can be liable for under the section is one done by several persons of whom he was one, that is, by the man who escaped and himself. They may have committed many criminal acts together: but they did not both kill Nripendra The difference between the acts of the two men is that the one actually killed the Inspector, and the other, the accused, merely attempted to kill him. In order to make the accused liable for murder under sec 34 it would be necessary to say that an offence and an attempt to commit it are the same "act," which seems to me not to be the case. I am aware that a wider construction has been placed on the section in R. v. Mahabir Tiwari (5), and see Gouridas Nomasudra v. The Emperor (6), which is however an essentially different case from the present. The view that is indicated in these cases is plainly stated in Mr. Mayne's comment on this section in para 243 of his well known work. He there paraphrases sec. 34 thus: "When several persons unite with a common purpose to effect any criminal object, all who assist in the accomplishment of that object are equally guilty, though some may be at a distance from the spot where the crime is committed and ignorant of what is actually being done." This is not what the section says as I read it, and I consider the paraphrase is incorrect. The fact is that the learned author has taken the section as embodying the distinction between the principals in the first and second degree recognised by the Common Law, and its practical abolition by the Consolidation Acts of 24 and 25 Vict, (1861) passed subsequently to the enactment of the Penal Code. The present state of the English law on the subject is compendiously stated in Arts. 36, 38, and 45 of Stephen's Digest, the two earlier Articles setting out the Common Law rules, the last the means taken to nullify them: but I cannot suppose that it was intended to reproduce such a complicated system into India, any more than that the words of sec. 34 produce any such result. A justification of this opinion on historical grounds may be found by reference to the draft Penal Code of 1837 (Macaulay's Code), sec. 3 and Chap. IV, "Of Abetment," secs. 85-108, and Chap. IV of the Report thereon in 1846, especially paras. 179, 182, 189, and para 662 in the Postscript. Art. 30 of Stephen's Digest is practically the same as Mr. Mayne's paraphrase; but no provision similar to the rule there stated is to be found in the Penal Code except in sec. 149, where the rule is applied to unlawful assemblies.

Under these circumstances I am of opinion that sec. 34 is to be read according to the meaning of its terms without reference to any doctrines derived from the English Common Law. I hold therefore for the reasons I have given that the section does not apply to the present case.

At the same time I have no doubt that on the case made by the prosecution the accused is within the scope of secs. 109 and 114, under which, read with sec. 302, he is indicted.

Abetting is defined by sec 107, and the evidence to my mind, if relied on, shows that the accused instigated and aided whoever it was that committed the murder, and there is therefore a case made out under sec. 109, for there is no reason for saying that a man must be absent in order to abet under that section. The instigating the unknown murderer by accompanying him to the place, and by aiding him in his flight afterwards, which the accused on the evidence did, might have taken place though the accused was not present at the murder. But on the evidence he was so present, and sec. 114 therefore applies to the case. See sec. 93 of the Code of 1837 and paras. 201 and 202 of the Report of 1846.

In reference to English law it seems to me that the effect of secs. 109 and 114 is to supersede all the English law relating to principals of the first and second degree, and accessories before the fact. They are apt for this purpose, and again the provisions of the Code seem to me to cover all the cases provided for by English law, except the rule stated in Art. 30 of Stephen's Digest and to contain the whole law applicable to the subject in India.

It has been suggested that the acquittal under sec. 34 negatived the existence of a common intention which is in fact essential to abetment: but as I directed an acquittal on legal grounds the finding of the jury has not determined any question of fact.

I hold, therefore, that the acquittal under sec. 302 read with sec. 34 has no effect on the charges relating to abetment.

I may have misapprehended the third point, at any rate I do not understand it. I expressed an opinion that if the facts given in evidence were believed, the accused was guilty of murder: but the question was one of fact, and if the Jury disagreed with me in point of fact they had a right to do so. I cannot understand their decision: but I had no power to overrule it.

The jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty by a majority of seven to two. The Judge disagreed with this verdict.

SARJAN ALI and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Right of pasturage, suit for declaration of, and for injunction—Mere thirty years' uninterrupted user if enough—Presumption of right.

In a suit for declaration that the Plaintiffs who were cultivating tenants had a right of pasturage over certain lands and for an injunction on the landlord to remove fences, etc., therefrom, the finding of the lower Appellate Court in decreeing the suit was: "The land has been lying unoccupied from time immemorial and the villagers have been grazing their cattle here for more than 30 years. o' this case, presumed to be as of right also :"

Held—That th finding was not suffi-c ent to establish the Plaintiffs' right of pasturage over the land in suit.

It being a customary right, it must be reasonable, and it would be unreasonable to hold that no land over which cattle had grazed should ever be brought under the plough.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1911 against a decree of Babu Debendra Mohan Sen, Subordinate Judge of Z. lah Tipperah, dated the 27th of June 1911, reversing that of Babu Bokulal Biswas, Munsif at Brahmanbari, dated the 23rd of July 1910.

The Plaintiffs Appellants who were al agricultural tenants and residents of village Ulchapara instituted the present suit for the declaration of their right and that of other tenants of the village to graze their cattle on certain pieces of waste land and for an injunction restraining the Defendants, who were some of them the lanlords of the village and the rest cultivators with whom portions of the waste land had been settled by the landlords, from ploughing up the lands in suit and erecting fences thereon and from otherwise rendering the land unfit for grazing cattle. The Defendants denied that the Plaintiffs had the right alleged by them and also pleaded limitation. The Munsif found that other pieces of waste land had been encroached upon more than 3 years previously and that therefore the suit was barred by limitation. He further held on the evidence that the tenants grazed their cattle on the land by the landlord's permission. In this view he dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the Munsif was wrong in relying on the evidence as to encroachment upon other pieces of waste land for his finding on the question of limitation, and that the pieces in suit had been cultivated within two years.

On the merits, he held that the Plaintiffs had grazed their cattle on the lands in suit more than 30 years, openly and peaceably and without objection on the part of the maliks and without permission taken from the Plaintiffs, "that the land had been lying unoccupied from time immemorial and the villagers have been grazing their cattle here for more than 30 years. Their user was open and peaceful, without interruption and should be in the circumstances of the case presumed to be as of right also." In the result he held that the Plaintiffs and their co-villagers had a right of pasturage over the land in suit both by prescription as well as by grant presumable from immemorial user. In the ordering portion of his judgment he recorded that Plaintiffs' right of pasturage and that of the villagers of Ulchapara be declared and that they do recover possession of it by removing the fences and other obstructions raised by the Defendants and that the Defendants be enjoined from ploughing up the land or otherwise obstructing the right of pasturage declared.

The Defendants preferred this Second Appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of a suit by certain cultivating tenants for a declaration that they have a right of pasturage over the land in suit and for consequential relief. The lower Appellate Court has decreed the suit and the Defendants appeal.

The first point taken is that of limitation but in the view that we take of the case, no question of limitation really arises.

The learned Subordinate Judge says: "The land has been lying unoccupied from time immemorial and the villagers have been grazing their cattle here for more than 30 years. Their user was open and peaceful without interruption and should be in the circumstances of this case presumed to be as of right also." In our opinion these findings are hardly sufficient to dispose of the suit. We believe that throughout Bengal, where land is left waste or jungle, the cattle of the villagers graze over it and probably in most cases have done so from time immemorial. No one is interested in stopping them and the user is therefore open, peaceful and uuinterrupted. But it would be impossible to hold that therefore no landlord is entitled to bring any waste or jungle land under the plough. A right of pasturage arising from immemorial user of this kind resembles a right based upon custom. This has been laid down in Madras and Bombay, sec. 18, Easement Act, 1882, and Secretary af State v. Mathurabahi (1) and the view is in accordance with common sense. Now a custom must be reasonable and it would be wholly unreasonable that no land over which cattle had hitherto grazed should ever be brought under the plough. We may refer in this connection to the case of Leechmutput Singh v. Sadaulla (2). Nor is this view inconsistent with the decision in Bholanath v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (3). Their Lordships' judgment clearly proceeded on the supposition that the landlords were entitled to plough waste land if only sufficient pasturage were left, and the judgment certainly does not go so far as to lay down that immemorial grazing without more makes waste land inviolable. Their Lordships observe :—" It was certainly not the intention of the Subordinate Judge or the Munsif, that the decrees should prevent the Defendants improving their property. And, indeed, the Munsif expressly states that the Plaintiffs admitted the right of the Defendants to improve their property, provided sufficient pasturage were left." And they thought it advisable to add a specific provision to that effect to the decree. We think, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court must find more than that the village cattle have always grazed on this land before he can decree the suit. It may be the case, for instance, that the land in suit has been reserved in some particular manner for pasturage, or that the circumstances of the locality mark it out as suitable for pasture. It may be an island of waste amid a great expanse of cultivated land so that if it is cultivated the cattle of the villagers may have to be driven to an unreasonable distance in order to obtain pasture. Or it may be that the amount of waste remaining in the village is only sufficient for the needs of the cattle. In any of these cases the lower Appellate Court might be justified in holding that the custom underlying the right was reasonable in decreeing the suit. But if there is nothing to show that the land in suit differs in any respect from other waste and if there is plenty of pasturage left in the village the Plaintiffs are not entitled to

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 150 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1913. 28, May.

SREEMUTTY MAHAMAYA KAR, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. KISHORE CHUNG, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 29—Occupancy raiyat—Enhancement of rent by contract—Stipulation in original kabuliyat—Colourable evasion of statute.

Where a kabuliyat executed by an occupancy raiyat contained a statement that the rent for the holding was Rs. 57 4 in all, but that out of this the sum of Rs 17 2 was remitted and the rent was fixed at Rs. 40 2 for the period of the kabuliyat, and it was further stipulated that at the end of the term the tenant "shall take a settlement at the rate of Rs. 57-4 and if he does not the landlord shall be entitled to realise that rent by suit"; and the lower Appellate Court found that the rent really settled was Rs 40 2, and that the reference to Rs. 57-4 was merely a device to evade the provisions of sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act:

Held—That sec. 29 was a bar to the recovery of the rent by the landlord at Rs 57 4.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 28th of July 1911 against the decree of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 22nd May 1911, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 975 of 1909, which had been preferred on the 17th May 1909 against a decree of A. H. Cumming, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Tipperah, dated the 8th of February, reversing that of Babu J. N. Mukherjee, Munsif of that place, dated the 12th of March 1908.

The facts will appear from the judgment of Coxe, J., which was as follows.

COXE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent, based on a kabuliyat executed by the Defendant's father in 1303. The kabuliyat was for 7 years; and the only question that is raised in this appeal is whether this kabuliyat contravenes the provisions of sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Munsif apparently found that the tenancy of the Defendant's father began with the execution of this kabuliyat and that he was not in occupation of the holding before it. The matter has not been dealt with by the learned District Judge in appeal; and for the purpose of dealing with this appeal it may be assumed that he did not differ from the decision of the Munsif on this point. The kabuliyat begins with a tabular statement, which shows the rent to be Rs. 10 a kani amounting to Rs. 57-4 annas in all. Out of this the sum of Rs. 17-2 annas is remitted, for some unexplained reason; and the remaining rent is fixed at Rs. 40-2 annas for the period of the kabuliyat. The kabuliyat, after the tabular statement, goes on to describe the rent as being Rs. 40 2 annas during its term, and contains a stipulation that, at the end of the term the tenant shall take a settlement at the rate of Rs. 57-4 annas and if he does not, the landlord shall be entitled to realise that rent by suit. There is also a provision that land found to be in excess of the amount leased will be subject to a rent of Rs. 10 a kani.

The learned District Judge regards this kabuliyat as an attempt to evade the provisions of sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He says:—"If this stipulation in his lease were to be held good it would always be within the power of a landlord granting a lease to put in the lease that the rent was, say, Rs. 50 whilst he allowed the tenant to pay only Rs. 30. He would then, when the lease expired, allege that Rs. 50 was the rent and then thus, by this device, he would clearly be able to enhance the tenant's rent by considerably more than 2 annas in the rupee."

With this view of the learned District Judge I am in agreement. No doubt, when the kabuliyat was executed the landlord was perfectly entitled to settle the land at the rate of Rs. 57 4 annas, if he could get a tenant to take it on those terms. It may, at first sight, seem unreasonable that if he could have done this he should not be allowed to settle the rent at the rate of Rs. 40-2 annas for 7 years and afterwards at a higher rate. But a little reflection is sufficient to show that this would be wholly against the policy of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The landlord might find great difficulty in settling this land at the present rate of Rs. 57 but it might not be so difficult for him, considering the notorious improvidence of raiyats, to settle the land for several years at a reasonable rent, with a stipulation that, at some distant period, the raiyat should be bound to pay a higher rent; and it is clear, as the learned District Judge points out, that, by adopting this expedient, the landlord by a carefully drafted lease might contract himself entirely out of the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The words of sec. 29, cl. (b) are that "the rent must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyat." There can be no doubt whatever that the rent payable during the term of the kabuliyat was Rs. 40-2 annas. The nominal rent might have been recorded as Rs. 57-4 annas; but the kabuliyat itself exempts the raiyat from paying this sum, and the sum payable by him, therefore, was only Rs. 40-2 annas. Accordingly, under this clause at the end of the term, his rent could not be enhanced by contract so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the sum of Rs. 40-2 annas. I do not think, reading the words of the section, that this provision applies only to contracts executed at the time of the enhancement. The words are sufficiently wide to include contracts executed some years before. It cannot be disputed that the practical effect of the kabuliyat now under consideration is that at the end of the term the rent of the raiyat is enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the sum which has been payable by him during the term. Taking this view, I think that the decision of the learned District Judge is right and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This case does not require citation of any authority. It is clear from sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the rent cannot be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee, the rent previously payable by the raiyat. The lower Appellate Court has found that this rent was Rs. 40 2 annas, and the reference to Rs. 57 was merely a device. That finding is conclusive in this case. We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

When a petition of appeal to His Majesty in Council was not lodged by the Appellant, and the Registrar dismissed the appeal for non prosecution under r. V of the Standing Order in Council of the 13th June 1853, and no Order in Council was thereupon made :

Held, that the Registrar's order dismissing the appeal was not a decree or order of the Appellate Court under Art. 179 of the Limitation Act, 1877, and did not extend the period of limitation therein prescribed.

This was an Appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 4th June, 1910, of the High Court of Judicature for the North Western Provinces at Allahabad, which affirmed a judgment and decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra made in an execution case on the 8th of September, 1908.

The main question for determination on the present appeal was whether the Appellant decree-holder was barred from executing a decree dated the 29th March 1898, by the law of limitation as well as by reason of non-compliance with the condition specified in the said decree.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

One, Sheo Narain, brought a suit for sale on a mortgage dated the 5th June, 1885, against the mortgagor and transferees from her, the purchasers of the equity of redemption and the prior mortgagees were also made defendants to the suit. The Court of first instance made a decree dated the 29th March, 1898, which, among other things, provided as follows :—

"It is ordered that the Plaintiff do pay Rs. 975 on account of Court fee within a week in respect of Rs. 29,534 claimed by Defendants Nos. 2 to 7 as prior mortgage debt, that the Plaintiff do further pay to Defendants Nos. 2 to 7 or deposit in Court Rs. 29,534 with interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum, together with one set of pleader's fees and other costs incurred by Defendants Nos. 2 to 7 within five months from to-day. If the Plaintiff fails to pay the said Court fee or the said prior mortgage debt within the periods allowed, his suit shall stand dismissed with costs, and that if the Plaintiff carry out both the above orders, then it is decreed and hereby declared that on the 29th day of September, 1898, the sum of Rs. 79,668-1-3 with future interest and interest pendente lite at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum will be payable to the Plaintiff, namely (here follow details of the last-mentioned sum) ; and it is hereby ordered that upon the Defendants Nos. 1, 8, 15 and 16 to 22 (the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagees) paying the aforesai sum of Rs. 79,668-1-3, * * * * to the Plaintiff or into Court on the 29th day of September, 1898, the Plaintiff shall deliver up to the Defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the property specified below and shall transfer the property to the Defendant free from all incumbrances created by the Plaintiff or any person claiming under him or by those under him or by those under whom he claims. But if such payment be not made, as aforesaid, on or before the 29th day of September, 1898, then it is ordered that the said property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, i.e, the mortgaged property mentioned in the accompanying list. . . . ."

Defendants Nos. 2 to 7 were the prior mortgagees.

The said Sheo Narain, Decree-holder, appealed to the High Court against that part of the said decree which made its execution conditional upon payment of the sum due to the prior mortgagees, but unsuccessfully. The High Court affirmed the said decree on the 12th February, 1900, and extended the time for payment to the prior mortgagees until the 9th August, 1900. There was a second appeal against the said drcree to His Majesty in Council but it was dismissed for default of prosecution on the 15th December 1904. The Appellant had not lodged any petition of appeal to His Majesty in Council, nor was an Order in Council drawn up dismissing the appeal.

The said Decree-holder deposited the amount of the Court fees required by the said decree, but he failed to fulfil the other condition imposed by the decree, namely, that relating to payment of the sum due to the prior mortgagees. He made several applications for extension of time for payment, and it was extended from time to time until the 28th September, 1901.

On the 26th September, 1901, he sold the said decree to the present Appellant, who also made several applications, one after the other, for extension of time, and the time was thrice extended up to the 20th March, 1902.

Finally, the Court refused to grant any more indulgence to the Appellant, and rejected his petition for a further extension of time by an order dated the 20th March, 1902. The Appellant then applied for review of the said order and that was disallowed on the 7th June, 1902.

On the 2nd October, 1907, he instituted the present application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra. In his petition he stated that he had paid the amount that was payable to the prior mortgagees under the decree in September 1907 and prayed that a decree absolute under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) may be passed and that the properties specified by him may be ordered to be sold in execution of the said decree of the 29th March, 1898.

The purchasers of the equity of redemption who were Defendants filed objections the nature of which would appear from the following issues framed by the Subordinate Judge :—

Whether the execution application, dated 2nd October, 1907, is barred by limitation.

Whether the decree has become null and void owing to the fact that payment to Chuni Lal and others was not made within the specified time ?

By his judgment delivered on the 8th September, 1908, the Subordinate Judge held that the Appellant was not entitled to the relief claimed by him. He said :—

"It is contended that the Court executing a decree is bound by the terms of the decree. The order that in the event of failure of payment of the specified amount within the fixed period the suit shall stand dismissed with costs, stands intact, the decree was affirmed both by the Honourable High Court and the Privy Council. It is beyond the province of the Court executing the decree to determine whether the said order was incorrect and illegal ; it was for the Plaintiff to have it cancelled or modified by the Appellate Court. As the order stands intact and the payments were not made either within the original period or extended time, the suit, according to the terms of the decree, stand dismissed."

He held that the application was not barred by limitation as in his opinion, time ran from the 15th December 1904.

He made a decree accordingly.

The Appellant thereupon appealed against the said decree to the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, which by its Judgment dated the 4th June, 1910, dismissed the said appeal with costs.

Chamier, J., in the course of his judgment in which Karamat Hosein, J., concurred, said as follows :—

"It is urged that the provision in the decree fixing a time within which the Decree-holder was to pay the amount due to the prior mortgagees was intended for the benefit of the prior mortgagees and does not concern either the mortgagor or the subsequent mortgagees ; also, that when the Court accepted the money deposited by the Decree-holder and paid it out to the prior mortgagees, it must be deemed to have extended the time for payment to the prior mortgagees notwithstanding its refusal to allow any further time in 1902.

"The latter argument may be disposed of very shortly. It is not suggested that the Court when receiving the money in 1907, so much as considered the question whether further time should be allowed. When money is paid into Court in a suit with the request that it may be paid out to another party and there is nothing in the nature of a stop order against or attachment of the money, the money will be paid out as a matter of course. In such a case the action of the Court is partly mechanical. It is more than doubtful whether in view of what occurred in 1902, the Court could have extended the time in 1907, even if the decree had not provided that in the events which happened, the suit should stand dismissed. In my opinion the action of the Court in accepting the money and paying it to the prior mortgagees does not affect the case in any way.

"Nor can I accept the contention that it is only the prior mortgagees who can take advantage of the provision in the decree fixing a time for payment of the money due on the prior mortgage. On the decree as it stands the mortgagor and the puisne mortgagees were entitled to assume when the money was not paid within the time limited or extended by the Court, that the suit stood dismissed as against all the Defendants and that they would not be called upon to pay the large amount due to the Decree-holder in order to save the property from being sold and their respective interests swept away. It appears to me that the rights and liabilities (of) the parties as regards the Decree-holder's mortgage depend upon the decree. It does not in the least signify whether the decree was in accordance with the law or not (see Sri Raja Papamma v Sri Vira Pratapa), (1). As a matter of fact, the decree was in accordance with the Rulings of this Court at the time when it was passed. In requiring the decree-holder to redeem the prior mortgage before bringing the mortgaged property to sale, the decree was in strict accordance with the much discussed and now superseded decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Mata Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (2). The learned advocate for the Appellant-decree-holder, referred us to the decision of this Court in Debi Prasad v. Jai Karan Singh, (3). In that case a decree on a mortgage passed under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, required the Decree-holder to redeem two prior mortgages before bringing the property to sale and fixed a period of two months within which redemption might be effected. Two months after the expiry of that period the Decree-holder paid into Court the amount due on the prior mortgages and the question was whether the Decree-holder could proceed to sell the mortgaged property. It was held that he could do so. The terms of the decree are not set out in the report or in the file of the Appeal to this Court which I have examined. But neither in the report nor in the file is there any suggestion that the decree provided either that the suit should stand dismissed in case the Decree-holder failed to redeem the prior mortgages within the time fixed or that the Decree-holder should be entitled to bring the property to sale, if he carried out the order for redemption. There can be little doubt that the decree contained no such provisions. There is therefore, a considerable difference between that case and the case now before us. The case of Sita Ram v. Madho Lal (4), relied upon by the learned advocate for the Appellants, and the case of Lachman Sing v. Madsudan (5), relied upon by the learned advocate for the Respondents appear to me to have no bearing upon the present case. Both cases deal with the question whether a second suit for redemption can be maintained when the first suit has terminated in a decree which was irregular in form or did not affect a foreclosure. We are not at present concerned with the question whether the Appellant before us could bring another suit on his mortgage. The question is whether he can cause the mortgaged property to be sold in execution of the decree which he has obtained. It was suggested that the decree being, as it is, a combination of a decree for redemption and a decree for sale should be treated as two separate decrees. I do not think that such a course would improve the Appellant's position. Under secs. 92 and 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Plaintiff is not entitled to redeem except within the time originally fixed by the Court or extended under the proviso to sec. 93, and the Courts are not bound to extend the time. In practice Courts are less inclined to extend the time for a Plaintiff seeking to redeem than they are to extend the time for a Defendant in a suit by a mortgagee for foreclosure or sale. The former should be ready with his money when he brings his suit. The latter is or may be taken by surprise. Therefore it is quite clear that the Appellant was not entitled to redeem the prior mortgage on the day on which he paid the money into Court. As payment was made to the prior mortgagees after the time limited by the Court and behind the back of the mortgagor and puisne mortgagees, they are not bound by the payment. If the latter part of the decree be treated as a separate decree for sale, it is clear that the Appellant is not entitled to execute it. It begins with the words "if the Plaintiff carry out both the above orders, then it is decreed and ordered * * *". The carrying out of the "above orders" is plainly a condition precedent to the right to sell the property.

"In the last resort it was urged that this Court should take upon itself to extend the time for redemption up to the date on which the Appellant paid the mortgage money into Court and we were referred to secs. 148 and 151 of the present Code of Civil Procedure. On the merits I should refuse to accede to this request, but I may say that in my opinion sec. 148 relates only to proceedings anteceden to the passing of a decree and was not intended to enable the Court to extend the time in pre-emption and redemption cases.

"Special provision for extending time is made by Order XXXIV, Rules 3 and 9. No such provision is made for pre-emption cases. Sec. 151 appears to have no application to the present case.

"The present Appellant purchased the decree some time before October 3rd, 1901 (the exact date does not appear). He seems to have made no serious attempt to execute the decree for about six years. I cannot, therefore, agree with the learned advocate for the Appellant that it is a case of great hardship, nor should any such consideration be allowed to affect the case.

"I would dismiss the appeal."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., (with Mr. J. M. Parikh) for the Appellant submitted that he was entitled to an order absolute for sale. Both the lower Courts had found that the Appellant had paid the amount due to the prior mortgagees under the decree dated the 29th March 1898. The decree was really one under sec. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under the old Ruling in Mata Din Kasodhan v. Kazim Husain (2), the Plaintiff's claim consisted of two parts, namely, first, claim to redeem the prior mortgages, and second, claim to sell the mortgaged property. Under sec. 93 the Decree-holder's right to redeem was not extinguished until and unless the Court made an order to that effect. There was no such order here, and the Appellant was therefore entitled to redeem the prior mortgages. He had actually done so by paying the money. The refusal to extend the time for payment did not by itself operate to extinguish the right, Rango v. Bhomshetti (3). The Respondents were the purchasers of the equity of redemption, and they benefited by the discharge of the prior mortgages. They were estopped from denying that the decree was really one passed under sec. 93. The actual words of the decree were not essential. The Court ought to construe the real meaning of the decree according to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

Reference was made to Huranath v. Krishna Coomar (6). Ram Kirpal v. Rupkuari (7), Bani Ram v. Nanhu Mal (8). In any case it was a preliminary decree and a decree under sec. 89 was necessary.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., (with Mr. Bhugwandin Dube) for the Respondents submitted that the application for execution was barred by time, under Art 179 of the Limitation Act, 1877. The period of 3 years ought to be reckoned from the 20 h March 1902, and not from the 15 h December 1904 There was no Order in Council of that da e. No petition of appeal was lodged, and the Registrar's Order was only a ministerial one. It was not a judicial determination—not a decree or order of the Appellate Court within the meaning of Art. 179 Further, the decision of the Courts below was right. The decree must be enforced as its terms stood. It was affirmed by the High Court. It is now too late to say that it was not a decree according to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Sri Raja Papamma v. Sri Vira Pratappa (9).

Mr. L. DeGruyther in reply: It was the order of the Registrar that put an end to the app al. It was immaterial who made the order whether it was made by the Registrar under an Order in Council or by His Majesty in Council. Until the determination of the appeal the Appellant was carrying on his cause. Order dismissing the appeal need not be judicial. The determining factor was whether the Appellant did lodge a petition of appeal to His Majesty in Council.

[No such petition of appeal was produced nor was there an Order in Council dismissing the appeal.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 4th June 1910, of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, which dismissed an appeal by the Appellant here from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Agra, dated the 8th September 1908, dismissing an application which had been made on the 2nd October 1907 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge by Babu Batuk Nath for the execution of a decree of the 29th March 1898.

The decree of the 29th March 1898 had been made by the then Subordinate Judge of Agra in favour of one Sheo Narain in a suit which had been brought by him under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, for sale of certain immoveable property. By that decree it was ordered that if Sheo Narain should fail to pay a prior mortgage debt within five months from the 29th March 1898 his suit should stand dismissed with costs. From that decree of the 29th March 1898 an appeal was brought to the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad. Tha appeal was dismissed by the High Cou t by its decree of the 12th February 1900, but in dismissing the appeal the High Court extended the time for payment of the prior mortgage debt to the 9th August 1900. It has not been alleged or proved that any certified copy of the decree of the 29th March 1898 was registered wi hin the meaning of Art. 179 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877. From the decree of the 12th February 1900 of the High Court an appeal to His Majesty in Council was brought. On the 15th December 1904 the appeal to His Majesty in Council stood dismissed for non-prosecu ion under r. V of the Order in Council of the 13th June 1853 without further order.

On the 26th September 1901, Sheo Narain had assigned his decree of the 29th

BATUK v. MUSAMMAT MUNNI DEI.

March 1898 to Babu Batuk Nath. During the pendency of the appeal to His Majesty in Council some orders had been made by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra extending the time for the payment of the prior mortgage debt, but the last application for an extension of time for the payment of the prior mortgage debt which was made to his Court was dismissed by the then Subordinate Judge of Agra by his order of the 20th March 1902, and on the 7th June 1902 the Subordinate Judge dismissed an application for a review of his order of the 20th March 1902.

In making his decree of the 8th September 1908 dismissing the application of the 2nd October 1907, the Subordinate Judge held that the period of limitation which was applicable to the case ran from the dismissal for want of prosecution of the appeal to His Majesty in Council, that is to say, from the 15th December 1904, and consequently that the application for execution had been made within time; he doubtless was under the impression that the appeal had been dismissed by an order of His Majesty in Council made in the appeal. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the terms as to the payment of the prior mortgage debt imposed by the decree of the 29th March 1898, not having been complied with within the extended time, the suit by the terms of that decree had stood dismissed. The attention of the learned Judges of the High Court does not appear to have been drawn to the question of limitation; they dismissed the appeal to their Court on the ground upon which the application had been dismissed by the Subordinate Judge.

It appears to their Lordships that the application of the 2nd October 1907, was made after the period of limitation prescribed for such an application by Art. 179 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, had expired, and that the application should, in accordance with sec. 4 of that Act, have been dismissed unless the dismissal of the 15th December 1904 for want of prosecution of the appeal to His Majesty in Council was by a final decree or order of His Majesty in Council made in the appeal. There was, however, no order of His Majesty in Council dismissing the appeal, nor was it necessary that any such order should be made in the appeal. Under r V of the Order in Council of the 13th June 1853, the Appellant or his agent not having taken effectual steps for the prosecution of the appeal, the appeal stood dismissed without further order.

As their Lordships hold that the application of the 2nd October 1907 was barred by limitation, and should on that ground have been dismissed, they do not consider it necessary to express any opinion on the grounds upon which the High Court made the decree which is under appeal. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The Appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

LORD MOULTON.
MR. AMEER ALI.

Judgment, 4, March.

ARTHUR HENRY FORBES, Appellant,
v.
MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH and others, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 65 66, 148 (h), 195—Sale of putni*—Suit by vendor for back rents not assigned—*Putni if may be sold free of darputni *in execution of decree made—"First charge," stranger to land if may claim—*Darputnidar, deposit of putni *rent by, in proceeding under Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), sec. 13—*Darputnidar's lien, priority of—"Salvage lien," statutory—Scope of the Act and the Regulation.

The right to bring a tenure or holding to sale under sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, exists so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant exists.

The right to bring a tenure or holding to sale under sec. 65 being thus exclusively in the landlord, a person to whom certain rents are due and who obtains a decree therefor after he has parted with the property in which the tenancy is situate has no such right.

The view that either from the nature of the debt being arrears of rent, or the decree being for arrears of rent, the tenure becomes ipso facto hypothecated for the debt is untenable upon a proper construction of sec. 65. A stranger to the property cannot avail himself of the special remedy given by that section to the landlord to recover arrears attached to the tenure or holding

KHETRA PAL SINGH v. KRITHEKTHAMOYI DASSI (1) distinguished.

The special lien which a subordinate tenure-holder acquires under sec. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819 by depositing the putni rents in arrears for which the putni has been advertised for sale by the zemindar under that Regulation is not affected by proceeding taken in respect of the putni under the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Putni Regulation being a self-contained Act specially excluded from the operation of the Bengal Tenancy Act by sec 195 of that Act.

Where a landlord, after he has sold his property, sues for the back rents which he has not assigned to his vendee, and obtains a decree, and his vendee also sues for rents which accrued due subsequently to his purchase, the latter only can execute the decree against the tenure or holding. His vendor can execute his decree against his debtor as a money decree only.

This was an Appeal from the Calcutta High Court. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment and from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ.) reported in Maharaja Bahadur Singh v. Forbes (2).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Appellant submitted that the decree dated the 10th July 1895 was not a decree for rent within the meaning of sec. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that it did not constitute a charge upon the putni. Dhanpat Singh after transferring the zemindari on the 27th June 1893 ceased to be the landlord within the meaning of the Act. His decree was only a decree for money and his remedies as a landlord came to an end. Sec. 65 contemplates that the landlord taking action under it must be actually subsisting as a landlord at the time. The test was to see if the landlord could eject for arrears of rent. An owner cannot sue for rent unless he is a registered proprietor, Ram

(2) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 737 (1908).

ARTHUR HENRY FORBES v. MAHARAJ BAHADUR SINGH.

Kristo Das v. Sheikh Harain (3). Sec. 60 also deals with a registered proprietor. Sec. 65 ought to be read with sec. 66 in order to ascertain the remedies which a landlord has, and sec. 66 could have only one meaning and that was that it referred to a landlord exis ing as such at the time., Secs. 90 and 121, 129, 161a, 162, 195c support the same view. If a decree is assigned the effect of it under sec. 148(h) is that the assignee cannot execute it unless the landlord's interest in the land has become vested in him. The landlord had transferred all his interest in the land and the assignee of the decree could not therefore have that interest. The view in Chhatrapat Singh v. Gopi Chand (4) that the word "assignee" in sec. 148(h) does not include a trustee is erroneous. The word "assignee" is wide enough to cover all cases of transfer. The decree of the 10th July 1890 was not a decree for rent and was not a first charge on the putni. Reliance was placed on Hem Chandra v. Mon Mohini (5), Srimant v. Mahadeo (6). The case of Khetrapal v. Krithartthamoyi (1) is distinguishable. The decree there was made before the sale. The view of Rampini and Pratt, JJ., in Nogendra v. Bhuban Mohan (7) was right. The special remedy given by sec. 65 could not be availed of by a landlord who has parted with all his interest in the land by virtue of which the right and the remedy were provided for him. The relationship of landlord and tenant must be subsisting at the time when the remedy provided by sec. 65 is enforced. The Appellant has a statutory charge under Reg. VIII of 1819 which was not affected by the Bengal Tenancy Act, see sec. 195. Reference was also made to Soshi Bhusan v. Gogan Chunder (8), Faez Rahman v. Ramsukh (9).

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Ross, K. C, for the Respondents, submitted that the relationship of landlord and tenant admittedly existed when the rents became due. The decree was one for rent and by virtue of sec. 65 it became a first charge on the putni. Sec. 65 differed from sec. 66. The words of sec. 65 were quite clear, it did not provide that the landlord must be an existing landlord, whereas in sec. 66 it is specifically so provided. The meaning of sec. 65 is that the decree becomes a first charge from the date of the decree and not before. The Appellant got his lien in 1900 and we got it in 1896.

[LORD MOULTON.—Referring to the definition of rent in sec. 3, does it not remain rent only so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant lasts?]

I submit not. It was in fact rent and it did not cease to be rent because the landlord had transferred his land. There was nothing in the preamble to the Act which showed that the Act did not apply to the case of an ex landlord.

[LORD MOULTON.—You say that it would be a first charge only from the date of the decree. Why from the date of the decree? Sec. 65 does not say so.]

I submit that that is the reasonable construction. It becomes a charge not merely because the rent is due but because the decree is obtained.

There are certain sections in the Act that apply to ex-landlords, e.g., secs. 66 and 67. We applied for execution of the decree in December 1896 and we are entitled to be paid in priority to the Appellants. A trustee is not included in the word "assignee" as used in sec. 148 (h). Chatrapat Singh v. Gopi Chand (4) was rightly decided.

Mr. L. DeGruyther in reply: the Respondent is not entitled to get rid of darputni and of the statutory charge. The putni tenures are to be governed by the Regulations, and the other tenures by the Tenancy Act. Even if the view taken by the Respondent of sec. 65 were correct, they are not entitled to set aside any statutory charge created under the Regulation.

MR. AMEER ALI.—This Appeal, which is from a Judgment and Decree of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 8th of April 1908, raises certain questions of particular importance under the Rent Law of Bengal, for the proper apprehension of which it is necessary to set out in some detail the facts of the case.

The zemindari of Lot Saifganj, situated in the district of Purneah, was owned at one time by a rich zemindar of the name of Roy Dhanpat Singh, since deceased. The estate, however, was settled in putni, and has been held for some years past by the Defendant Chatrapat Singh as the putni Talookdar; Chatrapat, on his side, has settled the putni tenure in several parcels with subordinate tenure-holders called dar-putnidars. Two of these dar-putnis are held by the Plaintiff Appellant. These tenures are special to Bengal, the Sonthal Pergunas and certain parts of Chota-Nagpur, and their incidents are governed by Reg. VIII of 1819, commonly called the Putni Regulation. To some of these incidents reference will be made in the course of this Judgment.

But it may be conveniently premised here that a putni Talook is a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure, which the zemindar may create over the whole or part of his estate, whilst the putni Talookdar has a similar right to let the entire property held by him in putni or in parcels to subordinate Talookdars called dar-putnidars. And this process of sub-infeudation may, so far as the law is concerned, be carried down to several lower degrees. In the case of these tenures the zemindar has a right to apply to the Collector to put up the putni Talook to sale for arrears of rent, and the sale has the effect of cancelling all under-tenures; but the subordinate tenure holders have the right to deposit in the Collector's Court the arrears of rent, and to be put in possession of the defaulting superior tenure for the satisfaction of the deposit made by them. The same right which the zemindar possesses for the realisation of his rent, with the correlative right on the part of the subordinate tenure-holders of saving the superior tenure from sale, is given to them in succession.

On the 27th of June 1893, Dhanpat Singh transferred the zemindari, subject of course to Chatrapat's putni, to a Hindu lady, Bhagwanbati Chowdhrain, who has unquestionably been in possession of the estate since her purchase.

It appears that certain arrears of rent in respect of the putni had become due before the sale to Bhagwanbati Chowdhrain. For these arrears Dhanpat Singh brought a suit in the Civil Court on the 21st September 1893. The final Decree in this action was passed by the High

(4) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 750 (1899).

Court on the 10th of July 1896. Nine days after, Dhanpat Singh executed a Deed of Trust by which he assigned to the Defendants 2 to 4 in trust for the Defendant Maharaj among other properties the Decree for arrears of rent.

Dhanpat Singh died shortly after, leaving Maharaj his only son and heir.

In 1897 the Trustees proceeded to execute the decree against Chatrapat but were met with various objections on his part which were finally overruled by the High Court in 1899.

In the meantime Chatrapat had fallen into arrears in respect of the putni rent payable to the Chowdhrain; and that lady had instituted in the Court of the Collector of Purneah the special proceedings under Reg. VIII of 1819 for the realisation of her dues The defaulting tenure was accordingly advertised for sale on the 14th of May 1901. The Plaintiff-Appellant thereupon deposited the amount of the arrears in the Collector's Court and was put by him in possession of the putni Talook. Since then he has been and still is in possession of the superior tenure paying rent to the zemindar and realising the rents due to the putni Talookdar from the subordinate holders

The Trustee Defendants, having obtained the decision of the High Court that they were entitled to execute Dhanpat Singh's decree, applied for the sale of the putni talook under sec. 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is to be observed that a sale held under this section does not give power to the Decree-holder to annul "notified and registered incumbrances." The Plaintiff thereupon preferred a claim under sec. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which, however, after some protracted proceedings, was withdrawn. Apparently a sale under sec. 163 was held, but it did not fetch a sum sufficient to liquidate the arrears and costs, and the Defendants then applied for a sale under sec. 165 under which the Decree holder has the power to annul all incumbrances including under-tenures. On this application the 6th of August 1906 was fixed for the sale of the putni. The present suit was then brought by the Plaintiff on the 9th of July in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purneah to restrain the Defendants from proceeding with the sale.

It should be noted here that there exist many permanent, heritable, and transferable tenures in Bengal which do not come within the purview of Reg. VIII of 1819, and which have no relation to patni talooks. The incidents of these tenures are governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act passed in 1885, to regulate, subject to certain exceptions to which attention will be drawn, the relations in general between landlord and tenant.

The Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, whilst it protected the permanent tenure-holder and other tenants having similar permanent interests against ejectment for arrears of rent, gave to the landlords certain rights which they either did not possess before or possessed only in a qualified form. One was the right to bring to sale the tenure or holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. Sec. 65, which declares this liability of the defaulting tenure, also declares that "the rent shall be a first charge thereon." It is round these words that the controversy between the parties is mainly centred. Their Lordships say mainly, because there is another question of vital importance in this case which relates to the applicability of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act to putni tenures.

The Defendants in their endeavours to bring Chatrapat's putni taluk under the provisions of sec. 165 of the Tenancy Act contend that as the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between Dhanpat Singh and Chatrapat when the rents became due, the decree obtained by him became by virtue of sec. 65 a first charge on the tenure. The Plaintiff's contention, on the other hand, is that as Dhanpat Singh had parted with his interest in the zemindari before the institution of his suit for arrears, the decree of which execution was sought was not a rent decree within the meaning of sec. 65.

The Subordinate Judge has upheld the Plaintiff's contention, and granted him an injunction restraining Maharaj Bahadur and the trustee Defendants, who are called in the suit "first party Defendants," from executing their decree of the 10th of July 1896 against the putni under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. His decision has been reversed by the High Court on appeal and the Plaintiff's suit been dismissed with costs. The learned Judges considered that the decree being for rent the mere fact that the zemindar had sold the estate after it became due does not affect his right to "a first charge." At least that is what their Lordships understand to be the meaning of the learned Judges in the following passage of their judgment :—

"The decree of the 10th July 1896 is a decree for rent. Rai Dhanpat Singh was the landlord at the time when the rent he sued for accrued due His claim for rent when found due, became a 'first charge' on the putni. There is nothing in the law which disentitles him to a first charge, because after the accrual of the rents he sued for, he parted with his interest in the zemindari."

This conception is further developed at a later stage of their Judgment, where they say as follows :—

"Now, no doubt, the decision of this Full Bench does not deal with a case such as the present in which the landlord had parted with his interest before he instituted his suit for rent, but it would seem to follow that if he can execute a decree for arrears of rent as a rent decree after he has parted with his interest as landlord, he can also do so when he obtained his decree for rent, even after he had parted with his interest in the property. The character of the decree a suitor obtains, depends on the nature of the claim and of his right to the relief sought for, and is not altered by any change in his position which may have taken place subsequent to the accrual of his right to sue."

Their Lordships cannot help observing that the learned Judges have fallen into an error in drawing an inference of law in support of their conclusion from a decision which was obviously based on facts different from those with which they had to deal. In the Full Bench case of Khatra Pal Singh v. Kritarthamoyi Dassi (1), the landlord did not part with the property and put an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant until after the decree in his suit for rent; whereas in the present case he transferred his interest to Bhagwanbati Chowdhrain before his suit for the arrears. The broad question, however, for determination in this appeal is whether the special right created in favour of the landlord under sec. 65 can be claimed also by one who has parted with the property which gives this right and to which it is attached.

There is no doubt that there is a divergence of opinion among the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta with regard to the construction of sec. 65. The section itself runs as follows :—

"Where a tenant is a permanent tenure-holder, a raiyat holding at fixed rates or an occupancy-raiyat, he shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent, but his tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof, and the rent shall be a first charge thereon."

It is not a happily worded section, and the words "and the rent shall be a first charge thereon," seem, from their collocation, to have been inserted as an afterthought without sufficient consideration of their applicability to the rest of the provisions contained in the section. They give no indication as to when it becomes a "first charge." Does it become a first charge from the nature of the claim, as some of the learned Judges seem to imagine, or does it become a first charge after it has been ascertained and made the subject of a decree? Again the section does not sufficiently indicate at whose instance the tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for rent thereof, though from the reason of the thing it is obvious that it must be at the instance of the landlord.

These questions cannot, therefore, be answered by a reference to the mere section itself; to understand its meaning, their Lordships apprehend, the general scope of the statute as well as of the chapter in which it occurs, must be taken into consideration. The Act, as stated in the preamble, was designed "to amend and consolidate certain enactments relating to the law of landlord and tenant." The words "tenant," "landlord," and "rent," are carefully defined. "Landlord" is declared to mean "a person immediately under whom a tenant holds, and includes the Government," whilst "rent" is declared to mean "whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant." Chapter VIII. embodies the "general provisions as to rent." After dealing with "rules and presumptions as to amount of rent," "the alteration of rent," "the payment of rent," "receipts and accounts," "deposit of rent" in Court when the landlord refuses to receive payment, it treats of "arrears of rent." The governing idea throughout the multifarious provisions contained in Chapter VIII. to regulat the respective rights and obligations of landlords and tenants, is the subsistence of the relationship that gives rise to those rights and obligations

Sec. 65 declares that a certain class of tenants shall not be liable to ejectment for "arrears of rent," but that their tenure or holding "shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof." Sec. 66 provides that in the case of other tenants not coming within the purview of sec. 65, the landlord "may institute a suit to eject" the defaulting tenant. The two sections taken together cover practically the remedies provided by law for the landlord to recover arrears of rent. One section is the exact corollary of the other. The right to proceed to sale in one case, in the other to eject, is dependant on the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant at the time when the remedy provided by law is sought to be enforced. A reference to sec. 148, cl. (h), clearly shows that the right to apply for the execution of a decree for arrears was attached to the status of the Decree-holder qua landlord It declares that "notwithstanding anything contained in sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code an application for the execution of a decree for arrears obtained by a landlord shall not be made by an assignee of the decree unless the landlord's interest has become and is vested in him."

Filing of plaint in the Original Side of the High Court.

We invite attention of the legal profession to a letter from the Registrar on the Original Side to the Secretary of the Incorporated Law Society of Calcutta inviting attention to the not very uncommon practice of filing plaints without stating therein when and at what place the cause of action arose. The former is essential as it should appear on the face of the plaint that the suit is not barred by the law of limitation. Or. VII, r. 1(e) requires that the time when the cause of action arose should be stated in the plaint. That this should be done with a fair amount of accuracy is not merely a matter of form but is an essential part of the pleading, as would appear clearly from subsequent provisions such as Or. VII, r. 6, which says that the ground of exemption from the law of limitation should be specifically pleaded in the plaint. Then again Or. VII, r. 11(d) says that when a suit appears to be barred by any law from the statement in the plaint the plaint shall be rejected.

In the absence of any statement as to when the cause of action arose, how is a Court to judge whether the provision with regard to r. 6 has been complied with or not? It would be a waste of the Court's time if it has to determine this after proceeding to hearing. For the same reason the place where the cause of action arose must be stated with some degree of precision so that the Court may determine at the outset whether it has jurisdiction or not. Of course we must say that it may not always be possible to state with absolute precision the time when and the place where the cause of action arose. For, it may at times involve questions of law of considerable difficulty to determine as to which particular act in a transaction gave rise to the cause of action. But all that is needed in such cases is that the time and place should be stated with such a degree of definiteness as would enable the Court to judge at the very outset that there is no palpable bar to the suit being entertained on the ground of limitation or jurisdiction.

The Criminal Procedure Amendment Bill.

We next propose to consider the suggested amendment to secs. 488 and 545 (cls. 112 and 133 of the Bill). We approve of the amendment of sec. 488 which deprives an adulterous wife of her right to claim maintenance from her husband whatever the point of time when the adultery was committed, whether prior or subsequent to the making of the order under the section by the Magistrate but we object to the raising of the maximum of the amount of maintainance under the section from Rs. 50 to Rs. 100. Cases seldom come before Criminal Courts in which the ends of justice require an order for the payment of more than Rs. 50 a month to the claimant. A proceeding under sec. 488 is of a quasi-civil nature and the object of giving the Criminal Court power in this respect is to provide for an order for a subsistence allowance being made in a summary way without the necessity of going through the lengthy formalities of a Civil Court to which however must be left the ultimate decision of all civil liabilities. We think that experience in the actual working of the Code has not shown that this change is necessary.

Sec. 545 is to be amended so as to legalise the payment of compensation to any person by whom such compensation may in the opinion of the Court be recoverable in a Civil Court. This amendment is in accord with the view expressed in the case of E. v. Corporal Morgan, I. L. R 36 Cal. 302: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 362 in which it was held that compensation can be paid to the wife, husband, child or like relation of the injured person. We think that the section as drafted in the Bill if passed will land Criminal Courts in a discussion of intricate questions as to the right to sue and cause of action, and we suggest that the compensation should be made payable "to any person who in the opinion of the Court may be entitled to a substantial compensation for any loss or injury caused by the offence."

It is proposed in cl. 21 of the Bill to amend sec. 145 of the Code so as to make it optional with a Magistrate to proceed either under sec. 107 or sec. 145 of the Code. This is in accordance with the decision of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, Abbas, 16 C. W. N. 83. It is also proposed to empower a Magistrate to restore to possession a party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two months next before the date of the proceeding. A proceeding under sec. 145 partakes more or less of a proceeding in a Civil Court and we approve of the Legislature providing for the substitution of the legal representatives of a deceased party on the record.

Sec. 147 is proposed to be re-enacted so as to avoid the difficulties which have been created by decisions raising doubts as to the applicability of the section to rights not resembling easements or to rights acquired by contract. It is also proposed to empower a Presidency Magistrate to take action under the section. This is as it ought to be especially after the recasting of the section in the new form.

Cl. 24 of the bill makes an important change inasmuch as it amends sec. 155 of the Code so as to empower a police officer to send a report to a Magistrate in a noncognizable case. This amendment is intended to make it clear that the words "police report" in sec. 190 cl. (b) include reports in non-cognizable cases. It was held as far back as in Reg v. Jaffar, 8 Bom. H. C. R. 113, that a police report on which a Magistrate can take cognizance is a report under sec. 173 in a cognizable case and not any other report submitted by a police officer. This view was accepted in K. v. Sada, I. L. R. 26 Bom. 150, E. v. Lee, 14 C. W. N. 304. The Legislature now overrules these decisions.

Sec. 202 which deals with the postponement of the issue of process on receipt of a complaint has been redrafted (cl. 42 of the bill) and the following are the principal changes introduced. Third class Magistrates have been given power to make preliminary enquiries personally. Secondly, authority to make a preliminary enquiry has been given in any case in which the Magistrate thinks fit for reasons to be recorded in writing. The only ground contemplated by the present section is that the Magistrate is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint. This the Legislature thinks to be undesirably narrow. Thirdly, the words "enquiry or investigation" have been substituted for the expression "previous local investigation" which at present the Magistrate is empowered to order, and power is given to take evidence on oath at such a preliminary enquiry. Fourthly, Presidency Magistrates are enabled to act under the section without special authorisation. The question of local investigation by Magistrates was discussed in detail in these columns (see 16 C. W. N. 186N.)

We find that it is proposed to add a new sec. 539 B. (cl. 130 of the Bill) to the following effect: Any Judge or Magistrate may at any stage of any enquiry or trial visit and inspect any place in which an offence is alleged to have been committed or any other place which it is in his opinion necessary to view for the purpose of such enquiry or trial and shall record forthwith a memorandum of any facts observed at such inspection and shall furnish the accused, if he so desires, a copy of such memorandum without cost. Too much power is, we apprehend, being given to Courts to decide cases on the results of local inspection the effect of which will be practically to supersede to a great extent our judicial system which allows the determination of cases on evidence and evidence alone.

Cl. 57 of the bill makes it obligatory on an accused to state whether he wishes to cross-examine any witnesses for the prosecution immediately after a refusal or omission to plead or a claim to be tried. The object of the amendment is to require the accused to exercise his right at once. It is evident that the Legislature disapproves of the view taken of sec. 256 of the Code in In the matter of Inder Rai, 14 C. W. N. 280 which decision the Legislature proposes to overrule.

Cls. 50 and 51 of the Bill remove cl. 2 of sec. 237 to sec. 238 and re-enact it with the addition that a conviction for an abetment of an offence is also permissible although the abetment is not separately charged. Cl. 52 of the bill enlarges the scope of sec. 239 and re-enacts it in the following terms.

The following persons may be charged and tried together namely:—

(a) persons accused of the same offence;

(b) persons accused of an offence and persons accused of an abetment or an attempt to commit such offence;

(c) persons accused of more than one offence of the same kind within the meaning of sec. 234 committed by them together within the period of twelve months.

(d) persons accused of different offences committed in the same transaction.

(e) persons accused of offences which include theft extortion or criminal misappropriation and persons accused of receiving or retaining or assisting in the disposal or concealment of property possession of which has been transferred by the said offences of abetment of or attempting to commit any of the last named offences ; and

(f) persons accused of any offence under Chap. XII of the Indian Penal Code relating to counterfit coin and persons accused of any other offence under the said chapter relating to the same coin or of abetment of or attempting to commit any offence.

Another noticeable change is the amendment of sec. 309 of the Code to the effect that the Judge shall ascertain the opinions of assessors by questions and answers. The present section lays down that the "Judge shall require each of the assessors to state his opinion orally and shall record such opinion." It is proposed to enact that the Judge shall record the opinion of each assessor and "for the purpose of ascertaining such opinion shall ask each assessor such questions as he thinks necessary; such questions and answers thereto shall be recorded." This is exactly what has been repeatedly condemned and we believe that the system of subjecting assessors to a cross-examination should on no account receive the sanction of the Legislature. In the very recent case of Romesh Chandra Banerjee v. King-Emperor, 18 C. W. N. 498 Mr. Justice Woodroffe disapproved of such a practice in unequivocal language and we hope this amendment will not find a place in the statute book.

Honorary Secretary, Incorporated Law Society.

SIR,

It having been brought to the notice of the Hon'ble Chief Justice that a practice has grown up to omit in plaints the particulars required by clauses (e) and (f) of r. 1 of Or. VII of the C. P. C., I am directed by His Lordship to state that no plaints will be admitted unless there be a distinct tatement.

(i) as to when the cause of action arose,

(ii) as to where that portion of the cause of action on which reliance is placed as giving jurisdiction arose.

In this connection I am desired to refer you to Appendix A, Plaints Form No. 1, para 4 of the C. P. C.

If you could see your way to inform the members of your Society as to these requirements, it would be of great assistance.

I have the honour to be,

COMMISSION FOR EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The provisions in the Criminial Procedure Code regarding the examination of witnesses in criminal cases by commission is contained in Chap. X.L. of the Code. But there is absolutely no provision in that Code for examination of parties in that way as there is in the Code of Civil Procedure. Sec. 503 gives descretionary powers to a PresidencyMagistrate, District Magistrate, a Court of Session and the High Court to issue Commissions for the examination of witnesses only when their attendance "cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience which under the circumstances of the case would be unreasonable and such a commission can only be issued to a District Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. Sec. 506 of the Code deals with the procedure to be adopted by Provincial Subordinate Magistrates for such commissions. The grounds, as set forth in both these secs., on which a commision may issue, are therefore threefold only, to wit, delay, expense and inconvenience and there is no other ground on which a commission may be obtained. Thus a respectable lady who never appears in public and can never do so without compromising herself and her family in the eyes of the Indian community if cited as a witness is placed in a very awkward position. Either she must expose herself to public view at the sacrifice of her social position or she must subject herself to all the legal consequences for contempt of Court's process, though most undeservedly. The social rules in this country are unusually stringent and it could not be said that the Legislature in enacting the law on the subject could have overlooked such an important point. But the letter of the law, as it stands, would seem not to favour any such construction of the law as would entitle a purdanashin female witness to demand examination on commission. The case-law on this point is also not very clear.* In the matter of the petition of Din Tarini Debi reported in I. L. R. 15 Cal. at p. 775, (see cases referred to in Hem Kumari v. Queen-Empress 1 C W. N. 333) the decision was couched in such a language as to make that a special case on its own merits and we are not aware of any other clear case on the point. Magistrates are slow to look beyond the letter of the law in matters like this and Provincial Subordinate Magistrates are loth to move the District Magistrates to save time and trouble. The absence of any salutory provision in this respect often operates as a grave hardship on Hindu Society and on the repectable Mahommadan Community and not in a few cases in the hands of designing men serves to rescue the offender from the hands of justice. Cases are not infrequent in private disputes specially, when a real culprit, to evade just punishment, would not hesitate to cite a purdanashin lady from the family of his adversary as witness and then force the opposite party to withdraw from the case or come to a settlement to save his honour and position. But if there were any provision for the examination of such purdanashin ladies by commission, as in Civil cases, the trick could not have been played and just punishment evaded. Examination by commission in the way that obtains in Civil Courts is not likely to stand in the way of justice being done and we are at a loss to comprehend why the Legislature has not thought it fit to extend this satutory provision of law to the trial of criminial cases. The little concession that has been made in this behalf is more theoretical than practical and the effect has been nullified by its circumlocutory process. District Magistrates as a rule, have scarcely any time to try cases and consequently they are made over for trial from the very beginning to subordinate Magistrates who have no authority to issue commissions without the sanction of the District Magistrate and obtaining such sanction would mean an ammount of delay and trouble which could scarcely be realised by the Legislature. We fail to see the reason of such restrictions, for Magistrates who can be entrusted with the trial of cases may be safely vested with discretionary powers to issue such commisions in cases under trial and we think that the trying Judge would be the fittest person to decide such matters. If in civil cases even prostitutes can claim, as of right, exemption from appearance in Court, we see no reason why respectable ladies and purdanashin women should not have that right in Criminial Courts.

The next question that would arise in this connection is the character and status of the person to be appointed a commissioner The duty of a commissioner would be to take down deposition only in the presence of the parties and thus it is not such a duty as could not be performed by a member of the legal profession. An Indian female would hesitate long before she could be pursuaded to appear before a Magistrate and give her deposition in an audible voice and if the Magistrate happened to be an European it would be very difficult to make a female speak out in his presence. So it is deemed that some consideration is necessary here also. In Civil cases pleaders are, as a rule, appointed commissioners and this system answers the purpose well. So it would not be pressing the point too for if we were to suggest the adoption of the same system in criminal cases as well

As regards the examination of parties in criminial cases the adoption of such a system is not always practicable, especially in the case of the accused. But as regards female complainants the subject may very well be taken into consideration by the Legislature to obviate certain difficulties that arise now and then.

Reviews.

A TREATISE ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INJUNCTIONS. By W, W. Kerr. Fifth Edition by J. M. Peterson, M. A. L. L. M. Published by Messrs. Sweet & Maxwell. 3, Chancery Lane, W. C. 1914. Price £1-1-0.

This standard treatise on the law of Injunction was badly in need of being brought up-to-date. Since the publication of the fourth edition in 1903, a large number of very important decisions have been delivered which required incorporation. Besides this, since the new Copy-right Act came into operation, the chapter on copyright in this work, which contained a masterly summary of the subject, became obsolete in certain respects. We are glad to find that the provisions of the new Statute, which has been adopted in India with but little variation, have been very faithfully summarised in the new edition and the cases which would throw light on them given in the foot notes. Opinions and inferences upon the interpretation of the old Statute as based on decisions passed thereon have also been modified in respect of some very material particulars in view of the new law and more recent decisions. No less care and labour have been bestowed in the revision of the other chapters. Looking through the introductory chapters also we find that propositions which, in the former editions, were a little two broadly stated have been stated with greater precision. For instance it was stated in the former edition (p. 8) that "the Court will not interfere by injunction to prevent criminal proceedings being taken by plaintiff against the defendant in a pending action notwithstanding that the criminal proceedings and the action are based on the same wrongful act." This statement has been modified in the present edition by the addition of the words "unless the objects are identical" and we think very properly. Similarly with regard to the doctrine that injunction operates in personam we notice the addition of some useful illustrations. We find also that decisions so recent as Adams v. Ursell, (1913), 1 Ch. 269, have been incorporated in the body of the book in the chapter on Nuisance, p. 202. More recent decisions are given in the addenda and corrigenda. We congratulate both the editor and publishers in bringing this valuable work quite up-to-date.

This compilation is very well conceived, and the only thing needed to secure for it its proper place in the estimation of legal practitioners is that it should appear with reasonable regularity. In the present issue which is the second since it was started and which represents the second quarter of the year 1913, we find collected several more of the Parliamentary enactments and Orders in Council and Acts passed by the Provincial Legislatures in India and Notifications, Rules, Orders, &c., made under them. There is no Imperial Act in this volume and the Bombay Acts, it is announced, will appear in the next quarterly number. The Public Demands Recovery Act, III of 1913, is the most important of the Bengal Acts published in this number.

section refers to decrees obtained by the landlord under sec. 65. To acquire the right which the section gives, not only the person obtaining the decree must be the landlord at the time, but the person seeking to execute it by sale of the tenure must have the landlord's interests "vested" in him. In other words, the right to bring the tenure or holding, as the case may be, to sale exists so long as the relationship of landlord and tenant exists.

It seems to their Lordships clear on an examination of the different sections bearing on the subject that the right to bring the tenure or holding to sale under sec. 65 appertains exclusively to the landlord; and that a person to whom certain rents are due, and who obtains a decree therefor after he has parted with the property in which the tenancy is situate, has no such right. The contrary view, their Lordships think, would give rise to a very anomalous situation. A zemindar to whom certain arrears are due, as in the present case, may sell his property, without assigning, for purposes of his own, the back-rents as he is entitled to do; he may then sue for those back rents; before any decree is made in this suit, the tenant falls into arrears to the new landlord who brings a similar suit. Both the ex-landlord and the present landlord obtain decrees for their respective arrears. For whose decree and on whose application is the tenure to be sold? The question admits of only one answer—that it is the existing landlord alone who can execute the decree; the ex-landlord is an outsider, and whilst he can execute his decree against the debtor as a money-decree, he has no remedy against the tenure itself.

The learned Judges of the High Court seem to think that either from the nature of the debt being arrears of rent, or the decree being for arrears of rent, the tenure becomes ipso facto hypothecated so to speak for the debt; and that consequently the person to whom the debt is due, although he has ceased to be the landlord, and is to all intents and purposes so far as other rights and obligations under the law are concerned, a total stranger to the property with which those rights and obligations are inseparably connected, he has the special remedy given to the landlord to recover arrears attached to the tenure. This conception of the legal position seems to their Lordships untenable, for the charge created by sec. 65 is clearly in favour of the landlord.

There is another equally fatal objection to the application of the contesting Defendants to bring to sale the putni tenure in execution of Dhanpat Singh's decree.

The Putni Regulation is a self-contained Statute. It lays down certain well-defined rules for the realisation by the zemindar of arrears of rent from a tenure-holder; it makes the tenure primarily liable, and it gives to the zemindar the right of applying to the Collector for the periodical sale of defaulting taluks.

Sec 8 provides for the manner in which the zemindar, that is "the proprietor under direct engagement to Government," shall be entitled to apply for the sale of these tenures.

Sec. 11 declares that—

"any taluk or saleable tenure that may be disposed of at a public sale, under the rules of this Regulation, for arrears of rent due on account of it, i sold free of all incumbrances that may have accrued upon it by act of the defaulting proprietor his representatives, or assignees."

It is unnecessary to refer to the rest of this section for the purposes of this judgment.

Sec. 13 provides the method by which the "holder of a taluk of the second degree" may save his tenure "from the ruin that must attend" the sale of the superior tenure.

Sub-sec. 2 declares—

"When even the tenure of a talukdar of the first degree may be advertised for sale in the manner required by the second and third clauses of sec 8 of this Regulation, for arrears of rent due to the zemindar, the talukdars of the second degree, or any number of them, shall be entitled to stay the final sale, by paying into Court the amount of balance that may be declared due by the person attending on the part of the zemindar on the day appointed for sale in like manner they shall be entitled to lodge money antecedently for the purpose of eventually answering any demand that may remain due on the day fixed for the sale, and, should the amount lodged be sufficient, the sale shall not proceed, but, after making good to the zemindar the amount of his demand, any excess shall be paid back to the person or persons who may have lodged it"

And sub-sec. 4 after referring to certain conditions which it is unnecessary to consider here, declares that "such deposit shall not be carried to credit in, or set against, future demands for rent, but shall be considered as a loan made to the proprietor of the tenure preserved from sale by such means, and the taluk so preserved shall be the security to the person or persons making the advance, who shall be considered to have a lien thereupon, in the same manner as if the loan had been made upon mortgage: and he or they shall be entitled, on applying for the same, to obtain immediate possession of the tenure of the defaulter, in order to recover the amount so advanced from any profits belonging thereto."

It will be seen, therefore, that the Appellant in this case, by his admitted deposit of the arrears for which the superior tenure was advertised for sale at the instance of the Chowdhrain zemindar, acquired the special lien expressly created by the Regulation which may well be called a statutory salvage lien arising not from any implication of the law but under the express directions and declarations of the Act.

Reg VIII of 1819 being thus, as already observed, a self contained Act embodying the rules relative to the rights of zemindars and putni talukdars, the Legislature in enacting Act VIII of 1885 excluded in express terms from the operation of the Tenancy Act the special legislation relating to putni tenures. Sec. 195 of Act VIII of 1885 declares (omitting the the immaterial portions) that "nothing in this Act shall affect . . . . any enactment relating to putni tenures, so far as it relates to those tenures."

The Plaintiff's right to hold the putni taluk exempt from any proceeding under the Tenancy Act, is founded on steps taken by him under the Putni Regulation.

For these considerations their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment and decree of the High Court should be set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored. The first party Defendants, the contesting Respondents, must pay the costs of this appeal and of the appeal to the High Court.

And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Judgment, 27, March.

Musammat Amir Begam, Appellant,
v.
Khwaja Saiyed Badr-ud din Husain and others, Respondents.

Arbitrator's award—Misconduct—Irregularity of procedure precluding proper inquiry—Corruption and partiality—Proof—Onus—Partition of property—Arbitrator, not assisted by parties, seeking information as to valuation from outsider—Failure to keep notes of proceedings, not objected to, till after award—Examination of arbitrator as witness—Statements obtained as bearing on charge of corruption if admissible to question award on the merits—Arbitrator holding property claimed to be exclusive, as joint—Decision if binds owner—Error in such decision if vitiates award—Property subject to mortgage, allotment of, to one with direction that all co sharers should pay proportionately—Decision if vitiates award, apart from corrupt motive.

When a separable portion of an award is bad, the remainder, if good, can be maintained.

If irregularities in procedure can be proved which would amount to no proper hearing of the matters in dispute, that would be misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award without any imputation on the honesty or impartiality of the arbitrator.

The burden of proving that there had been no proper enquiry by the arbitrator is on the person who alleges it.

It is generally desirable that an arbitrator should make and retain for subsequent use, if necessary, notes of proceedings before him; but there is no warrant for holding that in the absence of such notes an award should be set aside at the instance of one of the parties who must be held to have known the general course of procedure and who did not make any protest until after the making of the award with the terms of which he was not satisfied.

An arbitrator selected by the parties comes within the general obligation of being bound to give evidence, and where a charge of dishonesty or impartiality is made, any relevant evidence which he can give is properly admissible. But evidence so admitted as relevant on a charge of dishonesty or partiality cannot be used to scrutinize the decision of the arbitrator on matters within his jurisdiction and on which his decision is final, e.g., to criticise methods adopted by him in determining the quantum of his valuations, for purposes of partition—a matter within his descretion.

Apart from examining its bearing on the charge of corruption, it is beyond the competency of the Court to scrutinise the estimate of value appearing on the face of the award.

An arbitrator appointed by the parties to partition their joint estate decided that a house claimed by one of the parties to be exclusively hers was in fact joint and allotted it to one of the other parties

Held—That this decision whether right or wrong did not in this case support the inference that he was actuated by dishonest motive. If he was wrong, the allottee would suffer as the award could have no effect whatever in defeating the title of the true owner.

The arbitrator allotted to one of the parties properties subject to a heavy charge, but at the same time provided that the mortgage debt and interest should be a charge on the entire property and each co-sharer was to be liable to pay in proportion to his share and should pay that share to the mortgagee as soon as possible :

Held—That it was not within the province of the Court to decide whether this provision gave full protection to the allottee. The matter having been considered by the arbitrator his decision could not be questioned by the Court unless the charge of corruption or misconduct was established.

In this case the Appellant urged that the award of an arbitrator should not be made a decree of Court. The circumstances under which the reference to arbitration was made, and the terms of the reference as well as the other facts of the case fully appear from their Lordships' judgment and from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners (Mr. B. Lindsay and Mr. Mohammad Rafique) which was as follows :—

"Before proceeding to examine the various allegations of misconduct made against the arbitrator we think it our duty to make some general observations on the course which the proceedings took in the Court below. In the first place it would appear from the tenor of the judgment that the learned Subordinate Judge has misconceived the nature of the duties and powers of an arbitrator. And in the second place he would seem to have misunderstood the nature of his own functions as a Judge entertaining an application for the filing of an award made out of Court. He seems to have assumed the attitude of a Court of Appeal dealing with the decision of an inferior Court and to have found fault with the award because the various findings of the arbitrator were not such as he would have come to himself had he been dealing with the matters in dispute as a Court of first instance.

"Now as regards the powers and duties of an arbitrator no fixed rules can be laid down. The extent of the powers and the nature of the duties are to be ascertained from the terms of the agreement to refer by which he is appointed. In the present case the language of the agreement is of the widest possible description. The parties after declaring the existence between them of disputes regarding the estate of the deceased Farid-ud-din and the will left by him agree to appoint Sakhawat Ali as their arbitrator to settle these disputes. They empower him to decide their differences 'in any way he might deem proper' (jistariqa se munasib samjhenge) and they undertook to be bound by his decision. Clearly, therefore, it was the intention of the parties to arm the arbitrator with most extensive powers, in fact they gave him authority to act in any manner he pleased, provided, of course, that he dealt fairly with all parties concerned. As for his duties they were well understood. He was to decide whether the deceased had executed the will and he was to determine how the estate was to be distributed between the persons who had any claims as heirs of Farid-ud-din.

"Subject to any limitations contained in the instrument of his appointment and to any statutory directions as to the manner in which he is to discharge his duties, an arbitrator may conduct his proceedings in any manner he thinks fit so long as he acts in accordance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. He is not fettered by rules of practice which Courts of law adopt for general convenience. He is not bound, for example (as the lower Court appears to think he was) to record statements or admissions of the parties, to take the depositions of witnesses, to mark and file documents and to behave in other respects as if he were the Judge of a Civil Court bound by the adjective law laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure and the rules made under it. He is not under any obligation to make notes of his proceedings, though it may be advisable for him to do so: and if he does elect to keep such notes they are his own property and he cannot be compelled to produce them in Court. He is not bound to observe the rules relating to evidence to be found in the Indian Evidence Act (cf. sec. 3 of the Act). In short he has greater latitude than the Courts of law in order to do complete justice between the parties and may in forming his judgment act upon merely moral considerations of which a Court of law could not take cognizance (cf. Russell on Arbitration, 9th edition, at page 98). Again as the parties select the arbitrator to be the judge of their disputes they cannot, where the award is good on the face of it, object to his decision either upon law or fact and the Courts will not ordinarily review his discretion provided he acts within his authority and behaves fairly to each party. Nor will they interfere with his judgment on any mere ground of mistake. He should hear all evidence material to the questions before him which the parties choose to produce but all evidence must be tendered otherwise no objection will lie. And lastly while he may be called as a witness to give evidence respecting his proceedings in the arbitration, there are certain limits beyond which he cannot properly be questioned. On this point the law was laid down in the cases of Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1) and is summarised as follows at page 303 of Russell on Arbitration, 9th Edition:

"'It was decided in the House of Lords that an arbitrator called as a witness, in an action on an award, might be examined as to every matter of fact, with reference to the making of the award, what claims were made and what admitted, so as to put the Court in possession of the history of the litigation up to the time of his proceeding to make the award, and whether in his estimate of the compensation he took into consideration any matters not included in the reference, and therefore not within his jurisdiction. And it was laid down plainly that the Defendants had no right to go further and question the arbitrator as to the elements which he took into his consideration in determining the quantum of compensation, or to scrutinize the exercise by the arbitrator of his discretionary power to award compensation.'

"Such are the principles which are accepted in the English law for regulating the conduct of arbitrators and we are not aware of any provisions in the law of India which render them inapplicable to arbitration proceedings held in this country. Nor is there any reason to suppose that the powers of the Courts in India to review the proceedings of arbitrators are any more extensive than they are in England. Those powers are defined in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, and speaking broadly the Courts are authorized to interfere with the award on grounds personal to the arbitrator only when he is shown to have been guilty of corruption or misconduct or when he has acted after his jurisdiction has been withdrawn or when the award is on the face of it illegal, incomplete or indefinite.

* * * * *

"There remains only another point to be discussed and that is whether the arbitrator exceeded his powers by dividing up the shares in Rasulabad. He has prepared lists of fields in that village and has assigned certain specified plots to each of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5. No doubt he was anxious to remove all ground for future dispute by so doing, but we think it is clear that this action on his part was in excess of his powers. Amir Begam was a co-tenant with Farid ud-din in this village. She had a share of her own held jointly with Farid-ud din. There was no division by metes and bounds The result of the partition effected by the arbitrator is that in assigning specified plots to the parties he has divided off Amir Begam's own share as well and we do not think that the terms of the agreement to refer empowered him to deal with any property other than that which belonged to Farid-ud-din. This portion of his award is separable from the rest and should be set aside."

The Judicial Commissioners allowed the appeal subject to the above modification.

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C, and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube for the Appellant submitted that the award was bad for several reasons, and ought not to be made a decree of Court. The arbitrator did not decide but assumed the execution and validity of the Will in question and the legal position of Musammat Dhuman Jan. The pleadings shewed that the arbitrator had to determine those questions, but instead of deciding them in a judicial manner he decided them on his own personal knowledge. That vitiated the award. The Appellant had no knowledge of the fact that the arbitrator was an attesting witness to the Will. That fact ought to have been disclosed. Kali Prosunno v. Rajani Kant (2). The arbitrator did not hold any judicial inquiry in the presence of the parties—he made what inquiry he liked behind the backs of the parties, and gave the Appellant no opportunity to controvert the allegations of the other side. He kept no notes of the inquiry except the valuation of the properties. Although an arbitrator is not bound to follow the rules of procedure and evidence in the same way as a Court of law, nevertheless an arbitrator must proceed in a judicial manner consistently with the principles of natural justice. His decision, if arbitrary, cannot stand. Dayi Kishan v. Dharam Das (3), In re Enoch & Zaretzky Bock & Co. (4). The Subordinate Judge was right in his findings as to the misconduct of the arbitrator. He heard his evidence. In practically all instances of valuation and allotment the arbitrator was partial to the Respondent, and the cumulative effect thereof pointed to nothing less than his dishonest partiality. In any case the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to over-ride the provisions of the Will, and allot the encumbered properties to the Appellant. The Court below was wrong in holding that the award relating to the partition of Rasulabad lands was separable. It was not and the calculations shewed that the Appellant was in a much worse position now under the modified award than under the award itself. The award in favour of the Appellant was practically illusory and ought not to be allowed to stand.

MUSAMMAT AMIR BEGAM v. KHWAJA SAIYED BADR-UD-DIN HUSAIN.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., and Mr. Lowndes for the Respondent, Badruddin Husain submitted that the decision of the Court below was right. The terms of the reference indicated that the arbitrator was to decide the matters in controversy to the best of his knowledge and judgment. He has done that. The criticism now made, namely, that he omitted to decide as to the execution of the Will and the claim of Dhuman Jan does not appear to have been pressed before both the lower Courts. The arbitrator was a trusted friend of the family, and was given full powers to hold such inquiry as he thought proper and necessary. The arbitrator does not seem to have had much assistance from the parties in deciding the matters in dispute. But he honestly did his best and decided justly, and there was no suggestion made in the written statement that he acted dishonestly. The finding of the Subordinate Judge was not warranted by the evidence and the conduct of the parties. The arbitrator's evidence, given in much detail, was trustworthy. Mohammad Fasih pleader and son-in law of the Appellant, also looked after the interests of the Appellant during the arbitrator's inquiry. He was not called to contradict the statements made by the arbitrator. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was based on an erroneous appreciation of the function and powers of an arbitrator. If the arbitrator was not proved guilty of misconduct, moral or judicial, his award must stand, even if it could be shewn that he was wrong in arriving at his decision. Here the decision was quite right and it was in conformity with the Mahomedan Law. The debts were made a charge over the entire estate of the executor. The valuation and allotments were fair, and if anything more favourable to the Appellant She was given more than what she was strictly entitled to.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PARMOOR.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh dated 15th August 1911, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow passed by him upon an application by Respondent (1) for the filing of an award.

On the 6th of May 1909, one Khwaja Farid ud-din Husain (hereinafter called the testator) died at Lucknow, leaving considerable property, and had as heirs, according to Mahommedan law, a full sister (the Appellant herein), two step-brothers Respondents (2) and (3), two step-sisters Respondents (4) and (5), and a widow Respondent (6). Shortly before his death, the testator made a will by which he appointed Respondent (1) his executor, and, as he was entitled to do by Mahommedan law, bequeathed him one-third of his property. After the death of the testator disputes arose between the parties interested, and litigation was commenced. On the 6th August 1909, the matters in dispute were referred to the sole arbitration of Munshi Sakhawat Ali under a submission of reference in the following form :—

"Whereas there exists a dispute amongst us, the executants, regarding the estate of Khwaja Farid ud-din, deceased, and the deed of will dated the 30th April 1909, we, the executants, have, of our own accord, appointed Munshi Sakhawat Ali as a referee for the purpose of settling the matters in dispute. We agree and record that the said referee may decide it in whatever way he may deem proper, we, the executants, shall remain bound by the award. Therefore we have executed these few presents by way of a deed of agreement so that they may serve as an authority."

The arbitrator entered upon the reference and published his award on the 16th July 1910. He confirmed the appointment of Respondent (1) as executor, and gave him one-third of the property. The remaining property fell to be divided according to Mahommedan law. The parties were entitled in the following shares:—

The Appellant to a third share, the Respondents (1) and (6) jointly to a moiety, the Respondents (2) and (5) to a sixth share. The arbitrator then proceeded to distribute the property in proportion to the shares to which the respective parties were entitled and for this purpose to make a valuation. The property so valued amounted in the aggregate to 91,042 rupees. There was a further item of 4,000 rupees, which was in no sense an ascertained or settled amount, but was based on a right to claim a rendition of accounts from a certain Ahmad Khan, and this item, for what it was worth, was allotted to the Appellant. The Respondents (1) and (6) in respect of their joint half share were allotted property valued at 45,010 rupees. The Appellant in addition to the above item of 4,000 rupees was allotted property valued at 30,879 rupees, and Respondents (2) and (5) were allotted property valued at 15,153 rupees. On the face of the award the distribution appears to be fairly made. So far as there is any advantage it is in favour of the Appellant. This apparent advantage is referred to and explained by the arbitrator in his award.

At the time of the testator's death there was a considerable mortgage (20,000 rupees) affecting certain portions of his property. The arbitrator recognised that the allottees of the mortgaged property would be under a disadvantage with an apprehension of possible loss. He therefore decided that the debt of 20,000 rupees and its interest should, as among the parties entitled under the will, be a charge on the entire property of the testator, and proportionately on all the co-sharers, and that each co-sharer should be liable to pay in proportion to his share, and that each co-sharer should as soon as possible pay his proportionate share, both capital and interest, to the creditor. Whether this provision in the award did give full protection to the allottees of the mortgaged property, it is not within the province of their Lordships to decide. It is sufficient that the matter was considered by the arbitrator and his decision cannot be questioned unless the charge of corruption or misconduct is established. The award further purported to assign specific lands in the Zemindari of Rasulabad by way of partition, a matter clearly outside the power of the arbitrator and which would render his award invalid, unless this portion of his award is separable from the rest. In the opinion of their Lordships there is no difficulty whatever in separating this portion of the award from the rest. It is well recognised law that when a separable portion of an award is bad, the remainder of the award, if good, can be maintained. In this respect their Lordships agree with the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and it becomes necessary to consider the grounds on which the remainder of the award has been attacked.

On the 10th June 1910 Respondent (1) made an application to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow to file the award in Court under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure Act, 1908. On such an application the Court, if satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon, and that no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraphs 14 and 15 is proved, shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award. Paragraph 14 states the grounds on which the Court may remit the award to the reconsideration of the same arbitrator or umpire. Paragraph 15 states the grounds on which alone an award shall be set aside. The first of these grounds is corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator or umpire. It was on this ground that the Subordinate Judge refused to order the filing of the award and disallowed the application of the Respondent (1), who had been treated as Plaintiff in the proceedings.

On the 7th September 1910 issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge. The only material one is: Is the award vitiated by the misconduct of the referee as alleged under the paragraphs 9 to 20 of the first Defendant's (the Appellant's) written statement ?

The misconduct alleged against the referee was twofold :—

(1st) That the referee had acted corruptly and dishonestly in his capacity of Judge.

(2nd) That the proceedings in the reference had been conducted in such a way that the matters in dispute had not been properly tried.

Their Lordships will deal first with the less important point of irregularity of procedure.

If irregularities in procedure can be proved which would amount to no proper hearing of the matters in dispute there would be misconduct sufficient to vitiate the award without any imputation on the honesty or impartiality of the arbitrator. In the present case it was alleged on behalf of the Appellant that there had been no proper inquiry, since the parties had not been properly summoned to appear before the arbitrator, and the Appellant had not had an opportunity of meeting the case set up by the Respondent (1). The burden of proving this allegation was upon the Appellant and other Defendants at the trial before the Subordinate Judge. The only relevant witness called on behalf of the Appellant was Shaban Ali, who admitted in cross examination that he was sent for by the arbitrator on several occasions and questioned in respect of the value of immoveable property. As against this evidence, which in itself is quite insufficient to prove the alleged irregularities, the arbitrator stated on oath that he invited all parties to put in written statements before him, but that they declined to do so; that he was never asked by any of the parties to hear oral evidence and that no oral evidence was tendered at any time, and that he got little or no assistance from any of the parties in making his inquiries. It is, however, unnecessary, in their Lordships' opinion, to further analyse this evidence since they agree with the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh that the allegations of irregularity in procedure were not proved against the arbitrator, and that there is no justification for the strictures passed by the Subordinate Judge upon the conduct of the arbitrator. Further severe comment was made that the arbitrator did not make and retain any adequate notes of the proceedings. No doubt it is generally desirable that an arbitrator should make and retain for subsequent use, if necessary, notes of the proceedings before him; but there is no warrant for holding that in the absence of such notes an award should be set aside at the instance of one of the parties, who must be held to have known the general course of procedure, and who did not make any protest until after the making of the award with the terms of which she was not satisfied.

The last point, and the most important, is the grave charge that the arbitrator acted dishonestly and with partiality in conducting the inquiry and making his award. This charge was found to be established by the Subordinate Judge. The main evidence relied upon to support this conclusion was that given by the arbitrator himself in cross examination. An arbitrator, selected by the parties, comes within the general obligation of being bound to give evidence, and where a charge of dishonesty or partiality is made any relevent evidence which he can give is without doubt properly admissible. It is, however, necessary to take care that evidence admitted as relevant on a charge of dishonesty or partiality, is not used for a different purpose; namely, to scrutinize the decision of the arbitrator on matters within his jurisdiction, and on which his decision is final. The limitations applicable to the evidence of an arbitrator as witness in a legal proceeding to enforce his award are stated in the case Buccleuch v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, (1) but where charges of dishonesty are made the Court would reject no evidence of an arbitrator which could be of assistance in informing itself whether such charges were established.

In the opinion of their Lordships, the Subordinate Judge did not take sufficient care in the discrimination of the purpose for which the evidence was admissible, and utilised evidence relevant on the charge of corruption to criticise methods adopted by the arbitrator in determining the quantum of his valuations. The course adopted in the cross-examination of the arbitrator was not satisfactory. There was a prolonged and critical examination into the details of figures, used by the arbitrator, in making his award, but the charge of corruption was not put fairly and squarely to him, so as to enable him to give a direct answer or explanation. It is not surprising that a cross-examination so conducted should lead to a certain amount of confusion and contradiction, but their Lordships cannot find in this respect any warrant for supporting the grave charges of corruption and partiality.

The distribution and valuation of the testator's property amongst the parties entitled are stated without ambiguity on the face of the award. In the first place, the arbitrator sets out the details of the property alloted to Respondent (1) and in each instance his estimation of value. The first property allotted is the entire village of Mohi-ud-dinpur, alias Hajiganj and the estimated value is 28,785 rupees. In respect of this allotment and valuation three charges are made against the arbitrator. It is said, first, that Hajiganj was a choice portion of the property of the testator and that its allotment to Respondent (1) showed partiality in his favour to the detriment of the Appellant. The arbitrator's answer is that it was undesirable to divide Hajiganj and that the only way in which division could be avoided was by its allotment in entirety to Respondent (1). This explanation is in itself reasonable and effectively answers the charge.

The second allegation is of undervalua-

tion. The arbitrator is said to have dishonestly assessed this property at a low valuation intending to give an unfair preference to Respondent (1). The evidence adduced in support of this charge is that the valuation was made on the Patwari's figures to the rejection of those appearing in the accounts of the testator, the former figures giving a lower rate of profit income, and thereby diminishing the capitalised value. Their Lordships can see no reason for not accepting the arbitrator's explanation given in cross examination. He considered the Patwari's figures more likely to form an accurate basis for valuation than those in the private accounts, and stated that there were reasons which made him think that the private accounts were not satisfactory. This is just one of the matters on which an arbitrator is bound to exercise his discretion in estimating value, and the evidence is quite insufficient to prove that the arbitrator's choice of materials was influenced by a corrupt motive. Apart from the charge of corruption, it was beyond the competency of the Subordinate Judge to scrutinize the estimate of value appearing on the face of the award. Their Lordships can find no reason for coming to the conclusion that the basis of valuation suggested by the Subordinate Judge is preferable to that of the arbitrator.

The third charge made under the head of Hajiganj is that in the valuation, no account was taken of the Zemindar's office said to be worth 500 rupees. The arbitrator's answer is that it was included as part of the village property, and that in any case it was covered by the addition of 2,000 rupees which he had made to the value of the village as a whole.

The second property allotted to Respondent (1) consists of houses at Lucknow. It was said that the arbitrator had unfairly undervalued this property to the detriment of the Appellant, and that he had included in his valuation a house which belonged to the Appellant and not to the testator. There is no weight in the criticism made by the Subordinate Judge of the valuation of this property when the actual method adopted by the arbitrator is understood. The arbitrator having a difficulty in obtaining any satisfactory basis for fixing a valuation invited the parties to send in tenders, stating the price they would be prepared to pay for each of the houses. The only party who tendered for all the houses was Respondent (1), whose tender in the aggregate amounted to a price of 11,900 rupees. The Appellant sent in a tender for three of the houses at a slightly lower figure under each head, but the difference is so small as to be negligible. The arbitrator fixed the value at 11,800 rupees, reducing the tender price in the case of two houses by the comparatively insignificant sum of 50 rupees. The method of valuation adopted by the arbitrator was within his discretion, and it is impossible to find that the small alteration in the case of the two houses was inconsistent with honesty and impartiality.

It was necessary for the purpose of making his award that the arbitrator should determine whether or not to include in his distribution of property the house at Lucknow claimed by the Appellant. He gave his reasons for the decision at which he arrived. He knew that the house in question had been assigned to the Appellant many years ago under a deed of compromise, but found that the testator had not given up possession, always treating the house as his own and mentioning it in his will as a portion of his estate. He came to the conclusion that the testator, notwithstanding the deed of compromise, had a good title by adverse possession, and that the Appellant's claim could not be sustained. He may have been right or wrong in the conclusion he arrived at, but their Lordships find no warrant for the inference that he was in any way actuated by a dishonest motive. If he was wrong and the house was not the property of the testator, its inclusion in the award might be detrimental to Respondent (1), but could have no effect whatever in defeating the title of the true owner. In addition to Hajiganj and the house property the arbitrator allotted to Respondent (1) certain properties of comparatively small importance. Having regard to the decision at which their Lordships have arrived on the more important portions of the property allotted to Respondent (1), it is unnecessary to follow under these heads the criticisms of the Subordinate Judge, which denote no more than a difference of opinion from the arbitrator on questions not within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to determine. No attack was made on the allocation of household furniture, cash and ornaments in Lucknow, or on their estimated value of 4,200 rupees.

Having allotted his share to Respondent (1), the arbitrator next proceeds in his award to allot her share to the Appellant, and to estimate the value of such share. There are three heads. The entire village of Kundri; a share in the village of Rasulabad; and a sum of 4,000 rupees. The testator's share in the village of Rasulabad was at this time subject to a considerable mortgage of 20,000 rupees, and it is alleged on behalf of the Appellant that the arbitrator acted dishonestly in allotting to the Appellant property subject to the disability of the mortgage; that he unfairly overvalued the testator's property in Rasulabad; and that he must have known that the allocation of the sum of 4,000 rupees was practically illusory. In the allotment of the testator's share in the village of Rasulabad, the arbitrator was asked by Respondents (2) to (5) to give them a share in Rasulabad adjoined to their share in Mahal Pachhim which they already possessed. The award shows that he complied with this request. The question, therefore, arises whether there is any evidence of dishonesty in his allotting the remaining share of the testator's property in the village of Rasulabad to the Appellant. The Appellant was already a co-sharer in Mauza Rasulabad, holding a share in co-tenancy with the testator. It was, therefore, quite reasonable that the arbitrator should assign a share to the Appellant of the testator's property in that village. If the allocation under the above circumstances was properly made, the disability attached to the mortgage could not be avoided. It was necessary that some of the parties should be subject to this disability, and the matter was obviously present to the mind of the arbitrator, who in his award provided against an apprehension of loss by deciding that the mortgage debt and its interest should be a charge on the entire property of the testator, and proportionately to all the co-sharers, each co-sharer being liable to pay in proportion to his share, and that each co-sharer should so soon as possible pay his capital and interest to the mortgagee. Their Lordships have already referred to this portion of the award, indicating their opinion that the arbitrator had dealt with the liability of the mortgaged property, providing what in his opinion appeared to be the best remedy. Under these circumstances their Lordships can find no evidence for the alleged dishonesty in the allotment of a share of the mortgaged property to the Appellant, and agree in the decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

Their Lordships have found some difficulty in understanding on what ground the Subordinate Judge has based his finding that the Rasulabad property was dishonestly over-valued. In his criticism on the valuation he states that the referee has valued the entire estate of the deceased at 95,042 rupees, but this in itself is an error, since it is clear on the face of the award that the estate was valued for distribution at 91,042 rupees, and that the additional sum of 4,000 rupees was only thrown in as an item which might possibly be recovered on a claim for a rendition of accounts from Ahmad Khan. This intial mistake affects the subsequent inference and their Lordships can find no evidence of dishonesty in the detailed criticism of the arbitrator's figures. The Subordinate Judge places considerable weight on the allotment of 4,000 rupees to the Appellant as an element of misconduct in the arbitrator. It was objected that this was at best a doubtful item and ought not to be estimated in calculating the value of the Appellant's share. The answer to this objection appears on the face of the award. In calculating the value of the Appellant's share of the testator's property, this sum was not taken into account, but thrown in as an additional item after the Appellant had been allotted property estimated at 30,879 rupees, in itself rather more than her third share of the valued property.

Ahmad Khan was a karinda in the employ of the testator, and had been collecting his rents. It was alleged before the arbitrator that this man had money in his possession which was owing to the estate, and for which he had not accounted. Some figures were placed before the arbitrator, but there was no reliable evidence either of liability or of amount. Ahmad Khan refused to appear before the arbitrator to give any explanation of his accounts, and he was not called at the trial before the Subordinate Judge. The Respondent No. (1) had given Ahmad Khan acquittance for any sums that might be due to him, and the arbitrator was informed by Mr. Mohammad Fasih, a pleader, and the son-in-law of the Appellant, that he, too, had given Ahmad Khan discharges, as he desired to get Ahmad Khan in his power to support the Appellant's claim for mutation. Under these circumstances, what was the arbitrator to do? If he had made no reference to the matter in his award, no question would have arisen, and, on the face of the award, the Appellant would have had a full one-third share of the valued property. The course he took was evidently intended to be in favour of the Appellant for what it was worth, and the finding of the Subordinate Judge that there was evidence of dishonesty appears to be founded on a misapprehension of the terms of the award in relation to the distribution of this item.

It was argued before their Lordships by counsel for the Appellant that, although in each instance the evidence of dishonesty might not amount to more than a case of suspicion, the aggregate effect would support the charge of corruption, since in every instance the decision was given in favour of Respondent (1), and to the detriment of the Appellant. In their Lordships' view, this is not an accurate summary, but, in any case, there would be no sufficient ground to infer such a grave charge as dishonesty and partiality against an arbitrator unless much stronger evidence was adduced in support of the particular instance relied upon than was forthcoming in the present case. It is just to the arbitrator to say that, in their Lordships' view, the charges of dishonesty and partiality have entirely failed.

Their Lordships agree with the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs.

(CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.)

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3673 OF 1910.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 13 and 14, February. Judgment, 14, February.

BEPIN BEHARY BERA and others, Defendants, Appellants,

v.

SASI BHUSHAN DATTA and another, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Public Demands Recovery Act (I of 1895), secs 20, 21—Sale without notice to representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor, if a nullity—Failure of Collector to act under sec. 21, though deposit duly made, if a ground for treating sale a nullity—Irregularity—Sale, voidable only—Proper remedy.

On 14th March 1898, a Court holding a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act was apprised of the death on 10th March 1898 of one of the judgment-debtors but the property was nevertheless sold without notice to the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. In a suit by the purchaser brought more than a year after to recover the land:

Held—That the legal representatives of the deceased judgment debtor could not ask the sale to be treated as a nullity on this ground by way of defence in this suit. It was an irregularity which made the sale voidable by either a proceeding under sec 311 of Act XIV of 1882 or a suit brought within one year as contemplated by Art. 12 (a) of the Limitation Act of 1877.

Nor could the sale be declared a nullity in such a suit upon proof only of improper rejection by the Collector of an application to set aside the sale, although the amounts mentioned in sec 21 of the Public Demands Recovery Act were duly deposited.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1910 against the decree of Babu Trailokhya Nath Shome, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Midnapore, dated the 20th of July 1910, reversing the decree of Babu Prabha Chandra Singh, Munsif, 1st Court at Sudder, dated the 7th of June 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Bidhu Bhushan Ganguly for the Appellants.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutt and Mohini Nath Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The subject matter of the litigation belonged originally to the predecesso in interest of the Appellants. In 1883, the property was sold under the Public Demands Recovery Act and was purchased by Asutosh Chackrabartty. On default of payment of cesses the property was sold again in 1889 and passed into the hands of Bepin Chandra Dutt. Later on, default was again made in the payment of cesses and proceedings were taken under the Public Demands Recovery Act, with the result that at a sale held on the 14th March 1898 Rangalal Bose became the purchaser. The Plaintiffs Respondents took a conveyance from Rangalal Bose on the 15th January 1900, but in the year following, apprehensive that their title might be challenged by the representatives of Bepin Chandra Dutt, they took another conveyance from them. The Plaintiffs now claim to recover possession from the representatives of the original owner. In the Courts below, a question was raised as to the identity of the lands now in dispute with those sold in 1883 and 1889. That question has now been set at rest and it has been finally held by the Subordinate Judge that the subject matter of litigation was sold successively in 1883, 1889 and 1898. The Court of first instance, however, found that the sale of 1898 was illegal and invalid and consequently did not create a title enforceable as against the representatives of the original owners. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed the decision of the Court of first instance and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs. But he has not expressly decided the question of the legality of the sale of 1898. That sale has been attacked before us on four grounds; namely, first, that as the certificate under sec. 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act was issued in the name of the original owners, namely, Kalachand Bera and his brother, whose interest had been sold out in 1883 and had successively vested in Asutosh Chakrabarty and Bepin Chandra Dutt, no title vested in Rangalal Bose as the purchaser of the right, title and interest of the persons named as judgment-debtors; secondly, that as no notice under sec. 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act was ever served, the sale did not affect the interest of the owners; thirdly, that as at the time of the sale, one of the judgment debtors was dead, his interest did not vest in the purchaser; and fourthly, that as the Deputy Collector illegally refused to record an order for cancellation of the sale, although an application was made as contemplated by law and the necessary amount was deposited, the sale must be deemed inoperative and ineffectual.

In so far as the first of these grounds is concerned, it cannot be disputed that, as laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Commitee in the case of Mahomed Abdul Hai v. Gujraj Sahay (1), the purchaser at a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act acquired nothing beyond the right, title and interest of the persons mentioned as the debtors in the certificate drawn up by the Collector. The question thus arises, whether Gora Chand Bera and Kala Chand Bera in whose names the certificate was issued on the 2nd December 1897 had any interest in the property at the time. Primâ facie, their interest in the property at the time had been extinguished in 1883, and Asutosh Chakrabartty had become the owner of the property. But it has been found by the Subordinate Judge that notwithstanding the sales of 1883 and 1889, the original owners continued in occupation of the disputed property. Their possession was undoubtedly adverse to that of the purchasers at the sales under the Public Demands Recovery Act. Consequently in 1895 the original owners re-acquired title in the property by adverse possession. It follows that when in 1897 the certificate was drawn up in the name of Gorachand and Kalachand, they were the persons liable to pay the Government demands, and, consequently the purchaser Rangalal Bose in 1898 acquired their right, title and interest in the property. The first ground upon which the sale is questioned cannot be supported.

In so far as the second ground of attack is concerned, it has been argued that the notice required by sec. 10 of the Public Demands Recovery Act was not served upon the judgment-debtors. It is not disputed that if such a notice was not served, the effect would be to invalidate the sale and would leave it open to the original owners, when dispossessed, to recover possession of the property within 12 years from that date. (Purna Chandra Chatterjee v. Dinabandhu Mukherjee (2). But the Subordinate Judge has found that the notice was duly served. No doubt, there is no direct proof of the service of notice. But the return of the serving officer has been produced, and it states on the face of it that the notices were delivered to the judgment-debtors who acknowledged receipt of the service. This is primâ facie proof of due service of notice, and, so far as we can gather, no effort was made to contradict this evidence. We must take it that notice under sec. 10 was duly served. The second ground also fails.

In so far as the third ground is concerned, it is not disputed that the judgment debtor Kalachand Bera died on the 10th March 1898. At the time of the sale, this fact was brought to the notice of the Court but the Court proceeded to sell the property. On this, it has been argued, that the sale did not operate to affect the interest of Kalachand Bera; and in support of this proposition reliance has been placed upon the cases of Ramasami v. Bagirathi (3), Krishnayya v. Unnissa Begum (4), Groves v. Administrator General (5). These cases, when analysed, do not assist the Appellants. No doubt, the learned Judges who decided these cases observed in their judgments that the sale in question was void and inoperative; but they nevertheless proceeded to set aside the sale. On the other hand, it was laid down by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Sheo Prosad v. Hira Lal (6), which was accepted as good law in Peari Lal Singh v. Chandi Charan Singh (7), that the effect of the omission of the Court to bring on the record the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor who has died after attachment and before sale amounts to irregularity and does not necessarily invalidate the sale, although upon appropriate proceedings taken the sale may be set aside. This view is in accord with that taken by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Malkarjun v. Narhari (8). Their Lordships point out that there can be no question that the omission to serve notice on the legal representatives is a serious irregularity sufficient by itself to entitle the Plaintiffs to vacate the sale. But there may be defences to such a proceeding, and justice cannot be done unless those defences are examined by legal methods. Their Lordships point out in a subsequent passage that if the sale is a reality at all, it is a reality defensible only in the way pointed out by law; and the case must fall either within sec. 311 of the Code of 1882 or within art. 12 (a) of the Limitation Act of 1877, or within both; so that, in any way, there exists a bar by one year's delay. In the case before us, therefore, the sale must be taken to be a voidable sale which could have been avoided by the persons affected, either by a proceeding under sec. 311 of the Code of 1882 or by a suit instituted within the period of one year from the date of sale. No such proceeding has been taken and the time within which appropriate proceedings might have been taken has elapsed. Consequently it is not open to the Defendants to impeach the validity of the sale by way of defence and as we have already explained, it is not open to them to ignore the sale. This is in accord with the principle explained in the case Ramsona v. Somamala (9). The third ground accordingly fails.

In so far as the fourth ground is concerned, we notice that the Court of first instance proceeded on the apprehension that sec. 310A of the Code of 1882 is applicable to a sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act. It has not been disputed before us that sec. 310A is not applicable; its operation is expressly excluded by sub-sec. 2 of sec. 19. It was consequently open to the judgment-debtors or their representatives to proceed under sec. 21. Under that section, they are bound to deposit, not merely the amounts stated in certificate as mentioned in cl. (a) and the penalty as mentioned in cl. (b), but also the outstanding charges due to Government as mentioned in cl. (c).

As far as we can gather, the judgment-debtors failed to deposit the amount mentioned in cl. (d). But even if it be assumed for argument that they tendered the full amount contemplated by sec. 21 and that their offer was improperly rejected by the Collector, his order might have been revised by the superior Revenue authorities, or possibly the party prejudiced by the alleged illegal order of the Collector might have obtained his remedy by way of a regular suit, appropriately framed and instituted in the Civil Court. But it is not necessary to decide what steps might have been taken to set right the erroneous order of the Collector. It is sufficient to say that no such steps were taken and it is not open to the representatives of the judgment-debtor now to urge that the sale was a nullity, not at any rate as against the Plaintiffs who are apparently bonâ fide purchaser for value from the purchaser at the sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The fourth ground cannot consequently be supported.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2469 OF 1911.

CHAPMAN, J.
NEWBOULD, J.
1913.
8, April.

UMACHARAN CHATTERJEE, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
HERON MOYEE DEBI, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 30, Sch. I, Art. 11—Period of limitation altered by implication—Sec. 30, if applies—Claim petition dismissed for default—Regular suit if must be brought within a year—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs 278, 281.

The operation of sec. 30 of the Limitation Act is not limited to cases in which the period of limitation has been expressly altered. It applies also to a case where the period of limitation has been altered as the result of the alteration of the discription of the suit.

Art. 11 of the Limitation Act does not apply where a claim preferred under sec. 278 of Act XIV of 1882 was "dismissed for absence," the order of dismissal not being an order passed under sec. 281 of that Act but under those sections of the Code which enabled a Court to dismiss a miscellaneous case for default.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 4th of September 1911 against the decree of Babu Satya Charan Ganguly, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpore, dated the 14th of July 1911, confirming the decree of Babu Pasupati Bose, Munsif, 1st Court at Madaripore, dated the 31st of May 1910.

The Plaintiff sued to get khas possession of the disputed land on establishment of her jamai right and alleged that the land formed the raiyati holding of Ajimddi and Kalu Mridha from whom Plaintiff purchased the land in Augrahan 1308 for Rs. 40 by a registered kobala and got herself recognised by the landlords, that the Plaintiff's vendors then became Plaintiff's under-raiyats in respect of the land and that their heirs (subsequently) gave up the land in Augrahan 1314 and that the Defendan's dispossessed the Plaintiff in Pous 1314.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 pleaded limitation and alleged that Plaintiff's kobala was collusive and without consideration, that Plaintiff should have sued within one year of the time when her claim in a proceeding in execution was rejected, that raiyati holdings were not transferable and that Plaintiff's kobala was got up to defraud Kalu's creditors of whom Defendant's father was one, that Defendant's father purchased the land at auction and that the Defendants took possession of the land on the strength of their sale certificate.

The first Court found for the Plaintiff and decreed the suit. That decree was affirmed on Appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

Hence this second Appeal.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, Babu Prokash Chandra Majumdar for the Appellant.

Babus Gunada Charan Sen and Bimal Chandra Das Gupta for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The first ground taken in Appeal is the ground of limitation. It appears that the Plaintiff instituted a case under sec. 278 of the old Code of Civil Procedure on the 24th January 1902 preferring a claim to the property in dispute. On the 8th February 1902 the case under sec. 278 was "dismissed for" "absence". The present suit was filed on the 4th June 1909. It is contended that article 11 of the Limitation Act applies and that Plaintiff's suit is barred, inasmuch as it was not instituted within one year of the date of the order passed under sec. 281 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are of opinion that the order "dismissed for absence" was an order passed not under sec. 281, C. P. C., but under the secs. of the Code which enabled the Court to dismiss a miscellaneous case for default. We are confirmed in this view by the Ruling of this Court in the case reported in Sarat Chandra v. Tarini Prasad (1), which settled that Art. 11 of the Limitation Act applies only in respect to orders passed after enquiry. It is true that that case related to proceedings under sec. 335 of the Code. We are unable to distinguish proceedings instituted under sec. 278 and cases under sec. 335 of the Code in this connection. The wording of Art. 11 has been altered in the new Limitation Act of 1908. The result of the alteration of the wording may be an alteration of the law in this matter. But even if we were to hold that the law has been altered we are of opinion that sec. 30 of the new Act is sufficient to save the Plaintiff's suit. We are not prepared to limit the operation of sec. 30 to cases in which the period of limitation has been expressly altered. We are of opinion that the section applies also to a case where the period of limitation has been altered as the result of an alteration of the description of the suit. We are therefore of opinion that the suit was not barred by limitation.

It was then contended that the lower Court should have held that the conveyance to the Plaintiff was vitiated by fraud that is, that it was a conveyance for the purpose of defrauding the creditors. The learned Subordinate Judge went into this question in detail and came to the finding that fraud had not been proved and we are not satisfied that the case of fraud was so strong as to justify our interference with that finding which is a finding of fact.

The next ground taken in appeal is that the plaintiff having purchased an occupancy holding was not rightly held to have obtained any right by her purchase in the absence of proof that the holding was transferable. But the Munsiff had held that the transfer to the Plaintiff had been recognised by the Plaintiff's landlord, and this finding has not been upset by the learned Subordinate Judge.

Reliance in the last resort is placed upon a sentence in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that what the defendant's father purchased must have been a Korfa right, which was an under-raiyati right. This is said to be a finding that there was a valid purchase of an under-raiyati right. This is not the meaning we attach to this sentence which is merely an incidental sentence at the end of the judgment. It was not the Defendant's case that they had acquired an under-raiyati right ; and if it was the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, it was a finding which could not be supported in the absence of evidence that under-raiyatis are transferable.

The contentions in appeal fail and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

ORDER No. 6638 OF 1913.

CARNDUFF, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1913, Heard, 5, December. Judgment, 11, December.	BARHAMDEO SINGH, Defendant No. 11, and others, Petitioners, v. HARMANOGE SINGH, Plaintiff and another, Defendant No. 1, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 151, 152—Decree in apparent conformity with judgment—True intention of Court as to costs awarded to successful party, whether against one or more Defendant, as gathered from whole judgment, if may be given effect to, by way of amendment—Review application, if only remedy.

Where one only of several Defendants contested the suit which was decreed in favour of the Plaintiffs and from the judgment as a whole, it appeared that the Court intended to make Defendant No. 1 alone liable for the costs and not the other Defendants, but in concluding its judgment it said: "the suit be decreed with costs:"

Held—That this portion of the judgment was elliptical and ambiguous, and the true intention of the Court was to be gathered from the judgment as a whole, and the decree of the Court which following the concluding portion of the judgment awarded costs against all the Defendants was not really in accord with the true intention of the Court.

That the defect in the decree could be amended under either sec. 151 or sec. 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, and an application for review of judgment was not the only remedy of the other Defendants.

BRIJ RATAN v. JAY NARAIN (1), IN RE SWIRE (2) referred to.

Such an amendment could be made even after an appeal had been lodged from the decree.

E. v. E. (3) followed.

This was an application made on the 4th of August 1913 for the amendment of a decree made by this Court in appeal from Original Decree No. 110 of 1909, disposed of on the 19th of March 1913.

The judgment in that appeal, which was passed by Harington and Carnduff, JJ., has been reported in 17 C. W. N. 782.

Defendants Nos. 9, 11 and 12, who did not appear in the appeal, applied to the Court for amendment of the decree passed upon the basis of the said judgment, and which purported to make all the Defendants equally liable to pay the Plaintiff's costs. They contended that the obvious intention of the judgment read as a whole was to make the contesting Defendant No. 1 alone liable for costs and that the decree should be amended accordingly.

Babu Ganesh Dutt Singh for the Petitioners.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CARNDUFF, J.—This is an application for the amendment of a decree, which has, it is said, erroneously and inadvertently made the applicants liable for the costs of certain litigation.

The Plaintiff sued for the recovery of land occupied by one Ram Gopal Acharia, as mohanth under a deed of endowment executed by a Hindu lady. Ram Gopal Acharia was made the first and principal Defendant; but the deed associated with him a number of other persons in the management of the endowment, and these the Plaintiff added as Defendants Nos. 2 to 14. In the trial Court the suit was contested by Ram Gopal Acharia alone. The Plaintiff obtained a partial decree. He then appealed to this Court, and before us the contest was again solely between him and the first Defendant. In our judgment Mr. Justice Harington, who has since left the Bench, and I ordered that "the appeal should be allowed and the suit decreed with costs." The decree subsequently prepared in the Court's office and, let me say at once, signed by both of us, has given costs against all the Defendants, and the present applicants, who were named as Defendants Nos. 9, 11 and 12 now submit that as it cannot have been really intended to saddle them with costs, it should be amended so as to relieve them of that liability.

The applicants were nominated in the deed as panchs authorised to supervise the management of the endowment. They filed written statements protesting against their inclusion in the category of Defendants and disclaiming not only all interest in, and concern with, the endowment, but also all knowledge of their nomination in connection with it. They had never acted as panches nor had they ever been asked to do so. The judgment shows that Mr. Justice Harington and I were to a certain extent influenced by these disclaimers in coming to the conclusion that the endowment was of an illusory character; and, had these Defendants entered appearance, they would certainly have been allowed their costs, unless indeed, it would have been possible to disallow them on the ground that they had been unnecessarily incurred. In these circumstances, it cannot be contended--and Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter does not contend—that it could have been our intention to make them responsible for the costs: but what the learned Vakil does contend is that the decree, in fact, agrees with the judgment, as required by Or. XX, r. 6 of the present Code of Civil Procedure, that the former cannot, therefore be amended, as suggested, and that the only remedy, which the applicants had but have lost through limitation, was for a review of the latter.

No doubt, the decree is not inconsistent with the order in the judgment as to costs, and in this way it may at first sight be said to agree therewith. But the order is elliptical, and, if the judgment as a whole be referred to, it becomes manifest that the order cannot have been meant to affect the applicants. The result is that the decree is not really in accord with the intention of the Court, and that Mr. Justice Harington and I can have passed it only through inadvertence. As pointed out in Brij Ratan v. Jay Narain (1) and In re Swire (2), there cited, a Court has an inherent power to amend or vary a perfected order when it finds that it does not correctly state what it actually decided, and apart from this inherent power to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice, which is expressly recognised by sec. 151 of the Code, sec. 152 provides that errors arising in a decree from any accidental slip or omission may be corrected by the Court either suo motu or on application. I hold, therefore, that it is open to us to amend this decree.

There is a further contention that this Court is functus officio, an appeal to the Privy Council having been lodged: but sec. 152 expressly contemplates amendment "at any time," and E. v. E. (3) is a precedent for the amendment of a decree under appeal. This contention, therefore, must I think also fail.

But the success of the applicants at once raises the further question whether the decree for costs should not now be confined by us, acting ex proprio motu, as regards the added Defendants other than the applicants, to the first Defendant alone. The consideration of the whole matter was, therefore, adjourned in order to enable Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter to argue this point, and that he has now done. The learned Vakil admits that all the other Defendants except Nos. 2 and 13, are in practically the same position as the applicants. He also admits that the 8th Defendant, who was impleaded because he was at the moment managing the Devria Indigo Concern and the Manager of that Concern had been nominated by the deed, ex officio so to speak, as one of the panches, is in a much stronger position both by reason of the representative character he was required to assume, and in view of the fact that he has applied in time for a review of judgment. But Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter seeks, as I have indicated, to differentiate the cases of Defendants Nos. 2 and 13, one of whom was nominated by the deed as a pujari of the endowment and the other as a panch. Both filed written statements protesting against their inclusion as Defendants and declaring that they had had nothing to do with the endowment and were not interested in it: but, at the same time, they refused to admit that the deed was invalid, and, indeed, asserted that it was a valid deed of endowment. To this extent, therefore, they may be said to have resisted the Plaintiffs in the first instance, but they did nothing more than file written statements and no complaint of any interference, much less of any tortious act, on their part has been made against them in the pleadings or in the evidence. There is no doubt this slight difference between them and the others, but Mr. Justice Harington and I certainly did not discriminate between the absent Defendants. When we directed that the suit should be "decreed with costs" we can have contemplated only one of two things—costs against all the Defendants or costs against the solitary Defendant who was before us and present to our minds. No third intention can possibly be extracted from the elliptical words we used: but, as I have shown, we cannot have meant to saddle the applicants with the costs and a fortiori we cannot have meant to render the present Manager of the Dervia Indigo Concern liable. Therefore, we did not intend to saddle all the Defendants with costs. And, therefore, we must have meant to saddle only the first Defendant with the liability. As Mr. Justice Harington has gone I must here speak for myself: and I have no hesitation in saying that as a matter of fact, it was the first Defendant alone that I had in mind, and, that I had no idea of rendering anybody except Ram Gopal Acharia liable for the costs of the litigation. That being so, it seems to me to be our clear duty, now that the matter has come to our notice, to amend the decree by confining the order to the first Defendant Ram Gopal Acharia and I think that, if we were to shirk that duty, we should be causing needless anxiety, useless trouble and the accumulation of unnecessary costs.

In the result, I would allow this application and going further I would amend the decree in favour not only of the applicants but of all the Defendants Nos. 2 to 14, making no order as to the costs of the present hearing.

RICHARDSON, J.—I was not a party to the judgment and decree out of which the question before us has arisen and am not in a position, therefore, to speak from personal knowledge as to what was intended or not intended. Upon the materials placed before me, however, it seems to me that the question really comes to this, whether the decree as drawn up correctly represents the judgment according to its true intent.

The language of the judgment in regard to costs is ambiguous, the person or persons against whom costs are given not being specified. The difficulty has been caused by the ambiguity and can only be solved by ascertaining what the judgment means. As to that there can be little doubt. Regard being had to the pleadings and the course which the litigation took and the terms of the judgment as a whole it seems impossible to suppose that the learned Judges intended to give costs against any of the Defendants Respondents except the one who actually came forward to contest the case in the Courts. I am fortified in that view by what has been said by Carnduff, J, who as one of the Judges who heard the appeal can speak with authority on the point.

The result then is that an error has been committed in the Court's offices in drawing up the decree and the error is one which, as it seems to me, it is open to this Court to rectify either under sec. 152 of the Civil Procedure Code or under its inherent powers. It is not necessary to review the judgment which, regard being had to the provisions of Or. XLVII, r. 5, I am not entitled to do. All that we do, as I understand the matter, is to bring the decree into accordance with what the Judges really intended, the judgment being left intact. Under Or. XX, r. 6, the decree is to agree with the judgment and it is to state "the amount of costs incurred in the suit, and by whom or out of what property and in what proportions such costs are to be paid." All we are doing is to apply these provisions to the decree before us.

I agree in the order proposed.

Application allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 254 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1914,
Heard, 17 and 18, February.
Judgment, 9, March.

REAJUDDIN BASUNIA and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
JIBAN MOHAN RAY, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 9, rr. 6, 13, Or. 17, rr. 2 and 3—Failure of Defendant to appear in the course of the hearing after Plaintiff has closed—Court if may proceed to pass judgment on the materials before it—Application to set aside judgment as made ex parte—"Appearance"—"Default".

Where in the course of the hearing of a suit, the Plaintiffs having closed their case the defence began and the cross-examination of one of its witnesses not having been finished at the end of a day, it stood adjourned to the next day when neither the Defendant nor his witnesses nor his pleader appeared, and the Court treating the defence case as closed, heard Plaintiff's arguments and delivered judgment:

Held.—That the mere fact that the Court had materials before it upon which it could pronounce judgment was not enough to bring the case under r. 3 of Or. 17, as the other condition, viz., that the adjournment must have been at the instance of a party, was not fulfilled.

That the case fell under r. 2 of Or. 17, and the Court must be taken to have proceeded to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed by Or. 9, so that an application to set aside the order under Or. 9, r. 13 should have been entertained.

The provisions of Or. 9 by themselves do not apply to a case in which the Defendant has already appeared in answer to the summons but has failed to appear at an adjourned hearing of the suit. On such a case Or. 17 applies, r. 2 applying to a hearing adjourned by the Court, r. 3 to a hearing adjourned at the instance of a party, in which last case, if the party fails to appear on the adjourned date and there are sufficient materials on the record to enable the Court to proceed to judgment the Court may dispose of the case under that Rule. Even in such a case if there are not sufficient materials on the record the proper procedure to follow would be that laid down in r. 2.

MARIANNISSA v. RAMKALPA (2) referred to.

The test of a Defendant's appearance in obedience to a summons for the purpose of r. 6, Or. 9 is, as indicated in the form of the summons in App. B to Sch. I of the Code, whether the Defendant has appeared in person or by pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit or who is accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions.

In the present case, as the pleader's being furnished with due instruction could not be doubted, there was no non-appearance within r. 6, Or. 9.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 4th of June 1913 against the order of Babu Chandra Kumar Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Rangpur, dated the 17th of May 1913.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus D. N. Bagchi and S. K. Sinha for the Appellant.

Babus D. N. Chuckerbutty and Naresh Chundra Sen Gupta for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Rangpur rejecting an application to set aside a decree said to have been passed ex parte. The application was made under Or. 9, r. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree sought to be set aside was passed under these circumstances. On the day the hearing of the case commenced both parties appeared. The case then proceeded from day to day. The Plaintiff in the course of 9 days examined 14 witnesses, who were cross-examined by the Defendants' pleader, and then closed his case. The Defence pleader then began his case and examined one of the Defendants whose cross-examination not having been finished on the third day of his examination, the case stood adjourned to the next day when neither he, the witness nor the pleader of the defence appeared. The Subordinate Judge consequently noted the case for the defence as closed and proceeded to hear the argument of the pleader for the Plaintiff. There was no argument for the Defendants and the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment decreeing the suit in Plaintiff's favour.

The Defendants made the application out of which this Appeal has arrisen for setting aside the decree alleging that it had been passed ex parte., The Subordinate Judge relying on the case Kader Khan v. Juggeshur Prasad (1) held that he had no power to set aside the decree under r. 13 of Or. 9 and that the Defendants remedy lay in a review or an appeal.

In this Appeal it has been argued for the Appellant that the decree was passed ex parte. The expression ex parte has not been defined anywhere in the Code nor does it appear to have been the subject of a judicial decision for its definition. Its accepted meaning however according to Wharton's Law Lexicon seems to be "a proceeding by one party in the absence of he other." We may remark here that this accepted meaning does not help us in this case one way or the other. R. 6 of Or. 9 lays down that where the Plaintiff appears and the Defendant does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing then if it is proved that the summons was duly served the Court may proceed ex parte. For correctly applying this Rule it is important to consider what constitutes "appearance" of the Defendant. The nature of the Defendant's appearance in obedience to the summons is best explained by the language of the form, prescribed in the first shedule, App. B, for summons to a Defendant. That form directs the Defendant to appear in person or by pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit or who shall be accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions. The Defendant's failure to appear in either of the ways specified would lead to the determination of the suit in his absence. The test of a Defendants "appearance" is whether such of the requirements of the summons as relate to appearance have or have not been fulfilled. In the present case the Defendants appeared by their pleader whose being furnished with due instruction cannot be doubted as he conducted the case for the defence up to the stage when he failed to attend the hearing of the case. Thus it cannot be said that the Subordinate Judge proceeded under r. 6 of Or. 9.

The provisions of Or. 9 by themselves do not apply to a case in which the Defendant has already appeared in answer to the summons but has failed to appear at an adjourned hearing of the suit. For such a case the procedure is laid down in Or. 17 which deals with adjournments. R. 2 of that Order lays down that "where on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned the parties or any of them fail to appear the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Or. 9 or make such other Order as it thinks fit;" while r. 3 of the same Order lays down that "where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence or to cause the attendance of his witness or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith."

The distinction between the two Rules is that the former Rule applies to hearing adjourned at the instance of the Court while the latter applies to hearings adjourned at the instance of a party to whom time has been allowed to do some act to further the progress of the suit but who has defaulted. A further distinction between the two rules has been pointed out in the case Mariannissa v. Ram- kalpa (2), that in a case where there are no materials on the record the proper procedure to follow would be that laid down in r. 2 (s. 157 of the former Code) but if there are materials on the record the Courts ought to proceed under r. 3 (sec. 158 of the former Court). Thus to apply the procedure laid down in rule 3 to a case there must be the presence of both the elements viz., (1) the adjourment must have been at the instance of a party and (2) there must be materials on the record for the Court to proceed to decide the suit. The presence of one without the other does not justify the application of r. 3.

The question in this appeal is whether the procedure of the Subordinate Judge on the default of the Defendan's was under r. 2 or r. 3 of Or. 17. The hearing of the case was proceeding from day to day and the case stood over for the next day as the cross-examination of the witness had not been finished. The adjournment therefore was not at the instance of a party. In the circumstances we are of the opinion that on the default of the Defendants the Subordinate Judge proceded under r. 2 to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Or. 9. That being our view we think, on the authority of the Full Bench decision in the case of Janardan v. Ramdhone (3), that the Appellant's application under r. 13, Or. 9 should have been entertained. The order of the lower Court is set aside.

The Appeal is decreed. The Subordinate Judge will now proceed to consider if the Appellant can make out sufficient cause for the decree to be set aside. We assess hearing fee 4 gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 188 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Heard, 29 and 30, April.
Judgment, 30, April.

PANKHABATI CHAUDHURANI, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
NANI LAL SINGH, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 69—"Interest in the payment," meaning of—Decree against Hindu widow and sale of husband's estate—Sale set aside by reversionary heir by deposit under sec. 310A Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882)—Suit to recover deposit from widow—Payment, if voluntary, if decree in law appears to bind widow personally.

Where by a deposit duly made under sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 the reversionary heir expectant upon the death of a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate as his heiress, had a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent of properties other than the defaulting tenure set aside, and then sued the widow for recovery of the amount deposited :

Held—That as the decree-holder professed to sell the entire interest in the properties sold and the auction purchaser also claimed to have acquired the entire interest, the reversionary heir was "interested in the payment" of the decretal amount which the widow "was bound by law to pay"—within the meaning of sec. 69 of the Contract Act.

Until the sale is confirmed, the judgment-debt remains unsatisfied, and it is in satisfaction of the judgment-debt that the payment under sec. 310A (excluding the portion which represents damages payable to the execution purchaser) is made.

The question whether in point of law the reversionary interest was or was not touched by the sale, being a matter for serious controversy, the payment could not be viewed as a voluntary payment.

The words "interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay" may include the apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience and not merely the actual detriment capable of assessment in money. Sec. 69 thus lays down a more comprehensive rule than is supported by English authority.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 3rd of February 1911 from a decision of S. S. Skinner, Esq., District Judge, Purneah, dated the 28th of June 1910, affirming that of Babu Nagendra Nath Dhar, Subordinate Judge, Purneah, dated the 20th of December 1909.

The fact of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Dwarkanath Chackrabartty and Jogendra Nath Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Babus Bepin Behary Ghose and Lalit Mohun Ghose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the Defendant in a suit for recovery of money. The circumstances under which this litigation was commenced are not in controversy. The Appellant is in possession of the estate left by her husband Mathur Lal Singh. One Ghanasyam Misser obtained a decree against her for recovery of arrears of rent of a tenure and in execution of that decree proceeded to sell a property other than the tenure in default. The sale took place on the 5th November 1908 and the property passed into the hands of a stranger, to the proceedings. On the 5th December following, the Plaintiff made an application under sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 for leave to deposit the amount requisite for the cancellation of the sale. He alleged that he was the reversionary heir to the husband of the Appellant and that he was entitled to have the sale set aside for the preservation of his reversionary interest. This application was contested, but was allowed on the 22nd February 1909 by the Subordinate Judge. On appeal to the District Judge the order was confirmed on the 12th May 1909. The sum required was deposited under sec. 310A and the sale was set aside. On the 23rd June 1909, the Plaintiff commenced this suit to recover from the Defendant the money paid by him. The Courts below have decreed the suit. On the present appeal the decree of the District Judge has been challenged on the ground that the payment was voluntary and that the sum paid by the Plaintiff was not lawfully payable by the Defendant. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention.

The learned Vakil for the Appellant has argued that the payment was voluntary, because the effect of the sale would have been to leave untouched the reversionary interest of the Plaintiff. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhukoon (1), Kristo Gobind v. Hem Chunder (2), Brojolal v. Jiban Krishna (3), confirmed on appeal by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jiban Krishna v. Brojolal (4) and Bireshwar v. Kamal Kumar (5). It has been contended in substance that as the sale had been held in execution of a money decree against a Hindu widow, her limited interest alone had passed to the purchaser and that the Plaintiff was not called upon to protect his reversionary interest which was really not in jeopardy. It is not necessary for our present purpose to determine what precise interest passed at the sale. It is sufficient for us to hold that the question of the true effect of the sale was a matter for serious controversy. The Decree-holder had professed to sell the entire interest in the estate; the auction purchaser also claimed to have acquired such interest. It was in this view alone that the Plaintiff could be permitted to apply for reversal of the sale under sec. 310A of the Code of 1882. That section provides for an application by a person whose immoveable property has been sold under Chap. XIX of the Code of 1882. It was open to the decree-holder, the auction purchaser and the judgment-debtor at the time to oppose the application on the ground that all that had passed at the sale was the limited interest of the widow, that the immoveable property of the then applicant had not been sold, and, that, consequently, he was not competent to make the application. On the other hand, the reversioner asserted that the entire interest in the property had been sold and he was allowed to have the sale set aside on that footing. Whether, if he had not got the sale reversed, his interest would, as a matter of law, have been affected is a question which does not call for our decision on the present occasion. The effect of a sale of this description depends upon two factors, which involve matters of fact as well as law, namely, first, the nature of the debt satisfied by the sale; and secondly, the scope of the execution proceedings. If under these circumstances a reversionary heir makes a payment under sec. 310A of the Code of 1882, and obtains a reversal of the sale, there can be no room for serious controversy that the case does not fall within the rule enunciated in Ramtahal v. Biseswar (6), but that he makes such deposit as a person interested in the payment of money which the judgment-debtor was bound by law to pay. There is no foundation also for the contention of the Appellant that a payment of this description must be deemed a voluntary payment, unless and until it is established that the sale would have actually prejudiced the position of the person who pays the money. This argument is opposed to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Fatima Khatoon v. Mohammad Jan (7), Dooli Chand v. Ram Kishen Singh (8), Dakshina Mohun Roy Chaudhuri v. Saroda Mohun Roy Chaudhuri (9) and Kanhaya Lal v. The National Bank of India (10). The same view is supported by a long series of decisions of this Court amongst which may be mentioned Bindu Bashini v. Harendra Lal (11), Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana (12), Nabin Krishna v. Monmohun (13), Smith v. Dinonath (14), Radha Madhab v. Sastiram (15), Bama Sundari v. Adhar Chandra (16), Farbhu Narain v. Beni

Singh (17), Mohendra v. Bhuban (18) and Jognarain v. Badridas (19). As was pointed by Sir John Stanley, C. J., in the case of Tulsa Kunwar v. Jogeshwar Prosad (20), the terms of sec. 69 of the Indian Contract Act lay down a more comprehensive rule than is supported by any English authority. The words "interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay" may include the apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience and not merely the actual detriment capable of assessment in money (c. f. Valpy v. Manley (21). Reliance, however, has been strongly placed upon the cases of Bepin Behary Sarnakar v. Kalidas Chatterjee (22) and Baikuntha Nath Dey v. Udoychand Maiti (23) as authorities in support of the contrary view. In our opinion, the cases mentioned are plainly distinguishable. In these cases the person who made the payment had no interest at all in making the payment. By no conceivable method of reasoning whether upon the facts of the case or of the law applicable thereto, could it be maintained for a moment that the sale would have affected the position of the person who made the payment. A payment made under these circumstances might rightly be held to have been made by a person who has no interest in the payment of money. Nor do we feel pressed by the decision in Yogambal v. Naina Pillai (24) which has been already doubted in the cases of Dorilal v. Pattiram (25) and Jognarain v. Badri Das (26). We must hold accordingly that, in the case before us, the Plaintiff was interested in the payment of the money which he did actually pay. The only other question which requires consideration is, whether the Defendant was bound by law to pay this money. It has been argued before us that as the payment was made after the sale had actually taken place, the Defendant at that stage was no longer bound by law to pay the money. This contention is ingenious but manifestly unsound. The sale had not then been confirmed and consequently the debt had not been satisfied, indeed, it is conceivable that execution might be taken again for recovery of the judgment-debt if the sale was not confirmed on account of irregularity or any other valid reason. Besides it is clear that when payment is made under sec. 310A, the payment is made in satisfaction of the judgment-debt. Mohendra v. Bhuban (18), Jognarain v. Badridas (19). This reason, however, does not apply to that portion of the sum deposited which represents the damage payable to the execution purchaser. From this stand point it was suggested in the case of Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana (12) that a person in the position of the Plaintiff might not be able to recover that portion of the deposit. The propriety of this view has not been contested on behalf of the Respondent.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed in part, and the decree of the Court below modified. The Plaintiff will have a decree for Rs. 1,825 with interest and costs in

RULES NOS 110 TO 117 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1914,
Heard, 10 and 13, February.
Judgment, 20, February.

UMA CHARAN MONDOL, Appellant, Petitioner,
v.
MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY Co., LD., Respondents. Opposite Party.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI B. C. of 1908), sec. 85—Settlement officer, proceeding for settlement of fair rent in the course of preparation of record of rights—High Court's power of superintendence over—Appeal to Commissioner—Superintendence of Board of Revenue—High Courts Act (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104), sec. 15.

Although for the purposes of the application of the power of superintendence of the High Court under sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, it is not necessary that an appeal should lie to the High Court in the very proceeding in which the power of superintendence is invoked, where, by statute, superintendence over a Revenue officer in a particular matter is vested in the Board of Revenue, it would be anomalous to hold that the Revenue officer should be deemed even for the purposes of that particular proceeding a Court subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court and so subject to its powers of superintendence.

A proceeding in the court of a Settlement Officer of Chota Nagpur under sec. 85 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rent is not subject to the superintendence of the High Court under sec. 15 of the High Courts Act, as appeals from the orders of the Settlement Officer lie under statutory rules to the Commissioner, an officer not shown to be subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court.

These were Rules granted on the 24th of January 1913, calling on the Opposite Party to show cause why pending the hearing of Second Appeal Nos. 603 of 1911 in the High Court, further proceedings in the Court of the Settlement Officer of Purulia should not be stayed.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Khettra Mohan Sen for the Petitioner.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule raises a question of first impression as to the jurisdiction of this Court to exercise the power of superintendence it possesses under sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act 1861, in relation to a proceeding for settlement of fair rents before a Revenue Officer under sec. 85 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act 1908. The circumstances under which the question has been raised for decision may be briefly narrated.

The Opposite Party commenced a suit for recovery of possession of lands in the occupation of the Petitioners as under-tenure-holders on the allegation that they were purchasers of the superior tenure at a sale for arrears of rent, and as such were entitled to avoid all under-tenures granted after the creation of the tenure. The District Judge has held that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to avoid the under-tenures, but he has given them a declaration that they are entitled to enhance the rent pay able. The Defendants have appealed to this Court against the decree of the District Judge, and the Plaintiffs Respondents have preferred a cross-appeal. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court, the Plaintiffs have instituted proceedings in the Court of the Settlement Officer of Chota Nagpur for settlement of fair rents under sec. 85 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act 1908, and for enhancement of the rent of the under-tenure from Rs. 1-4 a year to Rs. 480 a year. The Defendants have applied to this Court for an order upon the Settlement Officer to stay the trial of the proceedings instituted before him pending the determination of the appeal and cross-appeal preferred to this Court. It is urged on behalf of the Petitioners that if the appeal succeeds, the proceedings for the settlement of fair rents will become nugatory, and that the same result will follow if the cross-appeal succeeds and the Plaintiffs become entitled to a decree for ejectment : in other words, fair rent may have to be assesed only in the contingency of the failure of both the appeal and the cross-appeal. It has been contended under these circumstances that it is obviously desirable that the question of the settlement of fair rents should not be investigated during the pendency of the appeal and the cross-appeal in this Court. This position has not been seriously controverted by the Plaintiffs Opposite Party. But it has been argued on their behalf that this Court has no jurisdiction to issue any direction to the Settlement Officer, in respect of the proceedings under sec. 85.

It is plain that if this Court is competent to give any directions to the Settlement Officer in respect of the proceedings instituted before him, it can do so only in exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it by sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act 1861. This power of Superintendence can be exercised only over Courts which are subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court. The question consequently arises, whether the Court of a Revenue Officer in which a proceeding for settlement of fair rents has been instituted under sec. 85 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act is a Court subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this High Court. Sub-sec. 4 of sec 85 provides that when a settlement of rent is made, an appeal shall lie from such settlement in the prescribed manner and to the prescribed officer. Clause 8 of sub-sec. 2 of sec. 264 authorises the Local Government to make Rules with a view to prescribe the officer to whom and the manner in which appeals shall lie from orders or directions passed by Revenue Officers under sec. 85. On the 18th June 1909, the Local Government framed Rules to the effect that when rent has been settled by an Assistant Settlement Officer, the appeal shall lie to the Settlement Officer to whom the Assistant Settlement Officer is subordinate, and when rent has been settled by a Settlement Officer himself, the appeal shall lie to the Commissioner. It is plain consequently that where, as here, the proceeding for settlement of fair rent is instituted in the Court of a Settlement Officer, that Court is Subordinate to the Commissioner. Our attention has not been drawn to any Statutory provision or rule which makes the Commissioner or the Settlement Officer subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this Court. For the purpose of the application of the power of superintendence vested in this Court under sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, it is not necessary that an appeal should lie to this Court in the very proceeding in which the power of superintendence is invoked : in fact, if the party aggrieved is entitled to relief by way of appeal, it is not necessary for him to invoke the exercise of the power of superintendence. To take one illustration, an appeal to this Court is barred under sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, when the amount or value of the subject-matter of suits of the nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes does not exceed five hundred rupees : in such a case if the suit has been tried by a Court subject to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this Court, the exercise of our power of superintendence may be invoked [Shamadani v. Bhoja Ram (1), Rama Bai v. Trimbak (2)] provided that the case is of such a nature as to require the interference of this Court in the exercise of its extraordinary powers. But where a Court is made subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of a tribunal, different from and in no way subordinate to this Court, it cannot reasonably be held that the Court is subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this High Court. Analogy is furnished by the decision in Darbari Panjara v. Bhoti Roy (3) where it was pointed out that in the Sonthal Perganahs there are two entirely distinct series of Courts, Original and Appellate, and that the distinction is fundamental although the same individual may preside over two different Courts. The cases in which it has been ruled that the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the orders of Collectors and Deputy Collectors under Act X of 1859 are clearly distinguishable. Horro Mohun v. Kedarnath (4), Bhyrub Chunder v. Shyama Soondari (5), Gobind Coomar v. Kisto Coomar (6), Deanutoollah v. Nawab Nazim (7), Gudadhur v. Nundlal (8), Nassir Jan v. Akbur Majumdar (9) Nilmoni Singh v. Taranath (10), Ramanuj Das v. Lakhun Parida (11), Chaitan Patgosi v. Kunja Behari (12). The provisions, it may be pointed out, for appeals under Act X of 1859, are on entirely different lines from those prescribed by the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act 1908. The cases of Madho Prokash v. Murli Manoher (13) and Ramlochan v. Beni Prasad (14) deal respectively with the question of procedure in Revenue Courts, and the procedure applicable to execution of decrees transferred from Revenue Courts to Civil Courts : the principle applicable to those matters does not in any way assist the contention of the Petitioners. Nor does the case of Kartic Chandra v. Gora Chand (15) advance the argument of the Petitioners. That decision is an authority for the proposition that proceedings on applications for enhancement of rent under the provisions of secs. 27 to 30 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act are judicial proceedings before the Deputy Commissioner who is for this purpose a Court subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this High Court. Reliance was placed in support of this view on the circumstance that under sec. 224 an appeal does, under certain circumstances, lie from the judgment of a Deputy Commissioner to the

The Contempt Bill and the Law of Defamation.

The judgment of the Judicial Committee on Arnola's appeal (in the Burma Critic case) against the conviction and sentence on a charge of defamation passed at a trial held before Sir Charles Fox of the Burma Chief Court and a jury (reported at p. 785 of this issue) has an important bearing on the provisions of the proposed Contempt Bill, upon which we made some preliminary remarks some weeks ago. Lord Shaw who delivered the Board's judgment disposed of, first, the claim of special privilege in regard to freedom of comment put forward on behalf of the Press. "The freedom of the Journalist," his Lordship said, "is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject, and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist, but, apart from Statute law, his privilege is no other and no higher." Then his Lordship continued: "Upon the other side it would appear from certain observations of the learned Judge that this false and dangerous doctrine may have been hinted at, that some privilege or protection attaches to the public acts of a Judge which exempts him in regard to these from free and adverse comment. He is not above criticism, his conduct and utterances may demand it. Freedom would be seriously impaired, if the Judicial Tribunals were outside the range of such comments."

Sec. 228A of the proposed Contempt Bill provides :—

"288A. Whoever by words, either spoken or written or by signs or by visible representation or otherwise, brings, or attempts to bring into contempt, or lowers or attempts to lower the authority—

(a) of any Court of Justice, or

(b) of any person empowered by law to record or direct the recording of evidence on oath (when exercising such powers), shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term, which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

Exception.—It is not an offence under the section to comment on the action of any Court of Justice or person referred to in cl. (b), provided that any such comments are in substance true, and made in good faith for the public good.

What we have to consider now is whether this provision will have the effect of placing "Judicial Tribunals" "above criticism" to such an extent as to seriously "impair freedom." As the protection of the proposed section is intended to be thrown not merely on Judicial Tribunals, but on any person empowered to record evidence (and this would include even Sub-Registrars), the mischief that will follow, if the proposed law has this effect, will be incalculably greater.

In calculating the possible effect of the proposed law, it must not be forgotten that the judicial acts of Judges and Magistrates are already protected in a sense in which acts of Executive and Ministerial officers are not, viz., that no Judge or Magistrate can be proceeded against either in a Civil or Criminal Court in respect of acts done by them in good faith, when performing their judicial functions. Such acts may, no doubt, be challenged before an Appellate Court or a Court of Revision by an aggrieved party, but this remedy is obviously inadequate to keep a reasonable check upon the actions of these officers; for Courts of Appeal and Revision have to go by the records and matters relating to the Judge or Magistrate's conduct can only rarely be brought to the notice of the Appellate or Revisional Court. The only effective check on objectionable conduct on the part of Judicial or other officers is newspaper criticism. To place them "outside the range of" such criticism would really be to place Judicial and other officers when acting as such on nearly the same constitutional footing as the Sovereign. One has to appreciate this in order fully to realise the significance of Lord Shaw's observations quoted above.

Nor must one forget the peculiar juncture at which this provision of law is sought to be introduced. The constitution and the personnel of our Courts, both Civil and Criminal, have of late been the subject of searching and to a great extent legitimate criticism. The question in some of its aspects was discussed recently before a Royal Commission. According to many the case for a radical reform of the judicial system in India is overwhelming. The evidence given before the Public Services Commission on the other hand disclosed a virtual unanimity of official opinion in favour of continuing the present system. The question one has seriously to consider is whether the proposed law will not by silencing one of the two opposing views let judgment go in favour of the other by default—whether, in other words, the interests of judicial reform in this country will not seriously suffer by stifling criticism of the existing system which on the admission even of some of its most distinguished members (now retired) stands in need of radical readjustment.

It will no doubt be urged that the object of the proposed sec. 228 A is not to stifle criticism, but to regulate it. It will be argued that because Judicial officers must not be placed above criticism, it does not necessarily follow that all criticism of such officers would therefore be legitimate. The observation of Lord Shaw which we quoted at the outset furnishes perhaps a sufficient answer. The speaker or the writer of libellous matter concerning a Judicial officer—be he a newspaper editor or any other individual—is liable to be proceeded against for libel or defamation. In Arnold's case, although the Magistrate's conduct at the trial was found to be open to severe criticism, the prosecution for defamation nevertheless succeeded, as the writer was found to have transgressed the limits of legitimate criticism as laid down in sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code. There is no ground for supposing that the ordinary law does not sufficiently protect Magistrates and Judges (and other officers empowered by law to record evidence) in the discharge of their public duties. It does not also appear that the libelling of Courts and other persons authorised as aforesaid has reached such dangerous proportions that the ordinary law must be pronounced insufficient to cope with the evil.

But assuming that a case for additional protection for Judges and Magistrates has been made out, how far ought that protection to go, consistently with public interests—consistently, in other words, with that "freedom" which Lord Shaw is so anxious, should not be "impaired." It is true, English law does regard the "scandalising of the Court itself" as a contempt. In the case of the printer of the St. James's. Evening Post (1742, 2 Atk. p. 471 = 26 E. R. 684) Lord Chancellor Hardwicke said "There are different sorts of contempt: One kind of contempt is scandalising the Court itself. There may be also contempt of this Court in abusing parties who are concerned in cases here. There may be also a contempt of this Court in prejudicing mankind against persons before the cause is heard." And he added: "There cannot be anything of greater consequence than to keep the streams of justice clear and pure that parties may proceed with safety both to themselves and their character."

In R. v. Almon (1765, Wilm. 143), Almon was called upon to show cause why writ of attachment should not issue against him "for publishing a pamphlet, containing many libellous passages upon this Court (The King's Bench) and upon the Chief Justice for his conduct both in Court and out of it, and charging the Court and particularly the Chief Justice with having introduced a method of proceeding to deprive the subject of the benefit of the Habeas Corpus Act." In Wilmot, J.'s words, "though the Chief Justice was named and marked out in the passage, yet the whole Court was most manifestly and in express words involved in it." It appears that after arguments were heard the proceedings were dropped. But the Judge's opinion, though never delivered, was published and has been repeatedly referred to in later cases bearing chiefly on the procedure by attachment. The principal plea taken in defence in that case was that the proper procedure was by indictment and not by the summary procedure of attachment. That a libel on the Court or a Judge could be proceeded against by way of indictment for criminal libel was not questioned in the case, and in fact, that was the procedure Almon invited. The reasons given in the judgment were, in consequeuce, wholly directed towards justifying the procedure by attachment.

"The power," said Wilmot, J., "which the Courts in Westminister Hall have of vindicating their own authority is co-eval with their first foundation and institution," though upon a "very careful examination to see if he could find out any vestiges or traces of its introduction," "he could find none." The historical accuracy of this statement of the origin of the jurisdiction has been doubted. But his Lordship continued: "By our Constitution, the King is the foundation of every species of justice which is administered in this kingdom. (12 Coke 115). The King is de jure to distribute justice to all his subjects; and because he cannot do it himself to all persons, he delegates his powers to his Judges who have the custody and guard of the King's oath and sit in the seat of the King 'concerning his justice*.'" "The arraignment of the justice of the Judges," his Lordship proceeds, "is arraigning the King's justice; it is an impeachment of his wisdom and goodness in the choice of his Judges, and excites in the minds of people a general dissatisfaction with all Judicial determination and indisposes their minds to obey them; and whenever men's allegiance to the laws is so fundamentally shaken, it is the most fatal and most dangerous obstruction of justice and, in my opinion, calls out for a more rapid and immediate redress than any other obstruction whatsoever"—"not" his Lordship was, however, modest enough to add, "for the sake of the Judges, as private individuals, but because they are the channels by which King's justice is conveyed to the people."

In defining the "authority" of the Court, the contempt of which was under his Lordship's discussion, his Lordship said: "It is not imperium; it is not the coercive power of the Court; but it was homage and obedience rendered to the Court, from the opinion of the quality of the Judges who compose it, it is the confidence in their wisdom and integrity. . . ." "It is not their own cause, but the cause of the public which they are vindicating at the instance of the public." In another passage, his Lordship avers:" It may perhaps merit a less punishment to libel a single Judge in Court or out of Court than to libel the whole Court, but the quantum of the offence does not vary the mode of prosecuting it" (i.e., by attachment). His Lordship's point of view thus elaborately outlined is admirably summed up towards the end of his judgment in the following words: "The principle upon which attachments issue for libels upon Courts is to keep a blaze of glory around them to deter people from attempting to render them contemptible in the eyes of the public. . . . . A libel upon the Court is a reflection upon the King and telling people that the administration of justice is in weak or corrupt hands, that the fountain of justice itself is tainted and consequently that judgments which stream out of that fountain must be impure and contaminated."

The picture here painted of judicial dignity is certainly not wanting in colour. It is certainly reminiscent of the times when "anything to the scandal of the Government, i.e., written blame, true or false, concerning the King or his family, minister, Judges, Magistrates or officers" was punished as sedition. For a reliable sketch of the law of sedition as understood and applied before and after the Restoration, see Dean's Student's Legal History, pp. 92, 93. We are not in a position to say how far the framers of the Bill are indebted to this judgment for their ideas. If they derived any suggestions from it, they must have overlooked its limited scope—and also the fact that it represents views which are, to put it mildly, very much out of date. R. v. Almon has been repeatedly cited in later cases, and Judges have always professed to treat it with respect, but no Judge, after Wilmot, J., has repeated his extravagant assertion of the identity of the King's Judges with the King himself.

A case came up not very long ago before the Criminal Revisional Bench of the Calcutta High Court in which a Deputy Magistrate at a certain station in Northern Bengal appeared to have drawn up criminal proceedings against a respectable inhabitant (a pleader and the Vice-Chairman of the Local Municipality) for some supposed slight offered to his dignity. The judgment of the Deputy Magistrate in which he repeatedly described himself as the "King's representative" caused no small merriment in Court—and the absurdity of the position taken up by him appeared to be so manifest that the Deputy Legal Remembrancer under instruction from Government withdrew the proceedings. Nevertheless, the Deputy Magistrate was but following, though unconsciously, the precedent laid down in R. v. Almon.

The best commentary, however, on the highly coloured picture drawn by Wilmot, J., is offered by the following passage from Lord Brampton's Reminiscences: "The eccentricities of Judges would form a laughable chapter; some of them are overwhelmed with the importance of their position; none were ever modest enough to perceive their own small individuality amidst their judicial environments; and this thought reminds me of an occurrence at Liverpool Assizes when Huddlestone and Manisty, the two Judges on Circuit, dined as usual with the Lord Mayor. The Queen's health was proposed of course, and Manisty with his innate good breeding stood up to drink it, whereupon his august brother Judge plucked him violently by his sleeve, saying: 'Sit down Manisty, you damned fool! we are the Queen' (p. 193)." But the leaven of democracy had been in operation even on the Judicial Bench, for otherwise Lord Brampton, a successor of Wilmot, J., on the Bench, would hardly have given to the world this incident at the close of a judicial career of great eminence.

In 1784, when the "blaze of glory" theory of judicial dignity (if it ever obtained currency)

*The student of Constitutional Law need hardly be told that this statement really embodies a constitutional fiction. James, I's attempts to dispose of cases himself failed upon the opposition of Coke supported in this instance by the unanimous opinion of the Judges. Blackstone iii 41, Coke. 4th Inst. 73.

may be supposed to have been at its height, in the case of the Dean of St. Asaph, 21 St. Tr. 847, a discussion arose between Erskine who was counsel for the accused and the Judge (Buller, J.,) about recording the word "only" as part of the verdict delivered by a jury. At length Erskine said "I stand here as an advocate for a brother citizen and I desire that the word "only" be recorded, whereupon the Judge said," Sit down, Sir! Remember your duty, or I shall be obliged to proceed in another manner." To this Erskine retorted, "Your Lordship may proceed in whatever manner you think fit. I know my duty as well as your Lordship knows yours. I shall not alter my conduct." The Judge very wisely took no notice of the reply. Half a century later Lord Campbell, himself Lord Chief Justice of England and later on Lord Chancellor, was able to speak of the conduct of Erskine as a "noble stand for the independence of the Bar."

In In re Johnson, 20 Q. B. D. p. 68, at p. 74, Bowen L. J. observed "the law has armed the High Court of Justice with power, and imposed on it the duty of preventing brevi manu and by summary proceedings any attempt to interfere with the administration of justice; it is not on any exaggerated notion of the dignity of individuals that insults to Judges are not allowed. It is on the same ground that insults to witnesses or jurymen are not allowed" (Oswald 10). Witnesses, it must be conceded, are not like the Judges "the channels through whom the King's Justice is conveyed to the public"—and where insults to Judges are placed on the same footing as insults to witnesses, the last shred of the "blaze of glory" doctrine is gone.

R. v. Almon, was cited before the Privy Council at the hearing of an appeal by a barrister and solicitor of St. Vincent (in the Leeward Islands) against an order for committal for contempt by the Acting Chief Justice of the place with reference to certain scandalous remarks concerning himself and the administration of justice in the island generally which appeared in a local newspaper. Their Lordships (Lords Watson, Macnaghten, Morris and Davey, JJ.) held that "contempts of Court may be committed by publication of scandalous matter respecting the Court after adjudication as well as pending a case." But they thought that committals for such contempt had become obsolete in England. They went on to add, however, that in smaller Colonies consisting principally of "coloured population" they may still be necessary in proper cases. They then proceeded to set down the limits of its exercise in the following terms: "The power summarily to commit for contempt of Court is considered necessary for the proper administration of justice. It is not to be used for the vindication of the Judge as a person. He must resort to action for libel or criminal information. Committal for contempt of Court is a weapon to be used sparingly and always with reference to the interests of the administration of justice. Hence when a trial has taken place and the case is over the Judge or jury are given over to criticism."

Later cases no doubt show that committals for contempt have not become obsolete in England. But the soundness of the other observations in that judgment remains unchallenged and the passages from the judgment of Lord Shaw in Arnold's case, quoted above, go to add to their authority. In R. v. Gray, [1900], 2 Q. B. 36, where R. v. Almon, is cited in the judgment, Lord Russell, C. J., described "scandalising the Court" as "any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt or to lower his authority," but added the important qualification that "Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court. The Court ought not to be astute in such cases to criticise adversely what under such circumstances and with such object is published."

These extracts from later judgments clearly show that Wilmot, J's. views were never accepted for practical application in later cases. But however that may be it is obvious that even Wilmot, J. would not have claimed the power of attachment or committal brevi manu on behalf of inferior Courts, and far less on behalf of "any person authorised to record evidence." His references to the "quality of Judges," "their wisdom and integrity" obviously make his remarks applicable to the Judges of the High Court only. Further, even according to him it is not contempt of the individual Judge, but of the King's justice as administered through him that constitutes the gist of the offence. Under the proposed law any act lowering in any way the dignity of even a Sub-Registrar would be a contempt of the King's authority quite as much as libelling a High Court Judge.

The net result of all these pronouncements, including that of Wilmot, J., expressed in plain prose, is this: That the authority of a Judge or a Court is not in itself and for its own sake an object of law's solicitude. The maintenance of that authority is demanded in so far only as the lowering of it in a particular way may affect the due administration of justice, and no further.

So long as this limit is not exceeded the matter between the Judge and his traducer is not one of contempt, but of ordinary law and procedure, available alike to the Judge and any other individual. This will appear more clearly from a consideration of the case to which we now proceed to refer.

In R. v. Hart and White, 30 St. Tr., p. 1113, the two accused named were proceeded against in the year 1808 before Grose, J. by way of information "for certain libels upon the administration of public Justice in England, upon the Hon. Sir Simon Le Blanc, Knight, one of the Judge's of his Majesty's Court of King's Bench and upon the jurors by whom certain persons accused of murder had been acquitted." Grose, J. in his charge to the jury, referred to the libel as consisting in this:—"That the laws and tribunals of the land are represented as having by the conduct of the Judge and jury in the adminis'ration of the laws received a wound which threatened their extinction—Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights are represented as almost abolished or rendered useless and the trial by jury is represented as having been perverted or destroyed and all this is described as the fruit and effect of judicial corruption."

He then proceeded to direct them in these terms: "You are undoubtedly to consider whether it was the intention of the two Defendants to discuss fairly and candidly the grounds of the acquittals to which they referred, or whether it was their intention, without discussing those grounds to malign and vilify the administration of Justice in this country and in reality to cast upon it the severest stigma which could be affixed to it." His Lordship then proceeded to point out that there was "no attempt to discuss the facts as they came out in the evidence on the trial, but wholesale abuse of the administration of the Justice of the country." Further on his Lordship said: "If you should be of opinion that the publication has been proved and that it is libellous, you will then have to determine that which is the great question in the case, viz., whether the publication was with the intention to defame, traduce, vilify and subvert the administration of Justice in the way it has been administered on the occasions to which the libels refer. . . . "If from what you have heard you are satisfied that such in reality was the intention of the Defendants; if you are convinced that their object was to destroy the trial by jury and to defame and disgrace the administration of Justice you will of course say they are guilty. If you can find any fair reasonable ground that these papers were "intended merely as a public discussion whether the men who had been on trial at the Old Bailey and acquitted, were properly acquitted or not, then you will say they are not guilty. . . . . If therefore you believe in reality that it was the intention of these Defendants to libel the learned Judge you will say they are guilty; if you are of opinion that it was their intention to libel the jury, you will say they are guilty. If you beileve it was their intention to libel the administration of the Justice of the country and not to discuss the propriety of the verdicts which have been given, you will also in that case find them guilty. If you think the papers were published with no other view than that of discussing the propriety of these verdicts, you will of course find them not guilty."

This case deserves the most careful consideration of every one interested in seeing that our statute book be not encumbered with laws which are centuries behind time, and, opposed to existing circumstances to the best interests of the country. A libel on the Judge and on the jurors was in this case tried by way of criminal information and a conviction obtained. The same procedure is open in this country when a Judge or Magistrate is defamed, as Arnold's case shows. The case further lays down that "intentionally defaming, traducing, vilifying and seeking to subvert the administration of the justice of the country is criminal libel. The cases previously discussed go to show that such a libel also constitutes contempt punishable by the Superior Courts of Record brevi manu by attachment or committal. But to discuss fairly and candidly the grounds of the verdict or judgment would not according to the Judge's direction in this case, be defamation, nor, necessarily, would it be contempt (R v. Gray, supra).

The law as laid down by Grose, J., would in fact let in all the exceptions to sec. 499 of the Penal Code as grounds of defence to a charge of libel whether against the person of the Judge or Magistrate or jurors. To compare this now with what is laid down in the exception to the proposed sec. 228A, it is clear that that section does not codify for India the law of contempt, in so far as "scandalising the Court" is contempt according to English law. What it proposes to do, in effect, is to repeal the statutory defences to a charge of defamation so far as imputations against the public acts of Judges, Magistrates and other persons empowered to take evidence are concerned—all except Exception 1 to sec. 499 of the Penal Code which re-appears in the exception to the proposed section. This exception was taken from Lord Campbell's Act of 1842 which for the first time admitted the plea of justification to charges of criminal libel (not being seditious libels). It was a plea which that Act made it possible to the accused to take in addition to other pleas which so far as concerns British India, are codified in the other exceptions to sec. 499 of the Penal Code. But the proposed section would allow this plea only and no other. The exception to the proposed section thus makes only comments which are true in substance and made in good faith and also from purely altruistic motives (for public good) exempt from punishment. This obviously is laying down an impossible standard. It will in practice raise Judges and Magistrates (and other persons authorised to record evidence) "above criticism" to quote Lord Shaw's language.

Whilst instituting this comparison one must not overlook what we have already shown viz., that the proposed section makes the lowering by words spoken or written, and even unintentional acts tending to lower the authority of individual Judges or Magistrates or other officers empowered to record evidence a criminal offence triable before the local Magistrate irrespective of its effect on the administration of justice. This has never been the law in England. R. v. Gray no doubt suggests that scandalising the Court includes lowering the authority of a Judge of the Court but a careful examination of the case shows that the Court in that case also was confronted with a libel on the administration of Justice, for the accused Gray had by affidavit admitted that his conduct reflected not only upon the individual Judge but upon the Bench of Judges and the administration of Justice.

Besides, what was stated in that case was only with reference to the summary procedure by attachment or committal, a power which in England is exercisible only by Courts of Record. The ordinary Courts can take cognisance of charges which, though they may amount to contempt, must also be Criminal libels in the sense laid down in Grose J.'s charge to the jury in R. v. Hart and White. It is only the Highest Courts which can be trusted to exercise jurisdiction in contempt with discretion. The Calcutta High Court has no doubt held that it has no jurisdiction to punish contempts of inferior Courts in the Mofussil. If it be this ruling to which exception is taken, why not give power to the High Courts to take cognisance of and try contempts of inferior Courts in the Mofussil and put them on an equal footing in this respect with the King's Bench Division of the High Court in England? The necessity of sanction by the Local Government would really afford no protection, for the law would be there, held in terrorem over legal practitioners, parties and newspaper-men, to stifle free discussion of the merits of the orders and acts of the officers in question, and the trial will be before inferior local Magistrates.

There is another very pertinent observation to be made with reference to the plea of justification which the exception to sec. 228A in a manner allows. What is to happen if a Magistrate's or Judge's legal knowledge and competency for his office be questioned? How can the accused establish the plea except by calling upon the Judge or Magistrate to submit to an examination in law before the trying Magistrate who may, for aught one knows, be a Magistrate of inferior grade and jurisdiction? The section as proposed, if it is not to be omitted altogether, needs thorough recasting in the interest of the officers themselves.

We also feel constrained to refer to the language of sec. 228B which makes every false or misleading report of a judicial proceeding an offence punishable with six months' rigorous imprisonment. Are false and misleading reports of judicial proceedings so very common in this country that they must be constituted into criminal offences irrespective of the existence of what in legal language is called mens rea? Whatever other alterations may or may not be made in the language of the proposed sections, one thing must be made clear that none of the newly proposed rules of law should bring a person within the clutches of criminal law in the absence of proof of mens rea and that in all cases the defence of bona fides, upon the lines laid down in the Exceptions to sec. 499 of the Penal Code, or such of them as are applicable to the nature of the offence contemplated, should be admissible in all such proceedings. To leave the sections as they have been framed would be to import the Continental notion of lese majeste into a portion of H[is] Majesty's Empire in opposition to views expre[ssed] by His Majesty's Judges in England in a series [of] cases some of them arising in the Colonies an[d] Dependencies, the latest of them being a ca[se] from Burma which is a part of British India.

The proposed law if passed without substantia[l] modification will not only affect newspaper criticis[m] to the prejudice of the subject's freedom, it w[ill] also have a most undesirable effect upon th[e] attitude of the Bar towards the Bench in th[e] Mofussil if not also in the Presidency towns. "[An] over-subservient Bar," says Oswald (p. 54), "would be one of the greatest misfortunes that could happen to the administration of Justice in England." The conditions which exist in this count[ry] are not calculated to develop a healthy spirit of independence in the Bar. A passage at arms like that which took place between Erskine and Buller, J., would under the proposed law be a criminal offence punishable with six months' imprisonment or fine or both.

We do not indeed wish to be understood as saying that the authority or the dignity of judicial officers (or any other class of public officers, for that matter) is of no account either to the public or to Government. It is, we think, very desirable that public officials, whe her Judges or not, should carry themselves with dignity and be respected by the public according to their rank and station. But a man's dignity is after all in his own hands. No amount of penal legislation will help to secure respect for a man who individually is unworthy of it. If the object be to secure respect for and deference towards any particular class of officials, that object can be best attained by exercising greater discrimination in their appointment and promotion and by rigorously excluding from its ranks those who are unable to maintain their dignity by the force of their own character and conduct. Malicious and unworthy attacks will no doubt be made occasionally upon even the best of officials, but the ordinary law of defamation and libel is sufficient to cope with such attacks. Those in charge of the Bill will, we hope, seriously weigh all these matters and particularly the passages from Lord Shaw's judgment quoted above in their consideration before deciding to pass it in the shape in which it now stands or in any other at all like it.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Transfer of Property subject to mortgage—Proceedings between prior mortgagee and mortgagor.

SHANKAR VENKATESH KARGUPPI, I. L. R. 38 Bom.

Persons who have taken transfers of property subject to a mortgage cannot be bound by proceedings in a subsequent suit between the prior mortgagee and the mortgagor to which they are never made parties.

Adverse possession.

KRISHNA DIXIT v. BAL DIXIT, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 253.

The land in suit belonged to the family of the Defendants. The members or a member of the Plaintiff's family was an agent leasing the land out and taking its accounting for them to Defendant's family. In 7 their agent on behalf of the Defendant's family leased the land by a registered lease for eighteen years to one N who took possession under the lease and remained in possession until the term of the lease expired or at least up to some time within twelve years of the institution of the suit. In 1893 or 1894 the Plaintiff and his family asserted that they and not the Defendant's family were the owners of the land and thenceforth they kept the rents received from the tenants.

Held—That the title by adverse possession was not made out.

Arbitration award—Setting aside of, by Court.

AISHABAI v. ESSAJI, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 60.

The suit was brought to recover a certain sum on mortgages and other adjusted accounts. The cause was referred to arbitration with the consent of the parties by an order of the Court. The terms of reference contained the following provision—"the said arbitration to proceed on the basis of there having been no adjustments and the adjustments relied upon by the Plaintiff in this suit shall not be taken into consideration by them." The arbitrators having failed to arbitrate, an umpire appointed in the reference took their place. With reference to the question whether a particular debit was proved the Plaintiff tendered in evidence an adjusted account in which the item appeared. In spite of the Defendant's objection the umpire admitted the account. The Court of first instance set aside the award.

Held—It would be bad law and injustice if under the circumstances of the case and having regard to the language of the reference defining the umpire's jurisdiction, the Court were to hold that the award was void and the enquiry before the umpire was all infructuous.

Agreement of sale—Time being of the essence of the contract.

BURJORJIE v. JAMSHED, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 77.

An agreement of sale of land was in the following terms—

"The conveyance of sale of this land is to be prepared and received within two months from this day. And at the time of signing the document of sale Rs.——is to be paid. As to the balance of Rs.—— the same is to be paid on the transfer of the land after the document shall have been registered.

On payment of Rs. by the purchaser to the vendor as mentioned above the document of sale is to be got executed by the vendor. But should I not pay the amount within the fixed period given herein then I shall have no right to Rs.——paid this day to you under this bargain paper as earnest money on account of this sale. And if I prefer any claim the same is null and void. And after this date the vendor of this property has authority in every way to sell the same to another."

Held—That time was of the essence of the contract.

Hindu Law.

MAHABALESHWAR RAM CHANDRA, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 94.

In a family consisting of minors and women it is a matter of practical convenience that the dying adult male should be able to make arrangements for guardianship and management.

A Hindu may by will appoint one widow guardian of all his sons to the exclusion of the natural mother of two of them even though the will should prove invalid so far as it purported to affect the devolution of the property.

Attachment before judgment—Property passing by survivorship.

SUB RAO v. MAHA DEVI, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 105.

The Appellant obtained a money decree against one B Prior to the decree the Appellant had obtained attachment before judgment of the property in suit as being the property of B. Some time after the decree B. died. Admittedly he was in union with the Respondent and the property was joint-family property which on B's death would ordinarily have passed to the Respondent by survivorship.

Held—That the Respondent's title by survivorship was not defeated by the Appellant's attachment before judgment.

THE ALL INDIA DIGEST (CIVIL). 1811—1911. By T. V. Sanjiva Row. Law Printing House. Madras.

The present volume of the above Digest begins with "Preliminary Objection" and brings the subject-matter down to "Ryotwari Tenure." So this compilation may now be said to be well within view of completion. The classification of cases and the order in which they are set out are as we have previously noticed satisfactory, and there can be no question that the completed work will prove of great use to busy practitioners.

MEWS' ANNUAL DIGEST OF ENGLISH CASE LAW. 1913. By John Mews, Bar at Law. London. Sweet & Maxwell, Ld, 3, Chancery Lane. Stevens and Sons, Ld, 119, 120, Chancery Lane.

Mews' Annual Digest in many respects furnishes a model of what a Digest ought to be. The volume under notice is the third annual supplement for the year 1913 containing all the reported decisions of the superior Cours in England, including a selection from the Scottish and Irish Courts as well, with a collection of cases followed, distinguished, explained, commented on, overruled or questioned.

THE INDIAN DECISIONS (New Series). Calcutta: Vol. VII. Madras, Vol. V. Edited by the Lawyers' Companion Office. Trichinopoly and Madras. Published by T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnasawmy Row. Law Printing House Madras. 1914.

The books under notice are verbatim reprints of volumes 14 and 15 of the Calcutta Series and volumes 14-16 of the Madras Series of the Indian Law Reports, respectively. We notice with pleasure that these volumes are marked by the useful features which distinguish these series of neatly got up and yet moderately priced reprints.

THE ALL INDIA CIVIL COURT MANUAL, LOCAL ACTS, BOMBAY. Published by T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnasawmy Row. Law Printing House, Madras. 1914.

The above which forms one of the series noted under the general name of "The All India Civil Court Manual" is a collection of all the important Bombay Acts with the legislative changes up-to-date and very brief notes of the case-law. These compilations do credit to the publishers from the points of view of price as well as of get-up and execution.

FULL BENCH REFERENCE. Before JENKINS, C. J. AND STEPHEN, WOODROFFE, HOLMWOOD, AND D. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1913 OF 1911. THE MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY COMPANY LD., Plaintiffs Appellants v. HRISHIKESH GHOSH AND OTHERS Defendants Respondents. 24th April 1914.

Non occupancy raiyati holding if heritable.

One of the questions in controversy in the case being whether the right of a non-occupancy raiyat in his holding was heritable, the Division Bench before whom the case came up for hearing (Mukerjee, and Beachcroft. JJ.) in view of the conflict of judicial opinion on the point—a conflict which was not settled by the Full Bench Uday Chandra v. Hari Das, 13 C. W. N. 937 referred the appeal for decision to the Full Bench.

Held, by the Full Bench, that when Act X of 1859, Bengal Act VIII of 1869 and the Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1885 were passed, (apart from possible exceptions) a tenancy-at-will had ceased to be the measure of any raiyati right and so all had interests that were capable of descent.

That holdings of raiyats are distinctly recognised as heritable by the Bengal Tenancy Act [secs. (2), 20 (3), 44 Chap. IX, secs. 82, 160.]

That, apart from possible exceptions, the holding of a non-occupancy raiyat is heritable.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Ray, Rajendra Chandra Guha and Sitaram Banerjee for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Chandra Sekhar Banerjee for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

Judicial Commissioner and in certain other circumstances to the High Court. The case before us stands plainly on a wholly different footing. It would in our opinion be anomalous to hold that where, by statute, superintendence over a Revenue Officer is vested, in a particular matter, in the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue, the Revenue Officer should be deemed even for the purposes of that particular proceeding a Court subordinate to the Appellate Jurisdiction of this High Court. In our opinion, sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act 1861 has no application to proceedings for settlement of fair rents instituted before a Revenue Officer under sec. 85 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. In this view the Rule must be discharged with costs, one gold mohur.

The other Rules, it is conceded, will be governed by this judgment, and will consequently be discharged, but there will be no order for costs in those Rules.

Rules discharged.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

LORD SHAW.
LORD SUMNER.
LORD PARMOOR.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,

CHANNING ARNOLD, Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 52, 499, Exc. 9—Defamation—Magistrate, allegation against, of corruption and conspiracy to save an accused under trial, by manipulating procedure—Magistrates' and Judges' public acts if above criticism—Press, if specially privileged in criticising such acts—Limits of legitimate comment—Libel, no plea of justification, yet truth of charges asserted by innuendo, propriety of—Defence of good faith—Matters relevant to the enquiry and proper to be placed before jury—Judge's right to state his own views, without withdrawing case from the jury—Charge to jury—Misdirection—Misdirection when sufficient for interference by Privy Council—Privy Council, practice of, in interfering with criminal trials—Libel published under mistake—Duty of apologising on discovery of mistake —Bail, discretion as to granting.

No privilege attaches to the profession of the Press as distinguished from the members of the public. The freedom of the journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject, and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist; but, apart from statute law, his privilege is no other and no higher.

No privilege or protection attaches to the public acts of a Judge which exempts him, in regard to these, from free and adverse comment.

A, as District Magistrate, having declined to commit one M for trial on a charge of having abducted and committed rape upon a Malay girl of about 11 years of age, the Appellant wrote an article in a newspaper charging A with being engaged with others in a corrupt plot to defeat justice in order to save M, with having bailed him out for a non-bailable offence and with having manœuvred his procedure to that end. M had himself admitted that, being informed that the child was suffering from gonorrhœa, he had taken her to his house and himself had personally examined her—although there was a hospital 8 miles away. A, in declining to commit M, had further stated that in his opinion M's conduct was pure and philanthropic :

Held—That this declaration by the Magistrate with which the enquiry before him concluded, laid the whole trial open to searching and severe observations, and no blame could be attached to these. But it was not open to the Appellant to make against the Magistrate charges of corruption and conspiracy, which were admitted to be untrue, and were grossly libellous, and the Appellant could not justify them in a criminal proceeding for defamation, unless he was able to establish affirmatively that he believed them to be true and that on reasonable grounds, as provided in the ninth exception to sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

That the conduct of M referred to above and of the Magistrate at the enquiry were relevant for a consideration of the question of accused's bonâ fides and were properly submitted to the jury in support of the defence.

That the Judicial Committee was not prepared to say that the granting of bail to M was an improper exercise of the Magistrate's discretion, but in any case it was a difficult and delicate point of law which could not have been viewed as a substantial element weighing with any reasonable writer in justification of his belief in the truth of the libel.

That the fact that every officer, judicial or administrative, except one, had agreed with the conclusion to which the Magistrate had arrived, and that an investigation in the department of a Lieutenant-Governor of great experience had, to the Appellant's knowledge, resulted in exonerating the Magistrate from blame, and the attitude of the Appellant who neither defended the articles as true nor gave any assistance on the subject of what were the actual things upon which he founded his own beliefs and what steps, if any, he took to investigate the truth of the charges before giving them publicity, were also matters for consideration by the jury.

A charge to a jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law, in it these will be the subjects of separate analysis, but in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the jury's province. In the region of fact, the Privy Council will not interfere, unless something gross amounting to a complete misdescription of the whole bearing of the evidence has occurred.

Where, in answer to a charge of defamation, the accused did not plead justification, but nevertheless the truth of the libels continued throughout the trial to be urged by way of repeated innuendo, the Judge was justified in stating his own view of the facts, in order to counteract the improper use which was being made of the procedure, provided he did not withdraw the case on facts from the jury.

When during the trial the accused was apprised from materials placed before the Court that certain serious charges against the complainant were quite without foundation, he should have at once acknowledged his mistake and should not have adhered to the libel.

The power of the Privy Council to review proceedings of a criminal nature, unless such power and authority have in any local area been parted with by Statute, is undoubted. But there are reasons, both consti.

CHANNING ARNOLD v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

tutional and administrative, which make it manifest that this power should not be lightly exercised. Before they will interfere, it must be established demonstrably that justice itself in its very foundation has been subverted, and that it is therefore a matter of grave Imperial concern that by way of an appeal to the King it be restored to its rightful position in that particular part of the Empire.

The authority of DILLET'S case (4) does not justify interference by the Privy Council in a criminal case wherever there has been misdirection, leaving it uncertain whether that misdirection did or did not affect the jury's mind. That would be to convert the Judicial Committee into a Court of Criminal Review or Appeal for the Indian and Colonial Empire.

The practice of the Committee in respect of criminal trials is to this effect: It is not guided by its own doubts of the Appellant's innocence or suspicion of his guilt. It will not interfere with the course of criminal law, unless there has been such an interference with the elementary rights of an accused, as has placed him outside the pale of regular law, or within that pale there has been a violation of the natural principles of justice so demonstrably manifest as to convince their Lordships first, that the result arrived at was opposite to the result which their Lordships would themselves have reached, and, secondly, that the same opposite result would have been reached by the local tribunal also, if the alleged defect or misdirection had been avoided.

This was an appeal from a conviction under sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, by the Chief Court of Lower Burma by special leave. The proceedings on special leave were reported in 17 C. W. N, p. cxviii. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., (with Messrs. David Alec. Wilson and Arthur Page for the Appellant), submitted that the Appellant had acted in good faith, and that he was protected by the Ninth Exception to sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code. The Exception read with sec. 52, I. P. C., was fully made out. Although at the beginning of the trial, the Chief Judge intimated that the Court could not enter into that part of the case which related to proceedings against Captain McCormick, the Chief Judge in his summing up went very fully into that matter, and that prejudiced the defence. The guilt or innocence of Captain McCormick was not in issue in the case. The defence that the Appellant had exercised due care and attention in writing what he did, that the Appellant published the libels in good faith, believing them to be true, having taken due care and attention to see that they were true, that was the only question for the jury to try. The Chief Judge in his charge had misdirected the jury, and the jury's minds had been diverted from the true issue. The learned counsel discussed the evidence in detail and submitted that admitting for the sake of argument that the charge against Captain McCormick was false, the Appellant had materials before him from which he had formed the judgment, and believed that the libels were true in good faith. The Appellant was prejudiced by a series of observations made by the Chief Judge in his summing up, specially the reference to the English law and authorities relating to libel. His observations with reference to Mr. Buchanan's state of mind and the guilt or innocence of Captain McCormick which was not material to the trial, created the greatest prejudice against the Appellant. There was a serious misdirection of the jury, and the Appellant was not properly tried.

[LORD SHAW remarked that the Board were not in the position of a Court of Criminal Appeal. What they had to consider was whether—apart from the alleged misdirection of the Judge—they could advise his Majesty that, taking into account the nature of the libel and the flaw in the proceedings, he should upset the conviction.]

Sir Robert Finlay.—It was not a mere flaw, but a vice which permeates the greater part of the summing up, and renders the verdict one which should not be allowed to stand.

It was the right of every British subject to be tried according to law. There was a misdirection of the most serious nature, which had resulted in a grave miscarriage of justice and caused substantial wrong, and the Board ought to set aside the conviction and sentence. Reference was made to the following authorities :—

Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Newbold (9), Woodgate v. Ridout (10), Mayne's Criminal Law, p. 699, Makin v. The Attorney-General for New South Wales (5), The Queen v. Gibson (11), The King v. Dyson (12), Rex v. Stoddart (13), Bray v. Ford (14), The King v. Norton (15), The King v. Rodley (16), Dillet's case (4), Pillai v. The King-Emperor (6), Wafadar Khan v. The Queen (17).

Mr. Wilson followed.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Crown submitted that the Appellant had not made out a case in which the Board ought to interfere and quash the conviction. There was no misdirection of the jury, and even if there was, that would not be a ground for recommending to His Majesty in Council that the conviction should be set aside. The Judicial Committee was not a Court of Criminal Appeal. To allow such appeals on the mere ground of misdirection would be opening the door for criminal appeals in other cases, and that would paralize the administration of criminal justice in the Empire. Reference was made to the authorities cited by counsel for the Appellant, relating to the practice of the Board. Misdirection of the jury was no ground to set aside a conviction in India under sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Appellant's case did not come within the principle of Dillet's case (4). Pillai's case (6) was an exceptional one. It was not the practice of the Board to interfere, except in rare cases, in which gross miscarriage of justice had taken place. The Board ought not to exercise powers greater than those given to the High Courts in India by the Legislature under the Indian Criminal Law. On the merits, the Appellant was properly convicted. Taken as a whole, the summing up of the jury was quite proper. In order to ascertain whether there was misdirection or not, the whole conduct of the case ought to be examined—the plea of the accused and the speeches of his advocates and the summing up of the Judge Rex v. Stoddart (13). The defence of the Appellant was under provisos 2 and 9 of sec. 499, I. P. C. The Appellant maintained in the Courts below that the libels were true, and in fact, he persisted in saying that even in his petition for special leave. The onus was on the Appellant to prove good faith, and in the absence of such proof, the jury and the Court held that the accused was guilty. The evidence on the record did not justify the view that the Appellant really believed what he wrote. There was a discharge of the accused by competent Courts, and the complainant had a remedy under the Code of Criminal Procedure by revision to the Chief Court. That was not done; there was not sufficient material to afford a reasonable basis to the Appellant for believing that the libels were true. The reference to the English Law in the summing up of the Judge was evidently made in answer to arguments of counsel. The Appellant's defence based on proviso 9 was fairly and properly put by the Judge to the jury who disbelieved it, and even if the Board looked at it as a Court of Criminal Appeal, the conviction was right. Reference was made to the following authorities: Rex v. Stoddart (13), The Queen v. Mookerjee (2) Pillai v. The King-Emperor (6), Lanier v. The King (7), Bir Bhan v. The King (18). [Secs. 45, 105, Evidence Act, sec. 52, I. P. C., sec. 497, 537, Cr. P. C., Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore (19)].

Sir Robert Finlay in reply.—The Board had jurisdiction to set aside the conviction. Dillet's case (4) was decided without actually deciding the guilt or innocence of the accused. It was held that the trial was not properly conducted. It could not be laid down generally that misdirection was no ground for interference. It ought to be a question in each case. That view was supported by Makin's case (5), where there was other evidence on the record, which might possibly have supported the conviction. In the present case, misdirection was a vital part of the trial, and substantial wrong had been caused by it. Dillet's case (4) ought not to be nullified. That would be a calamity. It is a great thing, that there is in the Empire a Court that could interfere with the admininistration of justice in the Criminal Courts of the Empire in cases of gravity and injustice for proper reasons. It was no answer to the Appellant's argument to say that one of the advocates for the Appellant referred in argument to the guilt of Captain McCormick. That fact made it all the more incumbent upon the Judge that his charge to the jury should have been proper and should have been confined to the real issue, namely, whether or not the accused acted in good faith. It was the duty of the Judge to censure counsel, if necessary, and not to be misled by irrelevant considerations. There was no proper trial of the Appellant, and he was entitled to an acquittal.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—By leave granted by His Majesty in Council this appeal is brought from a conviction of, and sentence upon, the Appellant by the Chief Court of Lower Burma, pronounced on the 19th October 1913. The charge was one of defamation or criminal libel, and the prosecution was laid under the 21st chapter of the Indian Penal Code. In that chapter, sec. 499 gives a definition of defamation, and sets forth categorically no fewer than ten exceptions, any one of which forms a proper defence to the charge. By sec. 500 it is provided that the punishment of defamation shall be "simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both."

The Appellant was charged with having defamed Mr. G. P. Andrew, Deputy Commissioner and District Magistrate of Mergui, by the publication of two articles in the Burma Critic, a Rangoon newspaper, on the 28th April 1912. These articles were entitled "A Mockery of British Justice."

Mr. Arnold has had experience as a journalist; and it appears from the proceedings that he was at one time the chief editor of the Rangoon Times. He ceased to be editor of that journal in the end of September 1911, and in January 1912 he was registered as one of the proprietors and the editor of the Burma Critic. The articles bear witness to the writer's possession of great invective and declamatory power; and it ought to be said at once that his motives have not been challenged except in so far as that is necessarily involved in the contention that he published serious libels and did so otherwise than in good faith.

The proceedings against him were initiated on the 11th June 1912 by Mr. Andrew, the District Magistrate, already mentioned. On the 3rd October 1912 the trial of the case began before Sir Charles Fox, the Chief Judge, with a jury. It was protracted and lasted from the 3rd to the 19th October. On the latter date the jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty, and a sentence of one year's simple imprisonment was pronounced. The Board were informed that after undergoing four months' imprisonment the remainder of the sentence was remitted.

Their Lordships listened to a lengthy argument in support of this appeal, during which the entire history of three stages of proceedings or sets of circumstances was discussed. These were, first, the details of the conduct of one McCormick, a planter, who was charged with having abducted and committed rape upon a Malay girl of about 11 years of age; secondly, the conduct and proceedings of Mr. Andrew as District Magistrate at the investigation, which was conducted before him into this charge and which ended in his declining to commit McCormick for trial: and thirdly, the proceedings at the trial in the present case.

From one point of view the discussion might have been greatly shortened by the exclusion of the consideration of the two first elements mentioned. But their Lordships were unwilling, in view of the importance which is said to attach to the appeal, to adopt any step which would appear to prevent the fullest statement by the Appellant's counsel of his entire position. And secondly, it has to be admitted that Sir Robert Finlay was justified in his observation that, although there was no justification of the libel pleaded, still the circumstances demanded a prolonged investigation on this other issue, namely, whether the Appellant, from the material placed before him when he wrote the libel, was acting in good faith. If he did so act, he would stand within the exception under the Indian Penal Code, and the libel, otherwise unjustified, would be excused by Statute. In these circumstances the fullest investigation was permitted to take its course.

It is now important to see what are the provisions of the Penal Code which apply to the case.

"Whoever," says sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, "by words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations, makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of such person, is said, except in the cases hereinafter excepted, to defame that person." Of the ten exceptions under the section, three were mentioned. The first exception is in these terms: "It is not defamation to impute anything which is true concerning any person, if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made or published. Whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact." It was admitted by the counsel for the Appellant at their Lordships' Bar that their client claimed no benefit under this exception: he did not suggest that the series of libels or any one of them was true; on the contrary all of them, in so far as they were assertions of fact, were admitted to be false.

In point of form, the same course was taken in the Court below. But while this was so, and while the plea of veritas was not openly or plainly made, their Lordships regret to observe that surreptitiously it did appear and reappear in the case by way of repeated innuendo. It may be as well to bring this matter to a point at once. In Sir Charles Fox's charge to the jury this passage occurs: "You will observe that under the first exception the only question, apart from the question of the public good that could arise, was whether what had been said was true or not. Now it is noticeable that the defence does not rely on that exception, although up to the end we have had it reiterated that what was said was true." Upon being questioned the learned counsel for the Appellant frankly admitted that the exception was not in point of fact pleaded as a defence, and their Lordships do not understand that they disputed that the learned Chief Judge's statement of what occurred at the trial by reiterated innuendo was correct. It was open to the Appellant to defend his utterances as true. But he declined to take that course. Their falsehood stood as an admission in the case, the words themselves being so plainly of a libellous character. This part of the case may accordingly be definitely dismissed.

CHANNING ARNOLD v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

The second exception is in these terms: "It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of a public servant in the discharge of his public functions or respecting his character so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no further." The distinction between this and the first exception is that the former deals with allegations of fact, and this second exception deals with the expression of opinion. This also has nothing to do with the case, as it now stands, because it was, as it must be, admitted that the articles did not confine themselves to expressing an opinion as to the conduct of Mr. Andrew, but in much detail made definite defamatory allegations of fact against him.

It is accordingly upon the ninth exception that the determination of the present appeal solely depends That is in these terms:—"It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it, or of any other person, or for the public good." In connection with this exception, it is necesrary to take its language along with that of sec. 52 of the Code, which is to this effect: "Nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith, which is done or believed without due care and attention."

Notwithstanding the elaboration of the arguments and the introduction of much matter affecting the conduct of McCormick and the conduct of Mr. Andrew, it was accordingly this question, and this question only, which the jury charged by Sir Charles Fox had to try, namely, whether in publishing the libels, admitted to be false, Mr. Arnold did so in good faith, because he believed them to be true, having given due care and attention to seeing that they were so. If the jury were satisfied that he did give that due care and attention, and that he acted in good faith, then the exception formed a good defence, and the accused would be found not guilty. If, on the other hand, they were not so satisfied, then no course, according to the Indian Criminal Law and the Indian Evidence Act, was open to them but to negative the exception and to find the accused guilty. No question is made that each of these propositions is sound.

It is contended, however, by the Appellant that in the course of the charge there was misdirection by the Judge, and that the jury's minds were diverted from this, which it is admitted was the true and only issue, to other questions. What were these? They were the very things which the prisoner's counsel had throughout the trial insisted on introducing, namely, the question of the conduct of McCormick and of Mr. Andrew, the narrative as to Mr. Andrew being accompanied by the suggestion that it was after all indefensible and corrupt. Their Lordships recognise that this mode of conducting the defence, which it appears to have been difficult to repress, was not unlikely to lead to confusion; but it is at least satisfactory to find that the learned Judge in charging the jury made no mistake in stating what the true issue was. It is admitted by the Appellant's counsel that this is so. "What you will have to consider," said the learned Judge to the jury, is "whether the imputations in these articles were published in good faith, after due care and attention had been exercised on the part of the writer of them. What is 'due care and attention' must depend on the circumstances of each particular case." It is also fair to the learned Judge to say that, while he felt constrained—a course which, in view of the conduct of the defence, is not to be wondered at—to go with some fulness into a narrative of fact, he concluded his charge to the jury by bringing their minds directly back to the exact issue which they had to try. He did so in this language: "It is now for you to consider these matters, and to decide whether the accused has satisfied you that he used the reasonable care that he ought to have used. If you are satisfied that he did, and that he did not overstep the bounds of law as I have explained the law to you, then you must acquit him, but if he has not satisfied you that he has exercised such due care and attention before he committed himself to paper in this way, then it is your bounden duty to convict him."

Before the exception and the alleged misdirection of the jury are dealt with, it is expedient to state what the libel contained. Being headed "A Mockery of British Justice," after a considerable amount of inflammatory matter, it proceeds to "speak out against those officials who have forgotten their duty and have dared to trifle with the fair fame of England." Having made these very serious allegations the Appellant added: "The facts before us indicate that he (Mr. Andrew) conspired with Mr. Finnie to burke the case; that he conducted it in camera; that he refused to heed the protest of the complainants that the interpreter employed was a paid parasite of McCormick, and did, in fact, deliberately mistranslate; that of the witnesses for the prosecution only those called by the District Superintendent of Police, and not even all of them, were allowed to give evidence; that in a word the whole enquiry was an outrageous make-believe and a mockery of what he is nominally representative, the fair play and judicial honour associated with the name of England. By what looks like the meanest of tricks, the unfortunate Complainants were unrepresented by any lawyer at this judicial farce."

It would serve no good purpose to cite further from the libels; they mention disgusting details and incriminate other officers besides Mr. Andrew, as engaged in a corrupt plot. They contain not one, but a series of libels of the grossest character. These libels were at least seven in number. First, of conspiracy with Finnie to prostitute justice by saving McCormick. Secondly, of having apparently knowingly and as part of the partisanship, bailed out McCormick for a non-bailable offence. Thirdly, of having misled the Malay girl, her parents and friends, by leaving them without professional advocacy, which they had been led to expect. Fourthly, of having perverted the course of truth by a partisan interpreter. Fifthly, of having tried the case in camera. (Very little was made of this in argument.) Sixthly, of not having called certain witnesses in the inquiry; and Seventhly, of Mr. Andrew having heard the case knowing that certain people objected to his doing so.

Of these libels the first was the real basis of all. It imputed corruption. Several of the others might not appear but for their resting upon that basis of corruption to be of so serious a type. But in their Lordships' opinion this cannot be said of the third and fourth, for if it were true that the magistrate had designedly deprived the complainants of legal assistance, and provided them with a false interpreter, then such wicked conduct would not only be itself indefensible but would colour all the rest. Upon the whole it cannot be denied that if any substantial part of this defamation was true, it meant ruin to the career of Mr. Andrew and any others engaged in conspiring with him as alleged.

The points put forward in the Appellant's favour as establishing that although the charges were false, yet he was excused by statute because he believed them boná fide, and had given due care and attention to their truth, were substantially three. In the first place, it was urged that he relied upon a letter published with the signature of "Vigilance," and addressed to the Rangoon Times. It is dated the 31st August 1911, and at that time the Appellant was connected with that paper. It contains a long narrative incriminating Mc Cormick and also Mr. Andrew and others.

The second element proponed in support of Mr. Arnold's good faith is of a different and an important character. It is this: In the district of Tenasserim referred to, the position of Subdivisional Magistrate was occupied by Mr. Buchanan. It is alleged that Mr. Buchanan had been on unfriendly terms with Mc Cormick, but their Lordships do not think that there is anything substantial in this allegation, and they further think it right to put on record their opinion, which is in entire concurrence with that of the Chief Judge, that Mr. Buchanan in his investigations and conduct was actuated by entire good faith. Although his conclusions and suspicions may have been erroneous, their Lordships see no reason to think that from beginning to end he did not act in accordance with the best traditions of the service. He had been absent on leave from the middle of April to about the middle of May 1911, and on his return he heard rumours of misconduct by Mc Cormick. Towards the end of June, Mahomed Din, who had lega differences with Mc Cormick, made allegations which amounted to a charge that the crimes of abduction and of rape had been committed. Mr. Buchanan himself made enquiries and came to the conclusion that McCormick should be put upon his trial. It is a point in the accused's favour that the Subdivisional Magistrate thought that there was a case for committal.

The third point in these protracted proceedings, which is more important than either of the foregoing in support of the contention that the writer of the libels believed them to be true, is the admitted conduct of McCormick himself. Their Lordships do not attach much weight to the question of abduction, because it appears to be the case that the child had formerly lived in McCormick's house for a short period, and the evidence is somewhat confused as to the conduct of the mother of the child in regard' to her absence from the house. But the allegation made by McCormick was that he had been informed that this child was suffering from gonorrhœa, that he had taken her to his house, and himself (there being a hospital eight miles away) had personally examined her, and had then passed her on for treatment by the mistress of one of his male servants. But their Lordships find themselves in entire agreement with the learned Judge when he says: "It is not surprising that there should be indignation and hot feeling on the part of the sympathisers with the mother of the child Aina, and good reason for feeling of indignation at some of the conduct —the admitted conduct—of McCormick. . . . However strong his inclination for amateur doctoring may have been, there could have been no justification for that. It was a thing no man with a proper sense of decency should have done."

Although accordingly it is no part of the submission of the Counsel for the Appellant at their Lordships' Bar that McCormick was guilty, their Lordships think it is an element relevant to the consideration of whether Mr. Arnold was acting in good faith in these libels to shew that he believed that McCormick's own admissions would have justified his committal for trial.

The last matter which their Lordships reckon to be a perfectly relevant one in the category of elemen s in the case which bore upon the point of the accused's good faith was this. Importance is attached to a pronouncement by the Magistrate. After investigating the facts, and declining to commit, he went on to say that in his opinion McCormick's conduct was pure and philanthropic. Their Lordships cannot agree with such an opinion, and their views coincide with those of the Chief Judge upon that subject.

They are of opinion that there were thus several elements in the case which were all with perfect propriety submitted to the jury in support of the defence. Their Lordships, however, do not attach so much importance to the other allegations. That as to bail having been granted to the accused rests on a slender foundation. It is held by the Judges on the spot, and it was proved to be also the opinion of the civil authorities, that the discretion of granting bail applied to this case. It was evidently a case, unless forbidden by Statute, for discretion being exercised, and it would rather appear to their Lordships, looking to the great distance to be traversed before the authority claimed by the Appellant as requisite for granting bail could be obtained, that much practical hardship would ensue to prisoners unless such a discretion existed. They are not prepared to say that the humane view which was taken of an accused's rights was mistaken. It is unnecessary in this case to decide or dwell upon the point, because their Lordships' opinion is very clear to the effect that this difficult and delicate point of law could never have been viewed as a substantial element weighing with any reasonable writer in justification of his belief in the truth of the libel. The same observation applies to the other elements in the case which need not be entered upon, but all of which have been fully considered. Their Lordships are of opinion that a fair and statable case in support of the statutory defence and of the belief in the wickedness of Mr. Andrew was put forward on the points which have been already enumerated, but that no others were of any real weight. In putting forward, however, the points mentioned, their Lordships think that a case was made which demanded an answer.

Such an answer was given, and it also was both fair and statable.

In the first place, a serious and weighty reply was made on the subject of the letter signed "Vigilance." It was not confined to the remark that the letter was no valid excuse for a belief in gross slander. The points proved were these: When that letter was received by the Rangoon Times, a most proper course was taken, and that with the Appellant's knowledge. It was forwarded by Mr. Stokes, the assistant editor, to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Burma, so that there might be official confirmation of its allegations prior to its being published. These allegations were examined into, and on the 31st October, the Chief Secretary wrote stating that the Lieutenant-Governor had caused inquiry to be made, and had found that the allegations against the officers were without foundation. By this time the Appellant had ceased to be editor of the Rangoon Times, but on the 2nd November 1911 Mr. Stokes forwarded a reply to the Chief Secretary stating that the incident, so far as the Rangoon Times was concerned, was closed.

This was not so, however, with regard to the Appellant, for in the following spring, namely, on the 7th March 1912, an article appeared in the Burma Critic, of which he was then editor, entitled "Alleged Grave Scandals in Tenasserim." On inquiry being officially made of the Appellant, asking for particulars, the answer given was that the case referred to was that inquired into and disposed of in the previous autumn. The Appellant's attention was at the same time called to the fact that Mr. Stokes had accepted the reply of the Lieutenant-Governor. All this took place before the libels in question were published.

Their Lordships cannot see their way to hold this part of the Appellant's case to be satisfactory.

An investigation in the department of a Lieutenant-Governor of great experience having resulted in exonerating Mr. Andrew from blame, the Appellant assumed the grave responsibility for re-opening the matter. He gave the authorities no inkling of any fresh information which had come to his hand, and in answer to their enquiry he simply stated that it was the old incident which he was reviving. Up to the present, the Appellant has not given at their Lordships' Bar or in any Court any statement of any fresh facts which he had discovered. This circumstance was, in their Lordships' opinion, well worthy of consideration by the jury.

In the second place, both Judge and jury had seriously to consider the attitude of Mr. Arnold himself. He neither defended the articles as true, nor did he give any assistance on the subject of what were the actual things upon which he founded his own beliefs, nor finally upon what the steps were, if any, which he took to investigate their truth before giving them to the public.

Thus, although the true issue in the case was as to his own bonâ fides, and the care and attention which would verify that, Mr. Arnold's action, when charged, gave no help to the Court, and must to some extent have embarrassed even his own defence. Having admitted that he assumed responsibility for the articles, he was asked by the Magistrate as follows: "Q. Do you wish to make any explanation of your position in the case as to your bonâ fides, &c.? (I pointed out to the accused that, under sec. 105 the burden of proof lies upon him)." "A. No. I have nothing to say. Every one, from the Lieutenant-Governor downward, knows my character, and I leave it at that." But of course it was quite impossible to leave it at that, because the libels were there, in all their number and seriousness; the charge was made under the Statute, and the law had prescribed that the author of such libels could only be excused by showing good faith after due care and attention. It is not in accordance with the due or proper administration of justice for an accused to brush all the statutory regulations affecting his position aside in this manner. The attitude and absence of the accused may well have been considered by the jury, rather destructive than helpful to the defence set up.

CHANNING ARNOLD v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

In the third place, this has to be borne in mind: Every officer, judicial or administrative, who investigated this case, except Mr. Buchanan, had agreed with the conclusion at which Mr. Andrew had arrived, namely, that the charge should be dismissed. This circumstance was one peculiarly suited for the appraisement of a local jury.

The next circumstance in the case is one to which their Lordships do not conceal that they attach serious importance. They were moved by the allegation that the prosecutors and those in that interest were alleged to have been led on to the trial by Mr. Andrew, and that Mr. Andrew had wickedly conspired suddenly to leave them in the lurch without an advocate, and to furnish them with a false interpreter. This allegation was, as it turned out, not only untrue, but was, as was made abundantly clear at the trial, particularly cruel. Letters were produced showing that instead of Mr. Andrew having taken up such an attitude, his desire, and indeed his endeavour and entreaty throughout were that in the enquiry before him an advocate should not only be employed for the prosecution, but should, in fact, be paid by the Government. Letter after letter was written to this effect—to engage a pleader. On the 3rd August 1911, Mr. Andrew had intimated to Mr. Buchanan that he would engage an advocate to prosecute, and that his presence and the presence of Mr. Sherard, the investigating officer, would also be required. On the 4th, he specially wrote to Mr. Buchanan, "Can you bring up interpreter trusted by all parties? Ask complainants to choose between," two advocates named, "to conduct their case." On the 7th, Mr. Buchanan having been unable to get such an interpreter, but having stated that the complainant wished to consult a certain Vakil in Rangoon before choosing a lawyer to conduct the case, Mr. Andrew wrote to Mr. Buchanan, "Kindly do so, and name advocate early. As regards interpreter, your Court-interpreter must come along to assist at any rate." On the 10th sanction was asked to engage Mahomed Ayoob "on the terms he asks." It most clearly appears from the letters that the arrangement as to legal assistance broke down, because upon the 12th August the Commissioner at Mergui declined to sanction the proposal to retain an advocate, he having demanded of Mr. Andrew to state whether he thought the charges could be substantiated, and Mr. Andrew having stated in answer to this difficult question that he thought the abduction charge alone could be made out. In short, the refusal to provide an advocate was made neither by Mr. Andrew nor by connivance or consent of Mr. Andrew, but in spite of him. With regard to the interpreter, it should also be added that Mr. Andrew's anxiety upon that subject was manifest, and it was entirely in the right direction. Mr. Buchanan objected to one Chean Gee and he recommended Musaji. As mentioned Mr. Andrew wanted an "interpreter trusted by all parties" and Musaji, Mr. Buchanan's nominee, was employed. Mr. Buchanan was present at Mergui during the investigation and he made no objection to this. There was, of course, no proof that a single word was interpreted falsely. In their Lordships' opinion these two parts of the libel were very gross, and they can see no justification for the proposition that the Appellant had any reasonable ground for believing them to be true.

It does not appear that in any view of the case there could have been a defence under the Statute in regard to these substantial portions of the libellous matter, and the case of The Queen v. Newman (1), was founded upon to this effect. But their Lordships are very anxious, however, not to have the case disposed of on what may be considered a narrow ground. They take these points as included in the sum of the matter to be considered before the jury as relevant to the general case of Mr. Arnold's justification on the ground of having, after due care and attention, and so in good faith, believed that these things were true.

One final matter has, however, to be kept in view. Some of the letters last cited were undoubtedly not before Mr. Arnold when he wrote the libels. But they were before him in the course of his trial. In their Lordships' opinion, when it was discovered that the truth with regard to Mr. Andrew had not been that in these particulars he wickedly conspired to defeat justice, but that he was, on the contrary, anxiously endeavouring to secure that justice should be furthered and guarded, then the duty of the accused, Mr. Arnold, was plain. Their Lordships make every allowance for the heat of advocacy which, as noted by the Chief Judge, seems to have been in this case great. But when a gross mistake of that kind on a matter of fact—the truth of which, when exposed, would have ruined any administrative or judicial officer's career—was discovered, the libel should not have been adhered to for a moment. The mistake should have been acknowledged and an apology tendered. This was not done, but upon the contrary the case was conducted to its close upon the footing that an unstated defence was the real and good defence, namely, that the libels and all the libels were true. Nobody is to be blamed in these circumstances for thinking that the plea of good faith on the part of Mr. Arnold had sustained a serious shock.

(1) 1 E. and B. 558 (1853).

The speeches of the learned counsel for the accused have not been printed, but their Lordships had the advantage of hearing Mr. Wilson, who had been in communication with those engaged in the case and who informed their Lordships that the views presented by the senior and junior counsel for the Appellant somewhat diverged. It is, however, unnecessary to labour this matter, because no doubt was thrown upon the narrative of the proceedings given by Sir Charles Fox in his charge. There is enough disclosed in the case to show that no light task was thrown upon the Judge in disentangling relevant from irrelevant topics and in presenting the true issue to the minds of the jury. The real objection taken at their Lordships' Bar to this charge was that the jury were misdirected in this sense, and that the narrative of the learned Judge must have left the impression upon the mind that Mr. Andrew had not acted wickedly as the libel alleged. But it was, looking to the advocacy, necessary for the learned Judge to state his own view, and their Lordships do not see anything in the charge to give countenance to the idea that he withdrew this question from the jury or from their province. With a large portion even of the narrative their Lordships see no occasion to quarrel. Some portions of it here and there might be the subject of difference of opinion.

A charge to a jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law in it, these will, of course, be the subject of separate analysis, but in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the jury's province. Their Lordships do not say that upon any particular in this case they would differ from the views laid down by Sir Charles Fox, but these observations are made in order to discountenance the idea that in the region of fact, unless something gross amounting to a complete misdescription of whole bearing of the evidence has occurred, this Board will interfere. The separate and peculiar position of this Committee under the Constitution will be afterwards dealt with.

Their Lordships regret to find that there appeared on the one side in this case the time-worn fallacy that some kind of privilege attaches to the profession of the Press as distinguished from the members of the public. The freedom of the journalist is an ordinary part of the freedom of the subject, and to whatever lengths the subject in general may go, so also may the journalist, but, apart from statute-law, his privilege is no other and no higher. The responsibilities which attach to his power in the dissemination of printed matter may, and in the case of a conscientious journalist do, make him more careful : but the range of his assertions, his criticisms or his comments, is as wide as, and no wider than, that of any other subject. No privilege attaches to his position.

Upon the other side it would appear from certain observations of the learned Judge that this false and dangerous doctrine may have been hinted at, that some privilege or protection attaches to the public acts of a Judge which exempts him, in regard to these, from free and adverse comment. He is not above criticism, his conduct and utterances may demand it. Freedom would be seriously impaired if the judicial tribunals were outside of the range of such comment. The present case affords a good illustration of what is meant. When the examination before Mr. Andrew concluded with his declaration that in his judgment the action of McCormick was pure and philanthropic, the whole trial would seem to have been laid open to searching and severe observations, and no blame could be attached to these. But when the criticism was converted into an attack upon the Magistrate as a conspirator against justice, a traitor to his oath, a trickster, a man who had manœuvred his procedure so as to defeat truth and protect an associate, then, of course, it is for the person who has uttered these things to justify them, or, under the Indian Penal Code, to establish affirmatively that he believed them to be true, and that on reasonable grounds. On both of these matters last mentioned the learned Judge seems to have properly directed the jury.

This also has to be said. A large part of the criticism directed against the charge of the learned Judge in this case was to the effect that the narrative of the proceedings led up to the conclusion inevitably that Mr. Andrew was innocent of the wicked dereliction of duty which was alleged. If it was so, the result upon the case is somewhat remarkable. For then the charge had in fact impressed the jury's minds with the innocence of Mr. Andrew, and it is that very innocence which is in the foreground of the admissions made in this case. The foregoing narrative in this view might have been spared, because it is now seen that nearly all, if not all, of the items in the narrative which are said to constitute misdirection are parts of a narrative which leads to a conclusion that that is in accordance with fact which has all along been admitted to be true.

It is here that the peculiarity of the procedure becomes evident, for the narrative thus criticised was undoubtedly, as it appears to their Lordships, the narrative given by the learned Judge to the jury in order to counteract an improper use which was being made of the procedure. While the truth of the libels was not asserted formally, and while the admission of their falsehood was formally granted, an endeavour was repeatedly made to withdraw all this and to persuade the jury to take all that was asserted as true. Such things may occur; but it is the duty of Judges to put what check they can upon them, and in the present case their Lordships see no occasion to think that the learned Judge failed to exercise that duty with propriety.

From what has been said it will, their Lordships think, clearly appear that there was material before the jury on both sides of this case, and that the determination was on a subject peculiarly within the jury's province. In their Lordships' opinion the case was not improperly withdrawn from the jury's domain on fact, and they were not misdirected in law. But even if it were conceded that upon a meticulous examination of the Judge's charge or conduct of the case certain flaws could be discovered, it is the duty of their Lordships to consider the special position and function of the Board, in criminal cases as the advisers of the King. The frequency of applications made to the Board for leave to appeal against the judgments of criminal tribunals in various parts of the Empire, as well as the thoroughness with which the powers and practice of the Judicial Committee were discussed in this case incline their Lordships to make a deliberate survey of this important topic.

The question is not truly one of jurisdiction. The power of His Majesty under his Royal authority to review proceedings of a criminal nature, unless where such power and authority have been parted with by Statute, is undoubted. Upon the other hand, there are reasons, both constitutional and administrative, which make it manifest that this power should not be lightly exercised. The overruling consideration upon the topic has reference to justice itself. If throughout the Empire it were supposed that the course and execution of justice could suffer serious impediment, which in many cases might amount to practical obstruction by an appeal to the Royal Prerogative of review on judicial grounds, then it becomes plain that a severe blow would have been dealt to the ordered administration of law within the King's dominions.

These views are not new. They were expressed more than 50 years ago by Dr. Lushington in his judgment in The Queen v. Mookerjee (2), and Lord Kingsdown, in the case of The Falkland Islands Company v. The Queen (3), stated the matter compendiously in these words: "It may be assumed that the Queen has authority by virtue of Her Prerogative to review the decisions of all Colonial Courts, whether the proceedings be of a civil or criminal character, unless Her Majesty has parted with such authority. But, the inconvenience of entertaining such appeals in cases of a strictly criminal nature is so great, the obstruction which it would offer to the administration of justice in the Colonies is so obvious, that it is very rarely that applications to this Board similar to the present have attended with success." Their Lordships desire to state that in their opinion the principle and practice thus laid down by Lord Kingsdown still remain those which are followed by the Judicial Committee.

There have been various important cases in recent times to which, naturally, reference has been made. The first is the case of re Dillet (4). It should be observed that while Dillet's case (4) was in form an application within the ambit of criminal law, the matter of substance which was truly brought before the Judicial Committee was a civil matter. The appeal was by a barrister and solicitor against a verdict convicting him of perjury, but there had been a consequential order of the Court directing him to be struck off the roll of practitioners, and special leave was granted to appeal in reference to the consequential order. Lord Blackburn referred to Lord Kingsdown's judgment in the Falkland Islands case (3) as authoritative and binding. After citing that learned Judge, Lord Blackburn added: In "this statement of the general practice their Lordships agree. They are not prepared to advise Her Majesty to make this conviction for perjury an exception if it were not made the sole foundation for the subsequent order of 27th March 1885," and liberty accordingly was granted "to appeal against the order of the 27th March 1885, striking him off the roll, and also to the extent above stated, and no further, against conviction for perjury."

(3) 1 Moo. P. C. N. S. 299, 312 (1863).
(4) 12 A. C. 459 (1887).

While accordingly the familiar sentences again about to be quoted from Lord Watson are frequently cited with reference to criminal review in general by this Board, this outstanding circumstance just alluded to ought not to be forgotten. It appears to dispose of the argument that the practice of the Board was in purely criminal matters in any respect either advanced or distorted from the position that it occupied under the judgments of Dr. Lushington and Lord Kingsdown pronounced about a quarter of a century before. Lord Watson in Dillet's case (4) observed that "the rule has been repeatedly laid down and has been invariably followed that Her Majesty will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has been done."

The present case brings prominently before the Board the question of what is the sense in which those words are to be interpreted. If they are to be interpreted in the sense that wherever there has been a misdirection in any criminal case, leaving it uncertain whether that misdirection did or did not affect the jury's mind, then in such cases a miscarriage of justice could be affirmed or assumed, then the result would be to convert the Judicial Committee into a Court of Criminal Review for the Indian and Colonial Empire. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that no such proposition is sound.

(4) 12 A. C. 459 (1887).

CHANNING ARNOLD v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

This Committee is not a Court of Criminal Appeal. It may in general be stated that its practice is to the following effect: It is not guided by its own doubts of the Appellant's innocence or suspicion of his guilt. It will not interfere with the course of criminal law unless there has been such an interference with the elementary rights of an accused as has placed him outside of the pale of regular law, or, within that pale, there has been a violation of the natural principles of justice so demonstratively manifest as to convince their Lordships, first, that the result arrived at was opposite to the result which their Lordships would themselves have reached, and, secondly, that the same opposite result would have been reached by the local tribunal also if the alleged defect or misdirection had been avoided. The limited nature of the appeal in Dillet's case (4) has been referred to, and their Lordships do not think that its authority goes beyond those propositions which have now been enunciated.

The argument for the Appellant was to an entirely contrary effect. In the forefront of it the case of Makin v. The Attorney-General for New South Wales (5) was cited. Makin's case (5) in truth did not raise the question at issue in the present case. It depended upon the construction of sec. 423 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883 (a New South Wales Statute). That section set up the Judges of the Supreme Court as a tribunal to determine questions submitted to them in a case stated by the Judge at the trial, and there was a proviso that there should be no quashing "unless for some substantial wrong or other miscarriage of justice." It was stated by this Board that under that section the Judges have not been substituted for the jury. As they said, "In their Lordships' opinion substantial wrong will be done to the accused if he were deprived of the verdict of the jury on the facts proved by legal evidence and there were substituted for it a verdict of the Court founded merely upon the perusal of the evidence."

The second case founded on is that of Pillai v. The King-Emperor (6), in which this Board sustained an appeal. The circumstances of the case, however, were of the most extraordinary character, and were such as appeared to the Board imperatively to demand that it should interpose, because the very foundations of justice seemed to have been attacked in the proceedings. A whole body of inadmissible evidence had been received in the case. The one witness whose evidence was relevant and who remained in the case was supporting another witness who was a confessed perjurer. The remaining witness himself had given under oath conflicting and contradictory accounts in previous judicial proceedings before the Magistrate and certain officials. "If true," observed Lord Atkinson, "they show that these officials, or at least the Sub-Inspector, induced the witness to forswear himself and found in him a pliant instrument ready to give false evidence upon oath to secure the conviction of his own father; and if false, they show that the witness was ready to commit deliberate perjury whenever he was confronted with the inconsistencies in his former statements. There is no alternative." The simple case accordingly confronting the Board was a case of a subject sentenced to death upon no evidence at all. In these circumstances, although the principle of Dillet's case (4) was again re-affirmed, their Lordships did not see their way to refrain from interfering.

The third case referred to is that of Lanier v. The King (7), and, fortunately, it is seldom that such a travesty of justice can be witnessed. One of the notable features of the case had reference to the Judge himself. He, as narrated in the report, was a member of the family council which instigated the proceedings and himself was a party to appointing two barristers to conduct the prosecution and arranged about their fee. The facts need not be referred to. The indictment was altered by drastic amendments; the trial was hurried on; but the narrative need go no further, for, as the report states, "In short, counsel for the Crown at the Bar of this Board very properly admitted that he could not contend that any jury upon the evidence submitted would have convicted the Appellant of crime." The Board were of opinion that the sentence pronounced against the Appellant "formed such an invasion of liberty and such a denial of his just rights as a citizen that their Lordships feel called upon to interfere." But the Board took care to repeat that it did not lightly interfere, and the language of Lord Watson in Dillet's case (4), was again cited. It was pointed out that the interference was not on any matter of form, but because of matters lying at the very foundation of justice (the Judge had been a Judge in his own cause), justice had "gravely and injuriously miscarried." Lanier's stands as a fair type of almost the only case in which this Board would advise the interposition of His Majesty the King with the course of criminal justice in the Colonies or Dependencies. That extreme case is this, that it must be established demonstrably that justice itself in its very foundations has been subverted, and that it is therefore a matter of general Imperial concern that by way of an appeal to the King it be then restored to its rightful position in that part of the Empire.

Their Lordships were referred to the dicta of Judges and the rules set up with regard to the procedure of the Court of Criminal Appeal in England; but they are not the rules adopted by this Board, which, as already stated, is not a Court of Criminal Appeal. And the authority of these decisions, which apply to a different system, a different procedure, and a different structure of principle, must stand out of the reckoning of any body of authority on the matter of the procedure of this Board in advising His Majesty. This view is in entire accord with the recent proceedings of this Board on applications for leave to appeal. One instance of this is that of Clifford v. The King-Emperor (8), on the 17th November last, and their Lordships refer to the Judgment of the Lord Chancellor in this and the other refusals referred to.

The application to the present case is simple. Even had this Committee been a Court of Criminal Appeal, it is hardly doubtful that the appeal would fail. A fortiori their Lordships are left in no doubt as to their own duty in conformity with the practice of the Board. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

That the Plaintiff at the time when the amending Act was passed had a vested right of suit and there is nothing in the Act as amended that demands the construction that the Plaintiff was thereby deprived of that right. The law as amended may regulate the procedure in suits in which the Plaintiff could comply with its provisions, but cannot govern suits when such compliance was from the first impossible.

The facts in LALA SONIRAM v. KANAHAIYA LAL (2) did not involve the position when a suit cannot be brought after the passing of the amendment, and the decision of the majority in MANJHOORI BIBI v. AKEL MAHUMED (1), so far as it relates to that position, has not been affected by the judgment of the Privy Council in LALA SONIRAM v. KANAHAIYA LAL (2).

A right of suit is a vested right, and it is an established axiom of construction that though procedure may be regulated by the Act for the time being in force, still the intention to take away a vested right without compensation or any saving is not to be imputed to the Legislature, unless it be expressed in unequivocal terms.

decree of Babu Debendra Prosad Bagchi, Munsif, Bishnupur, dated the 28th of February 1910.

This Appeal originally came on for hearing before Fletcher and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ., who differed on a point of law and delivered the following judgments from which the facts of the case will fully appear.

FLETCHER J.—This is an appeal against a judgment and decree passed by the District Judge of Bankura, dated the 12th of April 1911, reversing the decree passed by the Court of the Munsif of the 1st Court at Bishnupur The suit was brought for declaration of title to and possession of a certain piece of land of an area about 10 bighas.

The land in dispute was originally Ghatwali land held by one Kali Lohar the Ghatwal. In the year 1806, the Ghatwal granted to the Plaintiff's great-grandfather a temporary lease of the land in dispute for cultivating purposes.

In the year 1874 a renewed lease was granted to the Plaintiff's grandfather by a registered document. On the 1st of April 1879, documents were executed purporting to convert the holding into Mokarari.

In the year 1902, the Ghatwali land was resumed by the Maharaja of Burdwan, and the Maharaja settled the land with the former Ghatwal Kali Lohar in May 1902.

On the 28th June 1903, Kali Lohar sold the lands to the contesting Defendants who almost immediately dispossessed the Plaintiff of the same. The present suit was instituted in the month of July 1909. The Court of first instance decreed the Plaintiff's suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge reversed the decree passed by the Munsif.

On the appeal before us it was first argued that when Kali Lohar obtained the lands in 1002 in settlement from the Maharaja of Burdwan, the estate then conferred on him went to feed the estoppel created on the purported grant of the Mokarari interest to the Plaintiff's ancestor on the 1st of April, 1879, or at any rate by the acceptance of rent by Kali Lohar between May 1902 and June 1903 he had confirmed the lease to the Plaintiff. As to the question of estoppel, I agree with the Lower Appellate Court, and on the facts found I think that the acceptance of rent would amount to a confirmation of the tenancy of the Plaintiff. But before the latter points can avail the Appellant, it must be shown that his suit is not barred by limitation.

Now Sch. III, part I, Art. 3 to the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, provides that the period of limitation to recover possession of land claimed by a Plaintiff as an occupancy raiyat is two years from the date of dispossession. It has been decided in this Court that the Article only applied to suits by occupancy raiyats (See Ramdhan Bhadra v. Ram Kumar Dey (8).

But by sec. 61 (3), Act I (B C.) of 1907 the words "A raiyat or an under-raiyat" were substituted in Art. 3 in the place of the words "an occupancy raiyat."

Act I (B. C.) of 1907 came into force on the 11th of May 1907, and as I have already stated, this suit was instituted in the month of July 1909.

The argument put forward by the learned Vakil for the Appellant is that the statute of limitation that was in force when the cause of action arose, and not that when the suit was instituted applies to this case. Therefore as the cause of action arose before the passing of Act

(8) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 930 (1890).

GOPESHUR PAL v. JIBAN CHANDRA CHANDRA

I (B. C.) of 1907, the present suit was brought in time.

In support of this argument reliance was placed on the decision in the case of Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1).

That case was a decision of Mukerjee and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ. (Carnduff, J. dissenting) and is, if the case remains un affected by subsequent decisions, binding on us here.

The Privy Council, however, in the case of Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2), expressed the opinion that the Statute of limitation in force at the time of the institution of the suit and not that in force when the cause of action arose applied to the case before them.

Following on that decision Mukerjee and Beachcroft, JJ, held in the case of Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Husain (9), notwithstanding the view expressed by the Privy Council in the case of Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2), the decision of the majority of the Judges in the case of Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1), remained unaffected. On the other hand, Coxe and Ray, JJ., in an unreported case, Second Appeal No. 4251 of 1910, which was cited to us during the argument declined to follow the decision in Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1), having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2). In this conflict of judicial authority, I prefer to follow the decision of Coxe and Ray, JJ, to that of Mukerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.

In my opinion both on principle and authority the amendment of Art. 3 of Sch. III, Part I of the Bengal Tenancy Act being an enactment relating solely to procedure applies to suits instituted after the amendment came into operation notwithstanding that the cause of action arose prior to the amendment.

I may also point out that Art. 6 to Sch. III, Part I of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been held by Mukerjee and Vincent, JJ, in the case of Thakamani v. Mohendra Nath (10), to be retrospective. It is not necessary for me to go through the earlier authorities. It is sufficient for the present purpose to say that I agree with the judgment of Carnduff, J., in Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1).

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—Two questions have been raised in this Apeal. The first is whether the Plaintiff has a Mokarari right to the lands in dispute, and the second, whether the suit is barred by the special limitation provided by Article 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The facts appear to be these The lands in suit were included in a Ghatwali tenure and the Ghatwal Kali Lohar granted a cultivating lease of the lands to the Plaintiff's grandfather in 1281. Subsequently, in 1285 a registered Mokarari lease was granted by the Ghatwal, and it is found that the Plaintiff's grandfather and then the Plaintiff's father were in possession of the lands down to 1309, when the ghatwali lands were resumed by the Government and settled with the Zemindar, who again settled the same in Mokarari with the Ghatwal Kali Lohar. The name of the Plaintiff's father appears as tenant of the land in the resumption proceedings. After Kali Lohar obtained the Mokarari settlement from the Zemindar, he sold the lands to the Chandra Defendants and they dispossessed the Plaintiff from the lands. Hence this suit.

Now, a ghatwal cannot create a permanent lease binding upon his successor, but Kali Lohar who granted the Mokarari to the Plaintiff's grandfather in 1285, acquired a permanent right to the lands in 1902. It is unnecessary to discuss the arguments addressed to us, and the authorities cited in connection with the question of estoppel. The title of the Plaintiff in the present case does not rest upon estoppel. The ghatwali was not resumed under any statute, but under an agreement between the Ghatwal, the Zemindar and the Government, and Kali Lohar by surrendering his ghatwali under the above arrangement could not affect the Mokarari right of the Plaintiff. In any case, it was perfectly open to Kali Lohar after he acquired a permanent interest in the land to confirm the permanent interest which he had professed to create in 1285, and it is found by the Court of first instance that he distinctly recognised the Mokarari title of the Plaintiff after the lands had been resumed and settled with him by the Zemindar, and before he sold the lands to the Chandra Defendants. This finding has not been displaced on Appeal, and is supported by evidence. The finding that the Chandra Defendants are bonâ fide purchasers for value without notice of the Mokarari title, therefore, does not affect the Mokarari right of the Plaintiff, and the provisions of sec. 27, cl. (b) upon which reliance was placed on behalf of the Respondents do not affect the question.

I am accordingly of opinion that the Plaintiff had a Mokarari title. But even if he had no Mokarari right, there can be no doubt that he had the right of a non-occupancy raiyat and the tenancy was recognised by Kali Lohar after resumption of the lands and before the transfer to the Chandra Defendants. The latter therefore had no right to dispossess the Plaintiff.

The next question is whether the suit is barred by the special limitation of two years prescribed by Art. 3, Sch. III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Plaintiff, it is found, was dispossessed in July 1903 (Asar 1310) and the suit was instituted in July 1909. He had, as a raiyat holding at fixed rates or even as a non-occupancy raiyat, a period of 12 years within which he could sue for possession of the lands on declaration of his title. But Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act which formerly applied only to occupancy raiyats, was amended in 1907 and made applicable to all classes of raiyats. The period of two years prescribed by that Article for a suit, had already expired from the date of Plaintiff's dispossession, when the amending Act was passed and the Act came into operation at once. The question therefore is whether the amending Act applies to the present case. The case of Manjoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1), exactly covers the above point. The principle enunciated in that case has been recognised in Bisheswar v. Jasoda Lal (11), by the learned Chief Justice and Mallik, J., and the case has been followed in Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Husain (9), by Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., but has been dissented from by another Division Bench of this Court (Coxe and Ray, JJ.) in the unreported case (Second Appeal No. 4251 of 1910) decided on the 16th August 1913. The decision of the majority in Manjhoori Bibi's case (1) is binding on every Division Bench until it is overruled by a Full Bench of this Court or by the Privy Council The learned Judges Coxe and Ray, JJ, in the unreported case cited above, were of opinion that the matter is settled by the decision of the Privy Council in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2). With every respect for the opinion of the learned Judges, I think the Privy Council did not decide the point of law which arose in Manjhoori Bibi's case (1) and which has been raised in the present Appeal.

The Privy Council had not to consider the special limitation provided for in the Bengal Tenancy Act, nor any statute of limitation coming into operation at once.

The question before the Privy Council was whether the Limitation Ac XIV of 1859 or the Limitation Act XV of 1877 was applicable to the case, and their Lordships observed: "The High Court rightly holding that the law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding is the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding, unless there is a distinct provision to the contrary, held that Act XV of 1877 and not Act XIV of 1859 was the Lmitation Act which was applicable to the suit." As a general proposition, the principle enunciated in the above passage cannot be disputed apart from the fact that it is laid down by the Privy Council; and in fact is recognised in the Judgments of this Court in Manjhoori Bibi's case (1). But the question, viz, whether an Act amending even a statute of limitation when it comes into force at once applied retrospectively so as to affect causes of action which accrued before the amending Act came into force where the period prescribed by the amending Act had already expired before it came into operation, was not before, and was not considered by, their Lordships. The question was not, and could not be raised in the case before the Privy Council, because there was an interval of time between the passing of Act IX of 1871 which repealed Act XIV of 1859 and Act XV of 1877 which repealed Act IX of 1871 and their coming into operation respectively. The principle therefore upon which Manjhoori Bibi's case (1) was decided, could not possibly apply to the case which was before their Lordships. Their Lordships were not dealing exhaustively with the whole law on the subject of the retrospective operation of the law of limitation, and the general observations made by their Lordships should, I think, be held to apply only to the particular point which was raised before and considered by their Lordships.

The case of Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2), has been considered by another Division Bench of this Court in Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Husain (9), cited above. The learned Judges (Mukerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) treated the Privy Council decision as laying down merely that the law of limitation applicable to a suit is primâ facie the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit, and followed the ruling in Manjhoori Bibi's case (1). In the opinion of those learned Judges, therefore, the Privy Council did not overrule the law laid down in Manjhoori Bibi's case (1). I agree with the view taken in the case of Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Hussain (9), and I am of opinion that the suit is not barred by limitation.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterji (with Babus Ambica Pada Chowdhury and Probodh Chandra Dutta) for the Appellant:—In this case the dispossession by the landlord's assignee was in the beginning of July 1903, and the suit was commenced on the 9th July 1909. Under the law in force at the date of dispossession, the raiyat had twelve years to sue for the property. The amending Act came into operation the day it was passed, that is, on 11th May 1907. The effect of the amendment is to cut down the period from 12 years to 2 years from the date of dispossession, so that if the law is made to operate on pre-existing causes of action accruing more than two years before the law was passed, the Plaintiff was at once barred as soon as the Act came into force. The question therefore is—Is the amended Art. 3 retrospective in its operation? In other words, does the amended law apply retrospectively to causes of action which accrued more than the time limited by the new law, before the amending Act came into operation on 11th May 1907?

This point was considered in the case of under-raiyats under the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy Amendment Act which came into operation on the 10th June 1908, and was answered in the negative [Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1)] But Mr. Justice Fletcher in this case and a Division Bench in S. A. No. 425 of 1910 have taken the view that the dicision in Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1) is not correct; and at any rate has been affected by the dicision of the Privy Council in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2). Another Division Bench in Budhu Koer v. Hafiz Husain (9) has however held that the case in Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1) is not at all affected by the decision of the Privy Council in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2).

The case in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2) is distinguishable. A reference to the facts of that case makes it clear. There was an interval of time between the passing of Act IX of 1871 or of Act XV of 1877 and their coming into operation. As to the effect of an interval being given Bisheswar v. Jasoda Lal (11) and Towler v. Chatterton (12), Emperor v. Wilson (13), the Privy Council was not dealing exhaustively with the whole law on the subject of retrospective operation of the law of limitation. In that case even after Act XV came into operation, the mortgagor had about 25 years within which he could sue. No question of retrospective operation could arise, for the question was whether a right of action could be kept alive by a stranger as against a person not claiming through him. See Astbury v. Astbury (14) A statute as a general rule is prospective. See Young v. Adams (15), Abdus Samad v. Kushun Husain (16), Dulluh Dass. v. Ram Lal (17). What is the meaning of retrospective?—Affecting past transaction, Queen v.

Ipswich Union (18), Phillips v. Eyre (19), Wilberforce, pp. 157-58; or as affecting rights acquired before the passing of the Act, i.e., vested rights Turnbull v. Forman (20), West v. Gwynne (21) Maxwell (4th Ed.), pp. 321-23; Sedgwick, pp. 160. Right of action is a vested right Doe v. Page (22), Knight v. Lee (23), Jackson v. Woolley (7), Re Joseph Suche (24). A statute is prospective, unless a retrospective operation is clearly expressed in the statute in plain and unambiguous language. This is specially the case, when it affects vested rights of a limited class of persons Young v. Adams (15) or unless such a construction arises by necessary and distinct implication Smith v. Callander (25), West v. Gwynne (21), Jogodanund v. Amritalal (26) or where the enactment affects mere procedure and does not extend to vested rights. It is said, alterations in mere procedure are always retrospective, provided no injustice is done, but strictly speaking processual laws are not retrospective. See Turnbull v. Forman (20). An Act dealing with mere procedure cannot be rightly said to be retrospective, because it is only the subsequent procedure that it affects. Such an enactment cannot be said to affect any right which existed before it; statute of limitation is generally considered as dealing with procedure, i.e., as affecting the form of the remedy (Story on Conflict of Laws, 8th Ed., 576), but if it affects the substance of the right itself it is substantive law, Austen VII, p. 611; Foote, p. 424 Storey, Art. 582. See Krishna Mohun v. Okhilmoni (27), Gunga Gobinda v. Collector, 24-Perganahs (28). Even if it deals with mere procedure, it ought not to be retrospective. Hardship is a material element in the construction of doubtful enactments (Craies, 94, Sedgwick, 208) Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (29), Re Ratansi Kalianji (30).

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhury, for the Respondent, conceded that the application of the amended law to the case will cause hardship. But having regard to the broad principle laid down in Soniram's case (2), considerations of hardship are inadmissible, specially as in this case Plaintiff had four years to sue before the amendment. The Privy Council lays down the principle that in the absence of distinct provisions to the contrary, the new law would apply.

Similar questions of limitation arose also, when Act VIII of 1885 itself was passed.

Reads sec. 184, saving cl. (2). The converse case of enlargement of time is provided for, but not that of curtailment. Then the intention of the legislature must have been to make the amended limitation applicable to cases where the cause of action arose before the amendment.

[WOODROFFE, J.—The question referred is whether the Privy Council decision affects the correctness of the decision of this Court. That is the sole question.]

Then on that question there is a conflict.

[WOODROFFE, J.—The observation in Coxe and Ray, JJ.'s judgment was unnecessary.]

The principle is not whether the amending Act destroys a right of action, but whether it destroys a vested right. A right to sue is not a vested right. Cl. (2) of sec. 184, moreover, does by implication destroy the right to sue.

Refers to cases under the amended Art. 6, Thakamani v. Mohendra Nath (10); Art. 6 was amended at the same time as Art. 2. Right to execute a decree is as much a right as a right to sue.

Then look at the anomaly. A, whose cause of action arose 6 years before the amendment, has six years more after it to sue, whilst B, whose cause of action arose a year and 11 months before the amending Act, must sue within a month.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—It is no anomaly. It merely means that law which applies to one class of cases, does not apply to another.]

Here the class of persons is the same.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE. Asked if sec. 28 of the Limitation Act applied to cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act.]

Yes; Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1). Reads sec. 185.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE. Can you say that part IV of the Limitation Act is incorporated in Chap. XVI of the Bengal Tenancy Act.]

[STEPHEN, J.—The point is considered in Nund Kumar v. Ajodhya Sahu (34)].

Gunga Gobinda v. *Collector, 24 Pergana*s (28). As to Thakamani v. Mohendra Nath (10), the question there was whether a co sharer's decree for rent was a decree for rent or decree for money and that has been settled by the Privy Council in Pramada Nath v. Ramani Kanta (35)

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

Owing to a difference of opinion, a point of law has been stated by Mr. Justice Fletcher and Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea under sec. 98 of the C. P. C., and the appeal has accordingly been heard upon that point only by five of the other Judges of the Court. The point of law stated is "whether the decision of the majority in the case of Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1), has been affected by the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2)." The actual decision of the majority in Manjhoori Bibi's case (1), was that the special rule of limitation extended to under raiyats by the amendment in 1908 of the 3rd Article in the 3rd Schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply, where the dispossession was in 1898 and the suit for recovery of possession was instituted on the 25th of August 1908.

The judgment of the Privy Council in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2) was concerned not with the special law of limitation, but with the general law as enacted in Act XIV of 1859 and Act XV of 1877. The suit in that case was instituted on the 4th March 1907, and was brought for the redemption of a mortgage. One defence was the bar of limitation. The Plaintiff sought to meet this plea by setting up certain acknowledgments, and relied on the fact that they had been given, when Act XIV of 1839 was in force. On the other side, it was argued that the case was governed by Act XV of 1877, and so the Plaintiff could not claim the benefit of the law as to acknowledgments contained in the earlier Act. As to this it was said by the High Court: "the law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding is the law in force at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding, unless there is a distinct provision to the contrary: See Gurupadappa Basapa v. Virbhadrapa Irsemgapa (3). As Act No. XV of 1877 was in force when the suit was brought, and there is no provision in it limiting or postponing its application, sec 19 of that Act applied to the case." [Shib Shankar Lal v. Soniram (4)] This statement of the law was approved by the Privy Conncil on Appeal, and it is this approval that is supposed to have affected the decision of the majority in Manjhoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1). It certainly is not a decision on the same Act as that under consideration in Manjhoori Bibi's case, (1), and as it is the construction and effect of a different Act that was under consideration, the Privy Council judgment cannot be regarded as a direct authority on the Act not before it.

On the contrary, the essential conditions of the two cases are so distinct that in our opinion it cannot be said that the earlier decision is, in relation to the circumstances of this case, affected by the judgment of the Privy Council. It is an established axiom of construction that though procedure may be regulated by the Act for the time being in force, still, the intention to take away a vested right without compensation or any saving, is not to be imputed to the Legislature, unless it be expressed in unequivocal terms [cf. The Commissioner of Public Works v. Logan (5)]. That this view is not limited to those cases where rights of property in the limited sense are involved, is shown by the Colonial Sugar Refining Co v. Irving (6), where it was held that an Act ought not to be so construed as to deprive a suitor of an appeal in a pending action, which belonged to him as of right at the date of the passing of the Act. Equally is a right of suit a vested right, and in Jackson v. Woolley (7), the Court of Exchequer Chamber declined, in the absence of something putting the matter beyond doubt, to put on an Act a construction that would deprive any person of a right of action vested in him at the time of the passing of the Act. William, J. said: "It would require words of no ordinary strength in the statute to induce us to say that it takes away such a vested right."

Here the Plaintiff at the time when the amending Act was passed had a vested right of suit, and we see nothing in the Act as amended that demands the construction that the Plaintiff was thereby deprived of a right of suit vested in him at the date of the passing of the Amending Act. It is not (in our opinion) even a fair reading of sec. 184 and the Third Schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended to hold that it was intended to impose an impossible condition under pain of the forfeiture of a vested right, and we can only construe the amendment as not applying to cases where its provisions cannot be obeyed. The law as amended may regulate the procedure in suits in which the Plaintiff could comply with its provisions, but cannot (in our opinion) govern suits where such compliance was from the first impossible. Its effect is to regulate, not to confiscate. There are thus two positions; where in accordance with its provisions a suit could be brought after the passing of the amendment, it may be that the amendment will apply, but where it could not, then the amendment would have no application. The facts in Lala Soniram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2), did not involve the second of these positions, and we therefore hold that the decision of the majority in Manjoori Bibi v. Akel Mahumed (1), so far as it relates to that position, has not been affected by the judgment of the Privy Council in Lala Sumiram v. Kanhaiya Lal (2), though it may perhaps be affected, if and so far as it lays down a similar rule for suits within the first of the two positions. This, however, is a point not before us, and on it therefore we do not express any definite opinion. Our judgment is on the question of limitation only, and the result is that we restore the decree of the Munsif with costs throughout.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No 3830 OF 1910.

MUKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, 8, April.

CHOWDHURY KIRTIBAS DAS, v. GOPAL JIU.

Mortgage—Plea that mortgagee benamdar, if admissible—Sons of mortgagor if may take it.

A usual mortgage decree was obtained by a mortgagee who put it into execution and the sale of the mortgaged property was notified to take place on a certain date when the sons of the mortgagor brought a suit for declaration that they were not bound by the mortgage or by the decree made on the basis thereof on the ground that the Decree-holder was not the real mortgagee, but only the ostensible mortgagee for the benefit of a real creditor and consequently he was not entitled to enforce the security though it stood in his name:

Held—That the person named in the mortgage deed was entitled to sue on it and it was not competent to the mortgagor to dispute that the ostensible mortgagee was entitled to maintain the suit and the sons of the mortgagor were bound by the mortgage-bond equally with the executant and did not stand in any better position.

This was an Appeal from a decision of Babu Khetralal Singha, Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 23rd of August 1910, reversing that of Babu Rakhal Chandra Bose, Munsif, Puri, dated the 14th of June 1909.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Susil Madhab Mullick for Babu Provash Chandra Mitter for the Appellant.

Babu Suresh Chandra Chackraburtty for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the first Defendant in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for an injunction to restrain the sale thereof in execution of a mortgage decree. On the 7th October 1896 the first Defendant took a mortgage of the property from the other four Defendants. He subsequently sued to enforce the security and obtained the usual mortgage-decree on the 25th August 1899. The decree was put into execution in due course, and a proclamation was served on the 13th August 1908, under which the sale was notified to take place on the 15th September 1908. On the 25th August 1908, the Plaintiffs, who are the sons of the mortgagor, commenced this suit for declaration that they were not bound by the mortgage or by the decree made on the basis thereof, and, also for consequential relief. The Court of first instance held in substance that the Plaintiffs were bound by the mortgage transaction, and that they were only entitled to redeem, as they would have been if they had been made parties to the mortgage-suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision and given the Plaintiffs a decree, which practically nullifies the mortgage-decree to the extent of their interest in the property. The Subordinate Judge has based his judgment on the ground that the first Defendant was not the real mortgagee, that he was only the ostensible mortgagee for the benefit of a real creditor, and, that consequently he was not entitled to enforce the security though it stood in his name. In support of this position, he has invoked the authority of the decision in Mahendra Nath Mukherjee v. Kali Prosad Johuri (1). This view has been now assailed on behalf of the first Defendant as erroneous, and it has been contended that as the bond stood in his name, it was competent to him to sue to enforce the security. In support of this argument, reliance has been placed upon the case of Satchidanand Mahapatra v. Balaram Gorain (2), which was accepted as good law in Hara Gobinda v. Purna Chandra (3). In our opinion, there is no room for controversy that this contention is well-founded.

In the case of Satchidanand Mahapatra v. Balaram Gorain (2), it was ruled that a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage may be brought by the person named in the mortgage deed as the mortgagee, although he was in fact only the benamdar of the beneficial owner, and that such a suit should not be dismissed on the ground that the beneficial owner has not been joined as a party. The learned Judges add that the same point had been brought up for decision to this Court before and that it had been decided that the contract could be enforced by the parties who had entered into it and that the suit should not fail merely because the beneficial owner was not on the record. The earlier decision to which reference was thus made was apparently the case of Sreenath Nag v. Chandra Nath Ghose (4), where, as subsequently pointed out in the case of Bhubaneswar Roy v. Jogeswar Chowdhurani (5), it was ruled that in a case of mortgage where A advanced money taking a bond in the name of B, if a suit was afterwards brought in the name of B, the suit should not be defeated on the ground that he was merely the ostensible mortgagee; A was the person who sought to enforce the mortgage and as the Defendant had received the money from A, and chosen to contract with B, it did not lie in his mouth to object to the institution of the suit in the same form. It is clear, therefore, that if this suit were resisted by the mortgagor alone, it would not be competent to him to dispute that the ostensible mortgagee was entitled to maintain it. We are of opinion that the sons of the mortgagor, who are bound by the mortgage-bond equally with the executant, do not stant in any better position. The case of Mohendra Nath Mukerjee v. Kali Prosad Johury (1), where it was ruled that a benamdar as such is not entitled to maintain a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property which stands in his name, is plainly distinguishable and does not touch the question now before us. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Mitter in the case of Gopinath Chowbey v. Bhagwat Pershad (6), so long as benami system is recognised, it is to be presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that a suit instituted by a benamidar has been instituted with the full authority of the beneficial owner, and any decision made in such a suit is as much binding upon the real owner as if the suit had been brought by the real owner himself. Under these circumstances, we must hold that the ground assigned by the Subordinate Judge for his decision cannot be supported.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with one variation. The Court of first instance allowed the Plaintiffs to redeem within three months from the 14th June 1909 and directed that in the mortgage accounts interest was to be calculated only up to date of the judgment. The time fixed for redemption has long since elapsed and we understand that the Plaintiffs have not availed themselves of the opportunity afforded to them. In the circumstances of the present case, we think that as the decision of the first Court is to be restored, a fresh date must be fixed for redemption. Noor Ali v. Koni Meah (7), Nam Narain v. Raghunath (8), Tarachand v. Brojo Gopal (9). We accordingly direct that the records be sent down to the Court of first instance and that accounts be taken of the sum due under the mortgage-decree up to the date of the account (Kedar Lal v Bishen (10), Gangadas v. Jogendra (11), Gurdeo v. Chandrika (12) and that the Plaintiffs be allowed to redeem within 15 days of the date when the sum payable for redemption has been notified to them after determination by the Court of first instance. The Defendant Appellant is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below. If the Plaintiffs do not redeem within the time allowed, the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Sir Henry Prinsep and Public Services Commission.

We publish below a letter from Sir Henry Prinsep which speaks for itself. We express our sincere regret for having done him the injustice of expressing our opinion, in ignorance of the fact mentioned in his letter, that it would have been better, if he had offered to give evidence before the Public Services Commission instead of writing to the "Nineteenth Century" on the questions awaiting the deliberations of the Royal Commission. We are also surprised to learn that he did actually offer to give evidence before the Commission and the Commission did not consider it worth their while to examine him. We have no hesitation in saying that the Commission has committed a blunder in not receiving the evidence of this veteran Indian Official. There are few members of the Indian Civil Service who have had such a thorough and practical experience of the Executive, Revenue and Judicial administration in Bengal. As Judge he and the late Mr. Justice Macpherson commanded unbounded confidence not only of the legal profession, but also of the litigating public and their example is worthy of emulation by the members of the Indian Civil Service who are desirous of qualifying themselves for the High Court Bench.

Report of the Prisoners' Aid Society.

The Report of the Calcutta Prisoners' Aid Society which was laid before its General Committee at a meeting held in the Old Sessions Court of the Calcutta High Court on Friday last shows a steady advancement of the objects of the Society. During 1913, 71 prisoners were helped, of whom 28 were Europeans and 43 Indians. The former received a temporary aid in the shape of food and clothing and passage money as preliminary to their settling down in life or finding some employment. The total cost incurred on their behalf was Rs. 263 6-9. Of the Indians, all except five were helped in the Society's Book-binding shop. The monthly average of men employed in the book-shop was 22.5, and the wages paid to them during the year amounted to Rs. 2,201-13 8. The working of the Society regarded even from a business point of view is also very satisfactory as the following figures would show.

> The year opened with a balance of Rs. 5,856 7-2, the receipts amounted to Rs. 9 635 9-1, the expenditure to Rs. 9,316 12-9 and the year closed with a balance of Rs 6,175-3-6 with an additional sum of Rs. 269-12-0 due to be credited to the closing balance.

The Society has during the year incorporated itself under sec. 26 of the Companies Act. The Society is to be congratulated for having been able to acquire a very desirable site in Rani Sarnamoyi's Road near Sealdah, a plot of land, one bigha and three cottahs, through the co-operation of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation and the Bengal Government. The Government of Bengal paid Rs. 26,450 for the acquisition of the land and imposed the condition amongst others that the Society should be registered under the Companies Act. The estimated cost of the building and the boundary wall that the Society propose to put up there is Rs. 27,000 and the Society also propose to acquire new machinary and plant for book-binding and printing which is likely to cost Rs. 3,000. The Society is thus urgently in need of this money and having regard to the very useful work they have been doing, we are sure that they will receive more generous support from both the legal profession and the public than they have hitherto. We invite particular attention to the following appeal with which the Report for the year 1913 closes.

> It will be noticed that our subscription list for 1913 falls short of the Rs 2,500 0 0 which we stated last year that we required: and an analysis of the names of the subscribers shows that some branches of the Profession are not as fully represented as could be wished We are, however, now asking for capital in order to make a fresh start on a permanent basis. Hitherto, we have been trying experiments in any way that suggested itself. After seven years' experience, we feel that we are justified in appealing to our record of the work we have done, as a reason why the Society should be put on a footing that may enable us to develop our work as far as is possible

The Incorporated Law Society's Lecture course for articled clerks.

The Incorporated Law Society has, we are glad to see, arranged for a course of lectures to be given to Articled Clerks on the subject in which they are to be examined. The movement is a good one, and we wish the Society every success in its undertaking and congratulate its Committee upon this fresh evidence of their energy. The lectures at present arranged are as follows:—The Law relating to Solicitors—Mr. M. M. Chatterjee, M. A., B. L., Hindu and Mahomedan Law—Mr. Raj Chunder Chunder, M. A., Criminal Law and Practice—Mr. A. E. Martelli, B. A., Commercial Law—Mr. F. M. Leslie, B. A. Mr. Gonesh Chunder Chunder gave an inaugural lecture to Articled Clerks on Saturday the 9th May 1914, and while publishing the same, we commend his words not merely to those who hope to become Solicitors, but to many others.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Appeal—Transfer of Property Act.

M. NARASAYA v. UNDU ROJAHA, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 1.

There is not to be found in the sections of the Code which relate to the powers of an Appellate Court or in the rules any provision which corresponds to Or. LVIII, r. 1 of the English rules of the Supreme Court that all appeals shall be by way a re-hearing and it cannot be said that a statute passed during the pendency of an appeal should control the decision thereof.

Sec. 51 of the Act does not apply in terms as between landlord and tenant.

Sec. 269, C. P. C. (Act XIV of 1882)—Rules framed under.

RE THE DISTRICT MUNSIF OF TIRUVALLUR, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 17.

Until rules are made by the High Court, the rules made by Government under sec. 269 of the Code of Civil Procedure are in force.

Sale by Court—Evidence.

VIRUTHMOYEE v. RAMANUJA ROW, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 220.

The state of the law as understood at the time is evidence to be considered with the other evidence in the particular case in determining what the Court intended to sell and what the purchaser understood that he bought. In determining the question of what the Court intended to sell and the purchaser understood he bought, evidence as to how the parties affected by the transaction themselves viewed it at the time is of much greater value than evidence which may be procurable some twenty years after the transaction took place.

Decree which cannot be appealed against.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. SAMINATHA KOWNDEN, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 25.

Where the decree is entirely in favour of the Appellant, he cannot appeal against it.

Civil Procedure Code, s. 2, 47.

LAKSHMI v. MARU DEVI, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 29.

According to sec. 2, C. P. C., "the determination of any questions within sec. 47" is a decree. The question whether a decree is executable or not is certainly one that comes within this definition.

Guardians and Wards Act, sec. 7 (2).

ARUMACAN CHETTI v. DURALSINGA TEVOR, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 38.

The Court's order appointing a guardian under the Act will have the effect of removing any other guardian.

The want of authority of a de facto guardian is a good defence to a suit brought by a mortgagee to enforce his mortgage against a minor.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, r. 46.

NATARAJA IYER v. THE SOUTH INDIAN BANK, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 51.

The language of r. 46 which treats as moveable property a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument is undoubtedly wide enough to cover a debt secured by a hypothecation bond or a simple mortgage.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,—It is unfortunate that you omitted to send it to me before, because I now learn for the first time of your criticism of my article in the Nineteenth Century Magazine on the Indian Civil Service. At this distance of time it is impossible to continue any discussion on this subject much as I would desire to do so.

But there is one portion of your comments that calls for a protest from me. You have stated that you "think on the whole that it would be more consistent with dignity and conducive to public interest if Indian Civilians in retirement who have any advice to offer to the Commission were to come forward as witnesses instead of contributing articles to periodicals." And you accuse me of thus attempting to mislead the Public Services Commission in a manner which amounts practically to a contempt of Court, seeing that it performs quasi-judicial functions, though it may not be technically so.

You are no doubt aware that the Public Services Commission is competent to invite any one to appear before it for examination, and I think that I may also take it that you have observed that the Commission has not thought proper to examine one of the numerous Indian Civilians in London who have retired after long service in India. To exclude the evidence of these cannot have been expected, by you—and yet it has been so. I certainly had some reason to believe that at least in determining the future of the Judicial Service in India, my evidence would have been valuable. It will probably surprise you to learn after your remarks that I have quoted, that my endeavour to get examined more than one year ago was met by being told that the Commission did not intend to take any evidence in England on the first part of their inquiry as they were satisfied with the immense mass of evidence that they had taken in India. A prominent Member of the Public Services Commission, before his appointment to it, held up the opinions of "sundried bureaucrats" to derision. The Commission has certainly not removed this stigma, the justice of which I venture to hope will not be accepted in India.

THE EDITOR,
Calcutta Weekly Notes.

DEAR SIR,

With the permission of the Officiating Registrar I now send you a copy of his letter to me No. 938, dated the 16th May 1914. The matter to which it relates is of much concern to the Public and the Profession and I trust that in the interests of all concerned, you will find room for Mr. Remfry's letter in your hospitable columns.

Yours faithfully,

MAURICE REMFRY, ESQ.,

TO

THE HONORARY SECRETARY,
Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta.

Present:
The Hon'ble
The Chief Justice.
Mr. Justice Chitty.
Mr Justice Chaudhuri.
Mr. Justice Imam.

SIR,

Complaints as to the length of time some cases have appeared on the Peremptory list of defended cases have been brought to the attention of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and the Judges on the Original Side. I have the honour to inform you that the position has been carefully considered, and in the opinion of their Lordships the most satisfactory solution is as follows:—

The Peremptory list of defended cases before each Judge on the Original Side should ordinarily contain fifteen cases. Every case, however, shall be liable to be heard on any day it appears on the list, not necessarily by the Judge on whose list it stands at the beginning of the day; but, by any other Judge if the exigencies of business so require, as where a list breaks down. This will apply to all defended cases, whether Commercial Liquidated Claim, or otherwise. In all cases, therefore, appearing on the Peremptory list the parties must be prepared to go to trial, and applications for adjournment will not be entertained on the ground that the parties are not ready either by reason of the absence of witnesses or the difficulty of obtaining the services of their Counsel or otherwise.

I am directed to ask you to place this letter before your Committee or Members and that any suggestions you may desire to make be sent to me as early as possible.

I am further directed to request you to call the attention of your members to the new Rules regarding the prospective lists, which are not being utilized to the extent they should be.

I have the honour to be,
SIR,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) MAURICE REMFRY,
Offg. Registrar.

MR. G. C. CHUNDER'S ADDRESS TO ARTICLED CLERKS.

GENTLEMEN,—The objects of the Incorporated Law Society are, among other things, to promote honourable practice to repress malpractice . . . . to decide all questions of professional usage or courtesy between or among Solicitors, to encourage the study of law by articled clerks and to promote information on legal subjects by lectures and discussions.

It has been lately noticed by the members of our profession and of the Bar that the young men who have lately joined our ranks, though qualified in other respects, are not up to the proper mark in their work for this profession specially on the practical side of it It has been frequently observed with great regret that the character of some Solicitors requires to be looked after, and that our Society should have for its object the promotion of honourable practice and repression of malpractice. It is lamentable that there should be occasion for this state of things, and this, among other objects, should have to be placed prominently before the young men of the profession. It has been decided by our Committee that attempts should be made by availing of the services of well-known members of the profession to have a series of lectures on those matters for which the present articled clerks have no other means of acquiring any knowledge or idea.

The object of these lectures is to assist you in obtaining such practical insight into the profession as is expected to be of use and value to you in after life.

Our profession is one of great responsibility, and being in direct touch with clients and having the conduct of their affairs under our guidance, the responsibility becomes very onerous, and imposes great circumspection and foresight in our dealings with them. You should never lose sight of this aspect and spare no effort to act with that due and deliberate caution which the urgency of the occasion would require, and let it be a rule with you that you should never jump to a conclusion and proffer your advice, unless you are convinced yourself of the soundness and propriety of the course you would advise to be followed. Conscientious discharge of your duties is sure to ensure result to the satisfaction of yourself and your client. You should never consider it a trouble or worry, when you undertake to do a work, to give a patient hearing to all the narration your client has to make. Do not forget that the client is not a trained lawyer and has not that insight into the mysteries of law which would enable you to understand his position and locate his rights or wrongs. He would talk, as he would think best or as he had been told by his numerous lay advisers to talk to you. Your duty will be to get out of him all such facts and circumstances as would enable you to advise him A careful perusal of all written documents shall always be your rule, for therein you will find safe and sure indications of the course pursued by your client and of the intentions he had in view in his dealings and help you to fix the line of conduct you may adopt or advise him to adopt. Be pains-taking and thorough in the foundation you lay, for a weak foundation will not admit of a desirable structure. Always keep in mind that the ground work, if properly laid, would relieve you of great anxieties in the future construction and maintenance of your work.

You should always aim to be accurate and precise in all your communications. It need hardly be pointed out that the habit of accuracy and precision, if once acquired, would be very helpful in your dealings, and you would be able to grapple with your subject rather than wander about it.

You should always be plain and straightforward in your work. This will make it easy for you to find out what you have to do and what is required, if you and your work would go on smoothly

Your dealings with your colleagues in the profession should be that of a gentleman with a gentleman. You will remember that your colleague is similarly situated as you are, and has common interest with you in maintaining the welfare of the profession. Frank and sincere dealings will facilitate rather than impede work, and will tend to cultivate feelings of comradeship which should be the aim and object of members of the same profession.

You should always bear in mind that you owe a duty to the community and that duty can be discharged faithfully, if you are honest and sincere. Your object should be not to foment litigation or encourage the same, but to guide it honourably and conscientiously.

The effects of litigation on the community have been discussed in other spheres, but I regret to say not to the credit of the profession. Your aim should be to make united efforts to remove so much of the stigma as is possible, and I can tell you from my own experience that an honest effort to minimise the evils of litigation and to avert the recklessness of litigants has never been unsuccessful.

Finally, I have to say a few words as to what you should do after your enrolment. You should not forget the oath of allegiance to the Soverign and you should lead a respectable life and become useful members of the community. You should not fancy to yourself that your success in the various examinations in law you had to undergo has given you a full and perfect knowledge of law. Always bear in mind that law is a progressive science and a study of it is necessary to keep you abreast of the times. I find in my experience that many promising young men having neglected to keep up their study, marred their prospects in the profession. Apart from the delight you will feel in noticing and appreciating the gradual development of legal principle as embodied in judgments of the Courts of law and the masterly text-books you will derive this practical benefit that you will be always up to date and would never feel embarrassed or taken aback in your work The stigma attached to an inadequately informed legal adviser brings discredit not only to himself, but to the profession, and I am sure you will always keep prominently before you the dignity of the profession, and you will not hesitate to contribute your share in maintaining and upholding the same. If you are well stocked in your legal knowledge and be of good cheer and exemplary in the discharge of the duties you owe to Society and do not depart from the path of rectitude in your conduct, you are sure to be successful to the benefit of yourself, welfare of the community and honour of the profession.

We are all very thankful to those gentlemen, who have kindly offered to give lectures from time to time in furtherance of the objects of our society, and we also thank those gentlemen who have suggested this course of action.

May the lectures so to be delivered be productive of real good to the young men to whom they are to be addressed, and may those lectures be of permanant benefit to this Society in general and to those who are qualifying themselves for being admitted as attorneys in particular.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARNDUFF, and CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 3930 OF 1910. ABDUL GANI SAFIANI, Plaintiff, Appellant v. LUTFUNNESSA BIBI and others, Defendants, Respondents. 15th April 1914.

Second appeal—Law, question of—Misreading of deposition—Deposition by a deceased member—Admissibility in evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 32, cl. (5).

The suit was for recovery of possession after declaration of title to a share in certain immoveable property originally belonging to a Mahomedan family. The suit was dismissed by both the Courts below.

In a suit brought in 1885, Kamaruddin whose estate was represented by Lutfunnessa Bibi, one of the Respondents, and who was a member of a Mahomedan family, had deposed that his father's step brother Dagu had predeceased the latter's father Najeemuddin. The lower Appellate Court said:—"If so, Dagu never succeeded to any share in the property in suit, and the Plaintiff, who purchased from a descendant of Dagu, clearly had no title." Held, that this misreading of the deposition was not a question of law. Himmut Ali v. Nyamutoolah (1875) 23 W. R. 250, referred to.

The deposition by a member of a family as to the non-existence at a particular time of one who had also been a member of it, was admissible under sec. 32 cl. (5) of the Evidence Act.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
LORD MOULTON.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard,
11, March.
Judgment,
25, March.

HARENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHURI, Appellant,
v.
SRIMATI HARI DASI DEBI and others, Respondents.

Registration in fraud of Registration law—Fictitious entry of property to give jurisdiction to Registering officer in Calcutta to register a mortgage of properties in mofussil—Suit on mortgage in Original Side—Jurisdiction—Decree if binds purchaser after mortgage and before decree—Amendment of description of parcels so as to bring document within Court's jurisdiction, if binds strangers—Rectification—Mutual mistake—Onus—Evidence of mistake—Admissibility—Concurrent finding of fact, based on no evidence.

When in order to obtain registration at the office of the Sub-Registrar of a particular district, of a conveyance relating to properties no part of which is situate within that district, the parties to the conveyance make a fictitious entry of an item of property purporting to be within that district, the entry is a fraud on the Registration law and registration obtained by means thereof is invalid.

Such a fictitious entry in the conveyance cannot give jurisdiction to a Court, whose jurisdiction is limited to deeds concerning immoveable properties within that District, to entertain a suit to enforce such conveyance.

The inclusion of non-existing property purporting to be situate within the District would not, even apart from fraud, give the Sub-Registrar authority to register the document, nor jurisdiction to the Court whose jurisdiction is limited to properties within that district to entertain a suit to enforce the document, and its decree would be invalid.

Where in such a suit, the Court at the instance of the parties allowed the description of the property to be so amended as to correspond to property actually existing within its jurisdiction and then, holding that it had jurisdiction, passed a decree :

Held—That the decision that it had jurisdiction, if erroneous, could not extend the jurisdiction of a Court of limited territorial jurisdiction, and neither the direction to amend nor the decree could bind strangers who had acquired title in the property before the date of the amendment, nor render valid the registration—if they could establish that no portion of the property conveyed was within the jurisdiction of the Registering officer.

Quære :—Whether such amendment came within the scope of the suit which was in no respect a suit for rectification.

The proper description of houses in towns for the purpose of registration is by the street in which they are situated and the number which they bear in that street.

Where a stranger to a mortgage-decree passed in the Original Side of the High Court, who had previous thereto acquired a title in property actually intended to be conveyed (all of which was outside Calcutta) proved that there was no property in Calcutta bearing the street name and number given to the only item of Calcutta property included in the mortgage, and that the property in Calcutta which in fact answered the description of that property by metes and bounds given in the mortgage deed did not belong to the mortgagor :

Held—That the onus of proving (as it was open to him to prove) that there was a clerical or other error in the description of the property and that in fact an existing property situated in Calcutta was intended by both parties to be mortgaged was on the mortgagee decree holder.

That to prove this the mortgagee should have examined himself as also his mortgagor.

That as no evidence whatever was given to prove this case, it was not open to the Courts in India to come to the conclusion that the entry of the property was a mistake.

Evidence to show that the mortgagor had purported to mortgage with other mortgagees the same property under the same description and had been compelled by them to consent to rectification was irrelevant at the trial to prove that the entry in the document was a mistake.

That the principle of concurrent findings of fact did not apply to such a case as it was a case of no evidence, and it was open to the Privy Council to hold from the conduct of the mortgagee in not examining himself or his mortgagor and from other evidence in the case, that the entry was intentionally fictitious.

A decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law.

This is an Appeal from the Judgment and two several decrees, dated the 3rd March, 1909, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which reversed the decree, dated the 31st May, 1906, of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapur in Suit No. 318 of 1905.

The said suit related to a half-share formerly held by Fakir Chandra in Mahal Gumokpota, situated in the district of Midnapur. The said lands were attached before Judgment in Suit No. 16 of 1892, brought by Hari Dasi, Respondent, against the said Fakir Chandra. That suit resulted in a decree for Rs. 20,800 and the attachment was continued and renewed after decree. While the property was under attachment, Hari Dasi paid Rs. 1,700 in respect of arrears of Government dues on the lands and got a decree for the amount against Fakir Chandra and obtained a decree declaring this sum to be a charge on the lands. A further sum having accrued due thereon for road-cess the said lands subject to attachment were brought to sale in 1893 and purchased for Rs. 800 by one Marik who sold them to Hari Dasi. Subsequently, only small sums having been paid towards satisfaction of the Decree in Suit No. 16 of 1892 Hari Dasi proceeded to execute it by the sale of the lands which were bought by Hari Dasi. She then obtained a certificate of sale in the ordinary course and she afterwards mortgaged them to the third Respondent.

In 1895 Mani Mohan mortgaged the said lands to the present Appellant. The mortgage deed purported to mortgage inter alia a house 25 Raja Gurudas's Street in Calcutta and this led the Registrar of Assurances in Calcutta to register it, and the High Court to pass a decree thereon to which Hari Dasi was not a party.

On the 16th September, 1905, the present Appellant instituted the present suit against Hari Dasi and her mortgagee joining Mani Mohan as second Defendant pro forma, and he prayed for inter alia a declaration "that no right of ownership or possession has accrued to the female Defendant" in the said lands "by virtue of her auction-purchase as described in the plaint." The Plaintiff's case was that the decree in Suit No. 16 of 1892 was fraudulent on the part of Hari Dasi and collusive and was barred by limitation at the date on which it was executed.

On the pleadings issues were framed as follows :—

HARENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHURI v. SRIMATI HARI DASI DEBI.

1st. Has the Plaintiff any cause of action for this suit?

2nd. Has the Plaintiff any right to maintain this suit?

3rd. Is the suit barred by limitation?

4th. Is the suit barred under Civil Procedure Code, sec. 244?

5th. Is the suit maintainable in its present form?

6th. Is the plaint properly stamped?

7th. Did the Defendant No. 1 acquire any title to the property in question by her alleged purchase in execution of the decree stated in the plaint?

8th. Is the Plaintiff entitled to the relief prayed for?

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was not barred by limitation and that it was maintainable as framed. He further held that Hari Dasi acquired no title by her purchase at the Court sale, and that the lands were the property of her husband, whom he considered the real purchaser from Marik. He further recorded his finding that the agreement of compromise and the deed of release were the deeds of Hari Dasi and were binding on her. He overruled the objections taken to the mortgage and decree held by the Plaintiff in the following words:—

"It is contended that the Plaintiff has no right to bring this suit. The contention is this:—the Plaintiff is the mortgagee of Mani Mohan who mortgaged the disputed property which is in Midnapur, some property in Hooghly, and a house, 25, Raja Gurudas's Street, in Calcutta. The mortgage deed was registered by the Sub-Registrar of Calcutta. Now it is admitted on all hands, and, in fact, it is proved that there is no such house as 25 Raja Gurudas's Street. The Plaintiff's case is that what was mortgaged was 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane, Calcutta, and not 25 Raja Gurudas's Street. The defence is, that 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane, did not belong to Mani Mohan. So, there was no property of Mani Mohan in Calcutta that had been mortgaged, and so the Sub-Registrar of Calcutta had no jurisdiction to register the deed, and the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction had no jurisdiction to try the mortgage-suit instituted by the Plaintiff, and that, consequently, the decree obtained by the latter was passed without jurisdiction, and is a nullity.

"First, as regards the title to the house in question. It is admitted by the Plaintiff's pleader that there is no such house as No. 25, Raja Gurudas's Street. The Plaintiff's case is that it was mistaken for 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane. It appears from the deed of rectification (Ex. 20) executed by Mani Mohan in favour of one Preo Nath Bose, when he had executed a mortgage, that Mani Mohan by mistake had mortgaged 25, Raja Gurudas's Street, whereas it should be 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane. This was in October 1897. The deed of rectification does not, however, state that 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane belongs to Mani Mohan.

"From the evidence adduced it appears that this house belonged to one Nistarini Debi, who sold it to Basanta Kumari Dasi, by a registered kobala in Falgun 1214 = March 1888. It appears that Basanta Kumari mortgaged this house to one Hem Chandra Mukerji, and then sold the house to Khemankari Debi on the 13th January 1890. This Khemankari paid the mortgage-money, and Hem Chandra Mukerji executed a deed of release in favour of Khemankari on the 15th January 1890. So, it will appear that the house never belonged to Mani Mohan. At the time of the mortgage to the Plaintiff, the house belonged to Basanta Kumari, and, when Mani Mohan executed his deed of rectification in October 1897, the title of the house had passed from Basanta Kumari to Khemankari Debi.

"So, it is urged that when the mortgage-deed did not cover any property in Calcutta which belonged to Mani Mohan, the Sub Registrar of Calcutta had no jurisdiction to register the document, that is, the question is—if the mortgagor had no property of his own in Calcutta, was the bond (registered as it was by the Sub-Registrar of Calcutta) duly registered? I am of opinion that the Sub-Registrar of Calcutta would have jurisdiction if the bond purported to mortgage any property actually existing in Calcutta. Sec. 28 of the Registration Act enacts that a Sub-Registrar has jurisdiction to register a document when the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situated within his sub-district. In the case before me, the document certainly relates to an existing property in Calcutta, and the Sub-Registrar had jurisdiction to register the document if the description as required by sec. 21 (b), sufficiently identified the property. Sec. 28 does not say that the property to which the document relates must belong to the executant of the document, and the Registrar or the Sub-Registrar cannot, of course, enter into the question of title. A mistake in the number or the name of the Street would not, I think, invalidate the registration provided the boundaries, area &c., sufficiently identify the property.

"Here I may state that the boundaries of the house and the area of the land on which the house stands, as given in the mortgage-deed, tally exactly with those given in Nistarini's kobala in favour of Basanta Kumari. So the description given in the mortgage deed identifies 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane. The number also agrees, only the name of the Street was a mistake. Then I may say Raja Gurudas's Street and Ashutosh Dey's Lane are very near to each other. I hold that the description is sufficient to identify the property and the Full Bench decision in Baijnath Tewari v. Sheo Sahoy Bhagut (1), does not apply.

"I, therefore, hold that the registration was valid. It has not been suggested that there was any other irregularity; and, even if there was any other defect in procedure by the Sub-Registrar, the same may be cured by sec. 87 of the Registration Act.

Then the question is raised whether the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain and decree the Plaintiff's suit on the mortgage-bond. I am inclined to answer the question in the affirmative. The proper scope of a mortgage suit is to cut off the equity of redemption, and to bar the rights of the mortgagor and of those claiming under him. Other persons cannot be made parties to a mortgage-suit, and the mortgagor's title to any of the properties comprised in the mortgage cannot be investigated in such a suit. [See the elaborate judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee, reported in Joggeshur v. Bhuban Mohan (2)]. Under cl. 12 of the Calcutta Letters Patent of 1865, the High Court has jurisdiction to try suits relating to lands lying wholly or partly within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the said Court. And, I think, the jurisdiction of the Court would not be ousted, even if the Plaintiff fails to establish his right to that part of the property which lies within the local limits of its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction. It may be otherwise, if the Plaintiff fraudulently includes a property in his plaint for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the High Court. But, in a suit on a mortgage-bond comprising properties in Calcutta and outside, the Plaintiff mortgagee can hardly be found to be guilty of such a fraud. In fact, there is absolutely nothing before me to hold that the Plaintiff is guilty of such a fraud. I hold that the High Court's decree is valid, and the Plaintiff is entitled to bring this suit." He made a decree in Plaintiff's favour.

HARENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHURI v. SRIMATI HARI DASI DEBI.

Against the said decree appeals were preferred by Hari Dasi and her mortgagee the third Respondent.

The said Appeals came on for hearing before the High Court in December, 1908, and judgment was delivered on 3rd March, 1909.

Their Lordships (Caspersz and Lalmohun Dass, JJ.,) held that the Plaintiff's mortgage and decree were not invalid. They also were of opinion that the suit was not barred by limitation or by the provisions of Civil Procedure Code, sec. 244. On the other hand they negatived the existence of any collusion between Hari Dasi and her husband and expressed the view that he imposed on her. They held that the release and agreement above referred to were invalid as against Hari Dasi, even if she executed them, observing: "We are not satisfied on the evidence in the present case that Hari Dasi executed those documents under independent advice and with a full comprehension of their true significance." On the question what right Marik acquired on his purchase, the judgment was to the effect that he took the lands subject to the ultimate result of Suit No. 16 of 1892 and to the attachment made in that suit, of which he had full notice. In the result they held that the title being in Hari Dasi, the Plaintiff by his mortgage obtained no right in the land. Their judgment on the point of registration of the mortgage and the jurisdiction of the High Court was in these words:—

"On the 1st and 2nd contentions we entertain no doubt that the registration of the Plaintiff's mortgage, by the Sub-Registrar of Calcutta, was valid, and that Mr. Justice Sale's decree was one which it was competent to him to pass By cl. 12 of the Charter, the High Court has jurisdiction in the case of "suits for land or other immoveable property situated within the local limits of its Original Jurisdiction." Mr. Justice Sale was satisfied that the property, item No. 28 of the mortgage, described as 25, Raja Gurudas's Street, was, in reality, 25, Ashutosh Dey's Lane. Apart from the question of fraud, as to which there is no indication or evidence, we also are satisfied, on a comparison of the boundaries in the conveyance, dated the 13th January 1896, Ex A (a), and the boundaries in the Deed of Release, dated the 15th January 1896 (Ex. P.) with the boundaries of item No. 28 of the Plaintiff's mortgage, that the property is one and the same. Moreover, in the absence of fraud, the Court's jurisdiction would be regulated by the situation of the land, and it would not be affected by considerations of title to the land so situated. Cases are of frequent occurrence where it is found by the Court that the Plaintiff has no title to the property with which he has been dealing, but such a finding has never been held, so far as we are aware, to invalidate the judgment of the Court, or to take away its jurisdiction ab initio to investigate the title set up. A contrary conclusion would result in the gravest inconsistencies. No doubt, Hari Dasi may show, under sec. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act, that Mr. Justice Sale's decree was passed without jurisdiction, or that it was obtained by the practice of fraud, but she has not succeeded in so doing. Moreover, that decree was passed on the basis of a registered deed of mortgage. Sec. 28 of the Registration Act, III of 1877, provides that every document, such as a mortgage, shall be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub district the whole or some portion of the property, to which such document relates, is situate. Sec. 30 (b) of the Act says that that the Registrar of a district, including a Presidency-town, may receive and register any document referred to in sec. 28 without regard to the situation in any part of British India of the property to which the document relates. It has not been shown to us that the Registrar of Calcutta registers any documents. It has not been argued, and it would be impossible to argue, that a Sub Registrar is authorized by law to make any enquiry into the title of an executant of any document presented for registration; Raj Chunder Bundoo v. Rajessory Dossee (3). The scheme of the Registration Act is that registration can be effected in respect of properties purporting to be situated within the area assigned to the Registering officer. In Jogini Mohan Chatterji v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (4) the decision of Ameer Ali, J. in Jogini Mohan v. Bhoot Nath (5) was reversed on the question of fact, but the principle of the Full Bench decision in Baijnath Tewari v. Sheo Sahoy Bhagut (1) remains untouched. If there had been no property within the local limits of the Sub-Registry Office, Calcutta, the registration of the Plaintiff's mortgage deed would have been invalid as being in contravention of the provisions of the Registration Act. The facts of the present case are quite different. The 28th item of property mortgaged was within the local limits of Calcutta, and the question of title to that item of property is beside the point. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Defendants Appellants cannot succeed on either the first or second contention."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C, and Mr. O'Gorman submitted for the Appellant that Bhagirath by his purchase on the 14th August 1893 acquired an absolute title to the property in dispute free from all claims thereto by Hari Dasi and that the High Court had erred in holding that Hari Dasi under her purchase made in 1904 acquired a title which overrode that acquired by Bhagirath. (It is unnecessary to report this part of the argument as their Lordships have decided the Appeal on an objection taken on behalf of the Respondent.)

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., Mr. A. M. Dunne and Mr. K. Brown for the Respondents submitted that the decree made by the Calcutta High Court on the basis of the mortgage, dated the 23rd September 1895, was without jurisdiction. Moni Mohan had no right to register the mortgage in Calcutta, as no part of the mortgaged property was situate in Calcutta. Both the Courts below had found, and it was not denied that there was no such property as premises No. 25 Raja Gurudas Street, Jorasunko, as was described Parcel No. 28 in the Schedule attached to the mortgage. It was purely a ficticious property frauduently entered in the deed in order to bring the suit in the Calcutta High Court. There was no evidence upon the record that a mistake had been committed in describing Parcel No. 28; neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee deposed that there was such a mistake. The Subordinate Judge was not justified in relying upon the deed of rectification (Exhibit No. 20) and in holding that Parcel No. 28 was really No. 25 Ashutosh Dey's Lane in Calcutta. In any case there was no evidence to show that Moni Mahan had any title whatever to No. 25 Ashutosh Dey's Lane. The registration of the deed was effected by a Registrar who had no jurisdiction in that behalf under sec. 28, Registration Act, III of 1877. The deed did not operate as a mortgage under sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 and the decree of the Calcutta High Court was without jurisdiction and was not binding on the Respondents who were no parties thereto. Reliance was placed on Jogini Mohan v. Bhoot Nath (5).

Mr. L. De Gruyther in reply :—The Appellant obtained a decree from a competent Court which had jurisdiction to make the decree. It was for that Court to decide whether a bond in dispute operated as a mortgage or not. That question had been finally decided by the High Court. The High Court had jurisdiction to try the suit under clause 12, Letters Patent, 1865. It was not essential for the purposes of jurisdiction that the mortgagor must have a title to the property in order to give jurisdiction to a Sub-Registrar. The Registering officer is not entitled to enquire into titles. He is required to register a deed if the document relates to a property situate within his jurisdiction. In any case it was a mere misdescription, and could not vitiate the decree. Both the Courts below had concurrently found that a mistake was committed in describing Parcel No. 28.

The suggestion of fraud had been negatived by the Courts below and it ought not to be held that the decree was made without jurisdiction because of a mistake.

Reference was made to the following authorities :—Hari Ram v. Sheodial Ram (6), Mohammad Ewaz v. Brij Lall (7).

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Lord Moulton.—In this Appeal the Appellant Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri is the Plaintiff in the action which was commenced by a plaint filed on the 16th September 1905. The claim of the Plaintiff was based on a mortgage decree dated 28th July 1905, granted in a Civil suit in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, acting under its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. That mortgage decree purported to enforce an English mortgage of the 23rd September 1895 executed by the pro formâ Defendant Moni Mohan Roy in favour of the Plaintiff of certain properties, among which was an eight-anna share of lands known as Mahal Gumokpota. The object of the present suit is to obtain a declaration that the female Defendant Hari Dasi Debi acquired no right of ownership or possession in that property by virtue of an auction-purchase made by her on the 23rd of November 1904. It is therefore brought to establish the title of the Plaintiff to those lands as being lands charged under his mortgage and subject to the decree free from any prior right of the female Defendant.

The transactions between the parties to the suit and the litigation arisen therefrom are of the most complex character, and raise questions of considerable difficulty, both in fact and law. But the Respondents, at the hearing of the Appeal raised a preliminary point which goes to the root of the action, namely, that the Plaintiff shows no title enabling him to bring such an action. They submit that the mortgage of the 23rd September 1895 was not duly registered, and further that the Court which granted the mortgage decree of the 28th July 1905 had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which that Decree was granted. If these contentions of the Respondents can be sustained, it is clear that the Plaintiff's action must fail, and that the decision of the High Court dismissing this action must be affirmed.

The facts of the case, so far as they are relevant to this preliminary point, are as follows: On 23rd September 1895 Mani Mohan Roy purported to mortgage to the Plaintiff various properties set out in a schedule to the mortgage deed for the purpose of securing an account current of Mani Mohan Roy with the Plaintiff, and freeing him from certain liabilities. The properties in question as set out in the schedule are 28 in all, the first being the eight-anna share of Mahal Gumokpota, to which the suit relates, and the last a property described as follows:—

"All that two-storeyed brick-built messuage, tenement or dwelling-house, with the piece or parcel of rent-free land on part whereof the same erected and built, containing by estimation cottah, situate, lying, and being premises No. 25 Gurudas Street, Jorasunko, in the town of Calcutta and butted and bounded—on the north, by a private lane of Ashutosh Dey; on the east, by the dwelling house of Nandakumari Dasi; on the south, by the dwelling-house of Khetra Mohan Dhara; and on the west, by a Government drain."

This last property is the only one which purports to be in the town of Calcutta. All the other properties enumerated in the schedule are outside Calcutta and outside the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.

This mortgage was presented for registration at the Calcutta Registry Office by the executant Mani Mohan Roy on the day of its execution and registered by the Sub-Registrar in the usual manner. In 1903 the Plaintiff brought a suit on this mortgage deed against the Defendant Mani Mohan Roy and others, in the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and on the 28th July 1905 obtained the ordinary decree for sale. Neither of the two effective Defendants in the present suit were parties to such action. The parties to the suit upon the mortgage seem to have set up that there was a mistake in the description of Parcel 28, and that the words Ashutosh Dey Lane should be substituted for Gurudas Street. The learned Judge accepted this contention and accordingly held that property situate in Calcutta was included in the mortgage and that he had jurisdiction. No such decision, if erroneous, could extend the jurisdiction of a Court of limited territorial jurisdiction, and therefore the validity of this decree is open to challenge by the present Defendants, who were no parties to the proceedings. Similarly, the direction to the said Judge that the description of the parcel in question should be amended (even if it was effective between the parties to that suit) cannot affect the present Defendants, whose title is of earlier date, or render valid the registration if they can maintain their contentions relating thereto. It is difficult, indeed, to see how the direction to amend the description of the parcel which formed part of the decree came within the scope of the suit, which was in no respect a suit for rectification.

The Defendant Mani Mohan Roy did not appear in the present suit. The female Defendant Hari Dasi Debi, and the third Defendant Hem Chandra Bose (who was interested in the suit as claiming an interest in the property through her) appeared and filed written statement clearly putting in issue the existence of the property No. 28 above set forth, and alleging that no portion of the property mortgaged by the mortgage bond lay within the jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in its Original Jurisdiction or within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of the Calcutta Registry. Accordingly they contended that the alleged mortgage was not legally registered, and that the decree was given by a Court which had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit on the mortgage bond in question.

At the hearing of the action the Plaintiff called no evidence with regard to the Parcel No. 28. Neither the Plaintiff nor Moni Mohan Roy went into the box to give evidence as to there being any mistake in the description of the parcel. On the other hand, the Defendants proved that there is not and has never been any such property as No. 25, Gurudas Street, in Calcutta, and they further proved that the property lying within the metes and bounds set out in Parcel 28 did not belong to Mani Mohan at the date of the mortgage bond, and that on the contrary he had not then and never has had any interest in the property within those metes and bounds. Such property has always belonged to parties wholly unconnected with the parties in this suit and has been continuously registered in their names in the Calcutta Registry.

It follows therefore that No. 25, Gurudas Street, which is the Parcel No. 28, was a non-existing property. It was no doubt open to the Plaintiff to prove that there was a clerical or other error in the description of the property and that in fact an existing property situate in Calcutta was intended by both parties to be mortgaged and to be described in Parcel No. 28. But there is not a particle of evidence that such was the case. Neither the mortgagor Mani Mohan nor the mortgagee the Plaintiff Harendra Lal Roy went into the box to give evidence as to this. As to Mani Mohan, their Lordships cannot see how it would have been possible for him to give any such evidence, because it would amount to stating that he intended that the deed should purport to mortgage an existing property in which he had not and knew that he had not any property or interest whatever. This being so, their Lordships in the absence of evidence decline to accept an unsupported suggestion of counsel that the description of the property mortgaged as No. 25 Gurudas Street was inserted by mistake. It must be remembered that the proper description of houses in towns for the purpose of registration is by the street in which they are situated, and the number which they bear in that street, so that the description

HARENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHURI v. SRIMATI HARI DASI DEBI.

No. 25 Gurudas Street is that to which one should primarily look.

It may well be that the above is sufficient to preclude any rectification of the mortgage bond. If the mortgagor intended it to stand as it appears in the deed, there is no question of mutual mistake. But if the case of the mortgagee be considered, there is similarly no ground whatever for thinking that there was any mistake. The only witness whose evidence has any bearing on the point is Harakumar Chakravarti. He was clerk to Messers. Sen & Co., who were the Plaintiff's Attorneys at the time, and drew up the mortgage, and he witnessed its execution by Mani Mohan and the admission of that execution before the Sub Registrar. He does not refer to the matter in his examination-in-chief, but in cross-examination he says that he did not himself enquire about the house No. 25 Raja Gurudas Street, but sent the broker to ascertain the boundaries of the house which shows that it was the above description of the house that he relied on, and that it was a house so described that was intended by the parties to be included in the mortgage. But with regard to this house he makes some very serious admissions. He says :—

"I do not know whether there is such a house as No. 25 Raja Gurudas Street. I did not keep any original title deed respecting this property. I did not see any original title deed regarding 25 Raja Gurudas Street, before or after the mortgage."

Considering that he was acting on behalf of the mortgagee, the fact that he took no steps to ascertain whether the mortgagor had any title in this property points strongly to the knowledge of the mortgagee that the entry was a fictitious one. Coupling this with the fact that neither this witness nor the Plaintiff gave any evidence as to there being any mistake or as to their knowledge and belief as to the existence of the property at the date of the mortgage (although these issues were plainly raised in the pleadings of both the Defendants), their Lordships decline to accept the suggestion that there was a mistake on the part of the mortgagee any more than that there was a mistake on the part of the mortgagor. The fact that neither the mortgagee nor the mortgagor gave evidence in support of the suggestion of a mistake has great weight with their Lordships. The Defendants having proved that the house which purported to be mortgaged did not exist, and that the property contained in the metes and bounds mentioned in Parcel 28 was property of strangers in which the mortgagor had not and never had any interest had proved all that was necessary to throw upon the Plaintiff the burden of showing that the entry of this parcel was not a fictitious entry. He might have done this by showing mistake or otherwise, but he did not do so, but abstained from giving any evidence whatever on the subject, although both he and Mani Mohan were available to give evidence, and were the persons who could establish the facts of the case. Taking all these matters into consideration, their Lordships can come to no other conclusion than that Parcel No. 28 was to the knowledge of the parties to the deed a fictitious entry probably designed to give to the deed the appearance of relating to property situated in Calcutta and therefore within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar and the Calcutta High Court, so that registration could be obtained and actions brought in Calcutta.

It was strongly contended before their Lordships that a Subordinate Judge had found that it was a mistake, and that the

HARENDRA LAL ROY CHOWDHURI v. SRIMATI HARI DASI DEBI.

High Court had accepted his finding so that the principle of two concurrent findings of fact would apply.

But their Lordships are of opinion that the principle of concurrent findings of fact does not apply to such a case as the present inasmuch as it is a case of no evidence, and according to the well-known principles of our law a decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law. The issue is that the existing description of the parcels was inserted by mistake. A mistake means that parties intending to do one thing have by unintentional error done something else. There is no evidence whatever here that the error was unintentional or indeed that there was any error at all, and their Lordships are therefore free to set aside the finding without in any way departing from their practice regarding concurrent findings of fact.

It is perhaps necessary in this connection to point out that the document upon which the Subordinate Judge based his finding of mistake was not evidence between the parties nor relevant to the issue. In some other mortgage deed of later date and to other mortgagees Mani Mohan had apparently purported to mortgage the same property by the same description, and had been compelled by the mortgagees to consent to rectification. Such a fact was wholly irrelevant, and it is extraordinary that it should have been allowed to be proved at the trial.

It remains to consider the effect of their Lordships' finding. It may be looked at in two ways. In the first place the property, 25 Gurudas Street, purporting to be mortgaged, is a non-existing property, and therefore no portion of the property mortgaged is situated in Calcutta. The deed, therefore, could not be registered there, nor had the Court of Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of Fort William in Bengal any jurisdiction to entertain the suit upon the mortgage bond, and its decree is of no validity. The Plaintiff therefore has no title to maintain the suit and it must be dismissed.

But the point may be put in another way upon broader grounds. Their Lordships hold that this parcel is in fact a fictitious entry, and represents no property that the mortgagor possessed or intended to mortgage, or that the mortgagee intended to form part of his security. Such an entry intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists, is a fraud on the Registration law, and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid. To hold otherwise would amount to saying that mortgages relating solely to land in other parts of the Presidency could be validly registered by the Sub-Registrar at Calcutta, if the parties merely took the precaution to add as a last parcel, Government House, Calcutta, or any similar item. The same considerations apply to the question of jurisdiction of the High Court of Fort William in Bengal in its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction. No such fictitious item inserted to give a colourable appearance of the deed relating to property in Calcutta when in reality such is not the case could bring the deed within the limited jurisdiction of the Court. For the same reasons, therefore, as have been stated above, the Plaintiff's case fails.

Their Lordships therefore will humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MIDNAPORE ZEMINDARY CO., LD., Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
HRISHIKESH GHOSH and another, Defendants, Respondents.

Non-occupancy holding, if heritable—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 20 (3).

The holding of a non-occupancy raiyat is (apart from possible exceptions) heritable.

This was an Appeal from a decision of S. K. Ghose, Esq., Offg. District Judge of Murshidabad, dated the 21st of April 1911, reversing a decision of Babu Uma Nath Ghosal, Subordinate Judge at Berhampur, dated the 1st of June 1910.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

The land in suit which is described in the plaint as the "diara chur reformation in situ" of a putni mehal belonging to the Plaintiffs was settled in 1300 B. S. with two persons Kali Ghosh (the father of Defendant No. 1 Hrishikesh) and Umaruddi Mandal. They were, according to the Munsif, "let into the chur land for an indefinite term with power to annex new accretions to their holding" on condition of paying additional rent for the land so added at a rate stated in their doul, dated 28th Bhadra, 1300 B. S. In 1308 B. S., Kali Ghosh died and his son Defendant No. 1 continued in possession of the moiety share of the jote of his father. Umaruddi appears to have sold his share of the jote to Defendant No. 2 Tarini Prosad Dhar. The Plaintiffs instituted this suit on 25th March 1909 for ejectment of the two Defendants, alleging that the jote was neither heritable nor transferable and that in consequence the two Defendants were trespassers.

The Munsif held that Kali Ghosh and Umaruddi were mere non-occupancy raiyats in 1308, and that in the absence of any plea or proof of custom, their rights were neither heritable nor transferable. Both Defendants being, therefore, in his opinion, trespassers, the Munsif decreed the suit with costs and mesne profits.

On appeal, the Officiating District Judge held that Hrishikesh succeeded to his father's interest under sec. 20 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and as to Defendant No. 2's purchase "parting with possession of a portion of a holding by a non-occupancy raiyat was not a ground of forfeiture." In this view the Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the suit with costs.

The Plaintiffs preferred this Second Appeal which, coming on before Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., was referred to a Full Bench.

The ORDER OF REFERENCE was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ.—One of the questions in controversy in this appeal is, whether the right of a non-occupancy raiyat in his holding is heritable. In Karim Chaukidar v. Sunder Bewa (1) a Division Bench of this Court held that the right of a non-occupancy raiyat wa not heritable. In the reference to the

(1) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 207 (1896).

MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD. v. HRISHIKESH GHOSH.

Full Bench in the case of Arip Mondal v. Ram Ratan Mondal (4) the contrary view was indicated, and, in the reference to the Full Bench in the case of Lakhan Naran Das v. Jai Nath Pandey (3) the Referring Judges were inclined to the view that the case of Karim Chaukidar v. Sunder Bewa (1) had not been correctly decided. When the case came to be heard by the Full Bench, there was divergence of opinion amongst the Judges and the point was left undecided. It was further observed in the case of Udoy Chandra Das v. Hari Das Bairagi (5) that the state of authorities on the question, whether the right of non-occupancy raiyat is heritable, is not satisfactory. In view of this conflict of authority, we refer to a Full Bench of this Court the question, whether the right of a non-occupancy raiyat is heritable. As the question arises in an Appeal from Appellate Decree, under the Rules of Court, the whole Appeal will be referred for disposal by the Full Bench.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray (with him Babus Rajendra Chandra Guha and Sitaram Banerjee) for the Appellants submitted that the Full Bench in Lakhan Narain Das v. Jai Nath Panday (3), at least decides this that there is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act to make a non-occupancy holding heritable.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Refers to cl. (3) to sec. 20.]

"Heir" in that clause does not mean heir for the purpose of the holding, but the heir generally. Besides, the clause has operation only "for the purposes of the section."

Moreover, in this case the land is diara and so under sec. 180, sec. 20 (3) does not apply.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Has not the saving in sec. 180 reference rather to the identity of the land than to the identity of the holder ?]

The language clearly suggests identity of the person also.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—There would be no reason for excluding the operation of sub-sec. (3). It was meant to exclude sub-sec. (2) only.]

Supposing the original tenant dies after six years and his son continues in possession for the remainder of the term he will acquire occupancy right, if only the landlord has recognised him as a tenant by receipt of rent or otherwise. The heir too must hold as tenant in order to be entitled to add up his father's term to his.

As to chur lands, Beni Pershad v. Chaturi Tewary (6) holds that some of the clauses of sec. 20 at any rate do not apply to churs

[HOLMWOOD, J.—It excludes sub-sec. (7).]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—That sub-section defines a rule of proof. It does not deal with rights. Is not sec. 20 the general section, sec. 180 only modifying its operation in respect of some classes of land ?]

Submits that the question is whether sub-sec. (3) is to be so interpreted as to give the general heir of the tenant right to add his period of holding to the tenant's irrespective of recognition by the landlord.

Unless recognised by the landlord, the heir would be a trespasser, if the father did not hold for 12 years. If he did, the heir would inherit under sec. 26.

Cl. (1) expressly says the land must be held as a raiyat.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Suppose the son continues in possession for the required number of years without the landlord knowing it, would he not acquire occupancy right ?]

To hold that would be to hold that non-occupancy raiyat's right is heritable contrary to the Full Bench decision.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The Act may not have conferred this right—it may have only recognised it as already existing. Besides, if Act VIII of 1885 treats raiyati rights as property, they would be heritable under the general law.]

The Act specifically recognises the heritability of permanent tenures (secs. 10, 15, 16), of raiyati tenures held at fixed rents or rates of rent and of occupancy rights. This is not done in regard to non-occupancy holdings; cl. (3) of sec. 20 does not occur in the chapter dealing with non-occupancy raiyats.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Where is the provision in the Act which makes permanent tenures heritable? It is heritable apart from the Act and the Act only recognises it or assumes their character of heritability? Sec. 26 was necessary to make occupancy right heritable.]

I submit there is not even that recognition of heritability of non-occupancy holdings. Further I say that in the case of permanent tenures, the Legislature declared them to be heritable. If the heritable character of permanent tenures was common knowledge, there would be no necessity for such a declaration. It makes them heritable.

[STEPHEN, J.—Does the Code contain all the incidents of permanent tenures ?]

No. But the Code does not merely register old law. It determines the incidents of the various classes of tenures.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Do you admit that non-occupancy right was heritable before the Act ?]

No. Mr. Justice Banerjee's decision—the only one on the point—is against that.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Asks whether paikast raiyats would not have a heritable holding under Reg. VIII of 1793 ?]

Refers to Jatee Ram v. Mungloo Surmah (7).

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Rights of khudkast raiyats were recognised as heritable.]

The tenant here was not a resident of the village. The doul shows that. Non-occupancy raiyats have no higher rights than paikasts, and here the tenant is a non-resident non-occupancy raiyat.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Suppose he was a non occupancy khudkast raiyat. Could he be ejected ?]

Under the Act he could.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Has not the heir of the non-occupancy raiyat a right to hold the land as against the world other than the landlord ?]

That exception will serve my purpose.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—No, it would be property and so heritable under the general law.]

See Field's Regulations, pp. 25, 40, as to paikast raiyats. The distinction between occupancy and non-occupancy raiyats was the creation of Act X of 1859. Non-occupancy raiyats are temporary tenants; sec. 6, Act X of 1859 and sec. 6 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1867.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Where is it said in Act X of 1859 or Act VIII of 1867, B. C., that non-occupancy raiyats are tenants-

(7) 8 W. R. 60 (1867).

MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD. v. HRISHIKESH GHOSH.

at-will? S.c. 6 seems to suggest that tenancy does not cease by death.]

A paikast tenant's holding was not heritable apart from the Act.

My points are:—

(1) Non-occupancy rights in general are not heritable.

(2) Non-occupancy rights in chur land are not heritable.

(3) Paikast non occupancy raiyat's rights are not heritable.

Non-occupancy right is the lowest kind of raiyati right, per Banerjee, J.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—What is his authority for that proposition?]

Sec. 25 of Act X of 1859 and sec 40 of Field's book.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Refers to sec. 44 and asks under what provision of the law is the heir to be ejected.]

Sec. 44 does not apply to the heir, as the heir is not a non-occupancy raiyat.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—If the general law makes it heritable, the Act does not make it non-heritable.]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Asked what would happen if, as Banerjee, J. puts it, the heir was "allowed" to complete the term without recognition.]

That would imply recognition or it would not, with the consequences I have stated.

Cl. (3) of sec. 20 really does not convey more than sec. 6 of Act X of 1859 or sec. 6 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Act X of 1859 is stronger. It supposes heritability]

[D. CHATTERJEE, J.—You did not turn out the tenant the moment his father died.]

No. I have brought this suit within 12 years and that is all that the law requires.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The tenancy in this case was not for a definite term and so was one from year to year. Therefore the heir would be entitled to hold it at least till it was terminated by notice. The Bengal Tenancy Act gives the heir the further privilege of acquiring occupancy right.]

[D. CHATTERJEE, J. Suppose the tenancy was for a term of 9 years and the raiyat died in the middle of it. Cannot the heir hold the land for the remainder of the term?]

If he can, it would be under the general law.

[D. CHATTERJEE, J.—Suppose none of the circumstances contemplated by sec. 44 happens after the tenant's death; how is the heir to be ejected?]

As a trespasser.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Banerjee) for the Respondent submitted that the reference was not necessary as the lease in this case was a lease in perpetuity. It is like the lease in Sheikh Elahi v. Sheikh Hukum (8). See also Colebrook's Bengal Husbandry.

It is at least a lease from year to year, so that at the tenant's death his heir had something to inherit.

Urges that there is a finding of fact that Hrishikesh held as raiyat from 1901 to 1906, after his father's death, so that he did acquire occupancy right even upon the interpretation of sec. 20 (3) submitted on behalf of the Appellant.

[THE COURT.—After consultation intimated that they would decide the question referred to the Full Bench, without prejudice to the arguments raised as to the tenant's status being a higher one than that of a non-occupancy raiyat.]

As to the argument that sec. 180 excluded the operation of sec. 20, sub-sec. 3), sec. 180 makes an exception only with reference to the identity of the land. The case in Beni Pershad v. Chatuni Tewary (6), if correctly decided, only holds cl. (7) inapplicable. Other clauses would apply. In Jasimuddin v. Beni Madhab (9) sub-sec. (3) was applied to diara land; Ch. VI has been made inapplicable only to uthandi lands, not to chur and diara lands.

(8) 18 C. W. N. 39 (1913).

On the question referred, reads sec. 5 (2) which speaks of "successor in interest;" Inheritance precedes recognition. Heritability cannot be made to depend on the landlord's will. If it is not heritable, there is nothing to recognise on tenant's death. Chap. III nowhere specifically says permanent tenures are heritable. Ch. IV also says nothing regarding the heritibility of holdings of raiyats at fixed rates. Sec. 20, cl. (3) in Ch. IV evidently means to confer raiyati status on the heir. In neither case is the right expressly made heritable. But there is in all these provisions a clear recognition of heritability.

The argument addressed on behalf of the Appellant would suggest that a landlord has 12 years from the death of the tenant to sue in ejectment, whereas sec. 20 sub-sec. (3) is intended to secure the heir in his possession of the holding immediately the raiyat died. If he is an heir, he succeeds in spite of the landlord who has got to recognise him as raiyat. If recognition was necessary, it would be withheld in every case, and where conceded, there would be a new tenancy and sec. 20, sub-sec. (3) would not apply.

Suppose the recognition was withheld for the rest of the term and then made.

Act VIII of 1885 was an amending and consolidating legislation. From Act X of 1859 up till now the object of this legislation has been to protect tenants from eviction.

Refers to secs. 42, 43 and in particular to sec. 44, cl. (a) of which has to be read with sec. 89 and sec. 66. If the tenant pays up the arrears decreed within the time fixed, he remains; cl. (b) is qualified by sec. 155. The right to eject under cl. (c) exists only for 6 months. Sch. III, Art. 1 (a), cl. (d) is subject to sec. 46. Are not these substantial rights? In 90 per cent. of cases the raiyat is not liable to eviction and once the 12 years is completed, he acquires occupancy. The intention of the Legislature could hardly have been to make non occupancy holdings life-leases.

Ch. IX, secs. 76, 78, 79. These improvements may involve heavy outlay. Did the Legislature intend that the tenant's heirs would be deprived of them? Sec 82 entitles the tenant to receive compensation for improvements by his predecessor in interest. Sec. 160 (c) protects the right of the non occupancy raiyat to hold for five years and not for five years or until the tenant's death whichever period is shorter; sec. 178, sub sec. (3), cl. (d) preserves right to "transfer or bequeath" if sanctioned by local usage, because succession by heritance did not need providing for.

The right of occupancy was specifically made heritable by sec. 26, because being the creation of statute, there were reasonable doubts as to its transmissibility on death; Ajodhya Persad v. Imam Bundi Begum (10), Jatee Ram v. Mungloo Surma (7), Karim Chaukidar v. Sunder Bewa (1).

No other case of eviction of a non-occupancy raiyat's heirs can be found in the reports. The treatment of the question by Banerjee, J. is very meagre. If the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alternius were applied, even permanent tenures would have to be deemed non-heritable; Maxwell, p. 467. Banerjee, J. quite overlooked the fact that even temporary tenants, if they were khudkasts, had heritable interest; paikast raiyats were not tenants-at-will and however precarious their rights originally were, the Legislature has pursued a settled policy of placing them as nearly as possible on the footing of khudkast raiyats. See Referring Order in Arip Mondal v. Ram Ratan Mondal (4), also Referring Order in Lakkan Narain Das v. Jai Nath Panday (3); for other authorities as to division of raiyats into khudkast and paikast, Philip 12, 19, 21, 22. The latter again either had heriditary tenancies or tenancies not heritable; Baillie's "Land Tax in India" (which is a translation of a portion of the Futwa Alamgir) (1853), Introduction, p. 30, speaking of the state of things in Mahomedan times. He says, "it is admitted that a raiyat's right descended to his children," though it was doubtful as to whether it was transferable. As to khudkast rights being hereditary, see Harington's Analysis, Vol. 3, p. 423.

Throughout the Regulations, from 1793 to 1833, there is no reference to paikast raiyats except in Reg. 51 of 1795, which applied only to Behar. Reg. VIII of 1793, sec. 59 provides for raiyats in general. See also secs. 60, 61. Under Reg. 44 of 1793, sec. 2, engagement with raiyats was to be for 10 years, the period of Decennial Settlement. Under Reg. 4 of 1794, the landlord was bound to renew the term. Up to 1812, the landlord could not evict even the paikast; he was bound to renew the engagement. See Reg. 5 of 1812, sec. 3. In sec. 11, cl. (3) of Reg. 8 of 1819, khudkast raiyat is defined as a resident heriditary cultivator. In Reg. XI of 1822, the expression is khudkast kadimi raiyat, meaning a resident hereditary cultivator having a prescriptive right of occupancy. The distinction between khudkast and paikast had disappeared, special privileges being reserved only for khudkast kadimi raiyats. Act XII of 1841 also mentions khudkast kadimi raiyats. Act I of 1845 speaks of khudkast kadimi raiyats or raiyats holding at fixed rents or rates.

Act XI of 1859 (following Act X) speaks of raiyats with rights of occupancy and holding at fixed rents or rates of rent; From 1819 to 1859 khudkasts and paikasts are on the same footing; Thakooranee Dassi v. Bisheswar Mookerjee (2).

The intention of the Legislature was to declare existing rights and not to create new rights.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—That is what the Preamble to Act X of 1859 says.]

Right of occupancy was made claimable independently of residence in the village, provided 12 years' possession was proved.

See Trevor, J's. judgment, pp. 214-215 in the Great Rent case [Thakooranee Dassi v. Bisheswar Mookerjee (2)]. The necessity of residence dwindled in importance. Once admitted as a resident, even a paikast became khudkast. The transition was easy and all paikasts became owners of hereditary rights. If khudkast raiyats' rights only were heritable, sec. 6 must be understood to have cut down some of their rights in the case of raiyats of this class who had no occupancy rights.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—You suggest that the distinction between khudkast and paikast originally was that between tenants who cultivated their own land and tenants who cultivated under rights derived from contracts. The distinction between these two tended to disappear and now it has disappeared; and that it is but reasonable to suppose that the Legislature would not revive the paikast.]

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray in reply said the judgments of Brett and Mitra, JJ. in the Full Bench case contained nearly all the arguments against him The Regulations drew a distinction between khudkast and other holdings. Only khudkasts were recognised as having a heritable interest. Their solicitude is confined to khudkast or resident hereditary cultivators. The Regulations hardly sustain the theory that all raiyati rights were heritable.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The point of the distinction was that one was a right of property and the other a contractual right. The former was a descendible interest. If the raiyat's right is now admitted to be property, it would be descendible.]

Refers to Reg. VIII of 1819, sec. 13 cl. (3).

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Certainly the position of the paikast was then precarious. But owing to economic causes, their position has changed.]

But could their status change without the intervention of the Legislature?

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The rights of paikast raiyats were contractual. As the nature of the contract varied, they began to acquire property rights. Refers to Whinfield on Landlord and Tenant.]

Replied, on the provisions of the Regulations cited on behalf of the Respondents.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench is whether the right of a non-occupancy raiyat is heritable. In Karim Chaukidar v. Sunder Bewa (1), it was held by a Division Bench that the right of a non occupancy raiyat (who does not hold under any express agreement) in his holding is not heritable. In arriving at this conclusion, Mr. Justice Banerjee says that "under the law as it stood before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, non-occupancy raiyats not holding under express engagements were treated as tenants-at-will or as tenants from year to year (see Act X of 1859, sec. 25, see also the observations of Mr. Justice Field in his Introduction to the Bengal Regulations, p. 40 and those of Mr. Justice Trevor in Thakooranee Dassi v. Bisheswar Mookerjee (2). Under the old law non-occupancy raiyats were the lowest class of raiyats and if the Respondent's contention be correct, it would follow that all raiyati holdings were transferable. But this would be somewhat inconsistent with certain provisions of law, such as Regulation VIII of 1819, sec. 11, cl. (3) which speak of hereditary raiyats."

Any opinion of Mr. Justice Banerjee is entitled to respect, but the passage we have cited is open to question.

It is not accurate to speak of non-occupancy raiyats under the old law.

(2) B. L. R. F. B. 202; 3 W. R. (Act X) 29 (1865).

MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD. v. HRISHIKESH GHOSH.

The expression "non-ocupancy raiyat" first apears in the Bengal Tenancy Act and the holding of non-occupancy raiyats is not the exact counterpart of any holding under the old law, by which we understand the learned Judge to mean the law prior to 1859. For the present purpose it is sufficiently accurate to say that raiyats in early days were either khudkast or paikast. It is unnecessary to discuss the several kinds of these two classes of raiyats, but contrasting one class with the other it may be said that the position of the khudkast was unquestionably superior to that of the paikast.

The khudkast was, speaking generally, a man of the village in which his holding was situate, and it is, we think, conclusively established that his holding ultimately was hereditary.

The paikast was not a man of the village where the land cultivated by him was situate : he was an immigrant.

There is reason to think that originally he was a tenant-at-will, but until the demand for land exceeded the demand for cultivation, this probably was of no great moment.

But as this economic position was reversed, the inconveniences of tenancies-at-will became apparent, and so we find they gradually gave way to tenancies of a more fixed character, either from year to year or for a greater interest. (Whinfield on Landlord and Tenant).

While the tenancy was at will, it obviously could not be heritable, for it would of necessity be terminated by the raiyat's death. But with the greater fixity of later times this would no longer be so, and on the raiyat's death there would be an interest that could devolve on his heir, even though the tenancy was from year to year. So matters stood, when Act X of 1859 was passed. That Act and the Bengal Act of 1869 and the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 have deprived the division of raiyats into khudkast and paikast of its importance, and under the Bengal Tenancy Act we find raiyats grouped as (a) raiyats holding at fixed rates, (b) occupancy raiyats and (c) non-occupancy raiyats (sec. 4). In sec. 20 mention is also made of "settled raiyats," a class largely composed of, but not identical with occupancy raiyats, for though every settled raiyat has occupancy rights, some raiyats who have occupancy rights are not settled raiyats.

These several classes of raiyats, where the Bengal Tenancy Act governs, have taken the place of the khudkast and paikast raiyats with which the practical lawyer has no concern except in order to trace the growth of raiyati rights. The result then is that (apart from possible exceptions with which we have no concern in this case) when these Acts were passed, a tenancy-at-will had ceased to be the measure of any raiyati rights and so all had interests that were capable of descent.

More than that, we think (apart from the possible exceptions to which we have referred) the holdings of raiyats were heritable, and this is distinctly recognized by the Bengal Tenancy Act. Thus the meaning ascribed to raiyat by sec. 5, cl. (2) includes successors in interest ; sec. 20, cl. (3) identifies the heir of a raiyat with his predecessor for the purpose of acquiring the status of a "settled raiyat" ; sec. 44 bestows on a non-occupancy raiyat a fixity of tenure that points to heritability : Ch. IX contemplates improvements which it would be unreasonable to expect in a tenancy not heritable, and entitles a raiyat to compensation for improvements made by his predecessor-in-interest (sec. 82) ; and certain rights of non-occupancy raiyats are "protected interests" under sec. 160.

Much has been made of sec. 26, on which it is sought to build up the argument referable to the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, but this maxim is at best an uncertain guide to the true meaning of a statute. Here it seems to us to have no application. Sec. 26 deals with the devolution of a right of occupancy, not of a holding pure and simple, and as this right of occupancy is a creature of the statute and a doubt had been expressed as to the heritability of a right of occupancy under Act X of 1859 there was good reason for making this provision in relation to a right of occupancy which would not apply to the ordinary holding of a raiyat which is not a creature of the Act though some protective provisions are applied to it which make for fixity of tenure.

It is true, in Lakhan Narain Das v. Jainath Panday (3) the question now under consideration was referred to a Full Bench of this Court.

But no conclusive answer was given, for while two of the learned Judges refrained from expressing any opinion as to whether or not a non-occupancy right was heritable before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, one, Mr. Justice Geidt held that it was not, and the remaining two, Mr. Justice Brett and Mr. Justice Mitra held that it was.

It is the inconclusive result of that case that has necessitated the present reference.

It is unnecessary to recapitulate the reasons severally advanced by Mr. Justice Brett and Mr. Justice Mitra in support of their view that a non-occupancy holding is heritable, for we are in complete accord with the opinion expressed by them.

(3) 11 C. W. N. 626 : s. c. I. L. R. 34 Cal. 516 (1907).

The answer then that we give to the question referred to us is that, apart from possible exceptions, with which we have no present concern, the holding of a non-occupancy raiyat is heritable.

As the question has arisen in an Appeal from Appellate decree under the Rules of the Court, we must dispose of the whole appeal.

The question of heritability affects only a moiety of the land in suit and the opinion we have expressed is decisive against the Plaintiff's claim to that moiety.

The claim to the other moiety manifestly cannot be supported.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be confirmed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

This was an Appeal from an order of M. Smither, Esq., District Judge of Dacca, dated the 23rd of June 1913.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. C. Mitter and Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick, Mr. B. Chakravarti and Babu Suresh Chandra Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—This Appeal arises in connection with an application which has been made for a succession certificate.

The deceased Sanatan Das died leaving Government Promissory Notes and Bank of Bengal shares, on which Rs. 4,000 odd were due for interest at the time of his death, and, since his death, over Rs. 75,000 as further interest has fallen due. The application is by his widow for a certificate which will enable her to realise interest and dividends due up to the date of her husband's death, but not the interest and dividends falling due after his death, or the principal. The object of the application apparently is that the applicant may thereby be exempted from finding a large security which she would have to find, if a certificate were applied for in order to recover the principal, interest and dividends accruing both before and after the death of her husband.

The learned Judge was of opinion that the certificate as asked for, could not be granted. He says : "The law intends that in fit cases security should be taken to protect such claims. The present peculiar limitation is intended to evade the giving of any such security. I am not prepared to make the limited grant prayed for. In the absence of any valid objection by the objector, whom I have not yet heard, I am prepared to make a grant in the ordinary way of power to realise dividends and interest, not limited to a particular date, but generally, such as fall due, on proper security being given. I find nothing to indicate that it was intended that power should be given to realise dividends for a very short period only ; the provisions are for granting power to realise dividends. And practically, apart from question of law there is no good reason for so limiting a grant. I decline to make the limited grant prayed for, in all the circumstances. Subject to what I may hear from the other side, I will make a grant in the ordinary way, on proper security being given, and not one to enable the applicant to draw Rs. 4,000 odd with security, and Rs. 75,000 odd at present, and more in the future without security."

A preliminary objection has been taken by the Respondent that no appeal lies on the ground that the order which I have just read was not a final order from which an Appeal would lie. In my opinion, however, there is no force in this contention. There was a final order, namely, that portion of the order in which the Judge says that he declines to make the grant prayed for. It is true that he went further and said that he would be prepared to make another grant different from that which he had refused, but that was an expression of opinion as to what he was prepared to do under different circumstances and did not affect the finality of the order which was passed. He refused to grant the application prayed for, merely adding as a rider, which in effect was unnecessary, that if another application was made in a different form, he would consider it. In my opinion, therefore, the preliminary objection fails, and an appeal lies.

The question we have to consider is as to the merits of this application. There is a ground which has been taken in Appeal that the learned District Judge should have held that Act VII of 1889 had no application to the interest and dividends falling due after the death of the Appellant's husband, it being contended in such ground that such interest and dividends were a debt not due to the deceased, but due to his widow, the present applicant and that therefore the petitioner was not bound to include the interest and dividends in the present application. On the other hand, it has been contended that the principal sum was a debt due to the deceased, even though it may have been payable after his death and that the rule governing the grant of a certificate to recover such principal applies not only in respect of the interest earned by such principal before the death of the deceased, but also after his death. It is, however, unnecessary in the present case to consider this point, because I think that the Appeal may be dealt with upon the other grounds to which I am now about to refer.

The question which we have to decide is whether a certificate can be granted for the recovery of a part of a debt. It appears to be well established that a separate certificate may be granted in respect of separate debts, and that there is nothing in law which compels the applicant for such a certificate to apply for a certificate in respect of all the debts due to a deceased. But the question which is now before us is this, whether assuming that to be so, we can go further and hold that as regards one single debt, a certificate can or cannot be granted for the purpose of enabling the applicant to recover a portion of that debt. The word 'debt' is a comprehensive term which should receive a liberal construction, The object of the Act is to protect the debtors of a deceased person, but there is nothing in law which prevents a debtor from making payment of his debt without the production of a certificate, if he so chooses. Now, the first point from which the matter may be looked at is that of authority, it being contended by both sides in this appeal that the case law supports the respective contentions which they have placed before us, and there are decisions which may be cited in support of either of these contentions.

The earliest decision to which we have been referred is Musammat Bibi Mudhun v. Jan Khan (1). In that case Musammat Bibi Mudhun appealed against an order granting Jan Ali a certificate to collect five-sixths of the debts due to the estate of Zuhur Ali and the learned Judges say, "Now, we observe at the outset of the case that this order is irregular. Act XXVII of 1860, that is, the old Succession Certificate Act, does not contemplate a division of a certificate, or a power to collect fractional shares of debts." This passage favours the Respondent's contention, and indeed goes the whole way which he desires us to go; but the statement there made was a mere expression of opinion. It does not appear to have been the subject of discussion or argument, and was unnecessary, seeing that the suit in which it was given was not heard, but was compromised.

In the case of Muhammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (2), it was held by Sir John Edge, C. J. and Burkitt, J. that a certificate for collection of debts under Act VII of 1889 may be given for the collection of any one or more separate debts of the deceased, but not for the collection of part only of a debt. The ground upon which the learned Judges appear to have based their decision was that a contrary view might lead to a multiplicity of suits and the harassment of debtors.

This case was followed by that of Bismilla Begam v. Tawassul Hussain (3), in which it was held that no certificate could be granted to one of the heirs of a Muhammadan lady who had died leaving a dower debt unrealised, for collection merely of a part of the dower debt of the deceased. It was also followed by the decision in Ghafur Khan v. Kalandari Begam (4) in which it was held that no certificate could be granted to one of the heirs of a Muhammadan lady who had died leaving her dower debt unrealised, for collection merely of a part of the dower debt of the deceased. There again, the decision was based on the ground that a debtor ought not to be harassed more than once for one debt and a multiplicity of suits in respect of one cause of action should be discouraged; and on the ground that the word 'debt' must be taken to mean the whole of the debt due to the deceased and not a portion or share of such debt. It has been considered that the latter view was opposed to the scheme of the Act, which had been enacted to afford protection to debtors and had nothing to do with the convenience of the applicant or his right to, or share in, the debt.

Previous, however, to this, there appears to have been a conflict even in the Allahabad High Court on this point; for, in the case of Akbar Khan v. Bilkisara Begam (5) Chamier, J. doubted the correctness of the decision in Mahammad Ali Khan v. Puttan Bibi (2) and was of opinion that the word 'debts' in sec. 6 (f) of the Succession Certificate Act means debts due, i.e, alleged to be due from debtors to the person applying for the certificate.

Further, in In the matter of the petition of Ghansham Das (6), Blair, J. gave a decision which directly supports the contention of the Appellant before us holding that there was nothing in the Succession Certificate Act of 1889 to preclude a Judge from granting a certificate for partial collection of the debts of a deceased person, security being furnished by the applicant of proportionate amount. He, therefore, says, "There seems to be no practical objection to the issue of a certificate for partial collection inasmuch as the Act itself contemplates the addition to a certificate of debts to which it did not originally apply."

Further, the latest case, and it is one in our Court, supports the view which we have been asked to accept by the Appel-

SREEMUTTY ANNAPURNA DASSY v. NALINI MOHAN DAS.

ant. The case is Mohamed Abdul Hossain v. Sarifan (7), and was decided by Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ. There the Court dissented from the decision in Ghafur Khan v. Kalandari Begam (4), and held that sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act does not require that the certificate should cover the whole of the debt, if the heirs do not seek to realise the whole. This was a case in which one of several heirs of a deceased Muhammadan lady sued her husband for a portion of the share of the deferred dower due by the Defendant to the deceased, relinquishing the balance. It was held that in respect of the deferred dower, each of the heirs of the deceased had a distinct right enforceable by himself, though all might jointly sue and that it was open to each to relinquish a portion of the claim : It was also held that an application by the Plaintiff for a succession certificate in respect of the amount claimed by her in the suit, was properly granted. No doubt, the circumstances of that case were not exactly the same as those before us ; but the principle upon which the decision proceeds seems applicable to the present circumstances ; for the debt due to the deceased was one debt, and yet it was held that a partial certificate might be granted to one of several of the heirs to recover the portion of that debt which he claimed, and if this may be done, I do not see in principle why a person may not, as in this case, apply for a certificate to enable him to recover a portion of a debt due to the deceased. The matter appears to be one which rather affects the question of revenue than anything else. But there does not appear to me to be, as Mr. Justice Blair points out, any practical objection to the grant of such a certificate which may be, as in the present case, a distinct convenience to the applicant.

(4) I. L. R. 33 All. 327 (1910).
(7) 16 C. W. N. 231 (1911).

As regards the objection, which has been taken that such a procedure may lead to a multiplicity of suits, the answer appears to me to be two-fold. In the first place, if the debt be due and the debtor be honest and solvent, he will pay on the production of the certificate; for the grantee of the certificate can give him a valid discharge to the extent indicated by the instrument. There will then be no necessity for a suit and the question of multiplicity upon which the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court proceed, will not arise at all. Nextly, if there is such a suit, it by no means follows that, because a certificate may be given to recover a fractional share of a debt, the principle of law which prohibits multiplicity of suits, is in any way affected ; we must distinguish between two separate things—one is the grant of a certificate and the other is the institution of the suit. We are not here concerned with the frame of a suit, but whether a certificate should be granted, and it may well be that though a certificate may be granted to recover a fractional share of a debt, yet if the person to whom the certificate was granted were to sue for a portion of a debt, which he might have sued for in a previous suit, his claim would be barred under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

I am of opinion, therefore, that, both on the ground of principle and of the authorities to which I have referred and which support the contention of the Appellant, this appeal should succeed. I therefore would reverse the order of the District Judge, rejecting the application

Bengal Chamber of Commerce Arbitration Judgments.

The judgments delivered last Thursday by Chaudhuri, J., on the Original Side of the High Court in respect of three awards filed by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce are likely to interest business circles, and inasmuch as the judgments were delivered extempore and cannot be published until they are transcribed from shorthand notes and signed by the Judge, we shall give their substance as understood by us.

These were on Jute contracts containing the following Arbitration clause :—

"Any dispute arising out of this contract shall be referred to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce whose decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract."

This clause, it will be noticed, is different from the Arbitration clause in the cases of Ram Narain Gunga Bissen v. Liladhur Lowiee, I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1237, Hardwary Mull v. Selaji, 13 C. W. N. 63 and the Bombay Co. v. The National Jute Mills Co., Ltd., I. L. R. 39 Cal. 669 which ran as follows :—

"Any disputes whatsoever arising on or out of this contract shall be referred to Arbitration under the rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce applicable for the time being for decision and such decision shall be accepted as final and binding on both parties to this contract."

In the former clause there is no reference to the rules of the Chamber of Commerce, while in the latter the reference is to the Arbitration of the Chamber under their rules applicable for the time being.

In the case of A. H. Ghuznavi & Co. (Petitioners) v. The Budge-Budge Jute Mills Co., Ltd. (Respondents), His Lordship held that the Petitioner was aware of the rules of the Chamber when he submitted to their Arbitration. He stated his case to them in answer to the case put before the Chamber by the Respondents and the dispute was—(1) whether a portion of the claim was, or was not outside the scope of the contract; (2) about the rate and the date of the breach. With regard to both the grounds his Lordship held that the Arbitrators had acted within the scope of their authority and the Petitioners were not entitled to challenge their award; that being aware of the rules, the Petitioners could not be heard to say that they were inoperative. The Petitioners had made suggestions of the possibility of fraud and collusion, without stating any grounds at all, and the Court rejected them as unworthy of consideration, as the Petitioners had ample opportunity of making a definite case, if they had any.

His Lordship further held that no rules of the Chamber had been contravened and that objections in the nature of after-thoughts to discover irregularities and to find objections should not be encouraged. The application to set aside the award was therefore dismissed with costs.

In the matter of Nobin Chandra Shaw (Petitioner) v. Sinclair Marray & Co. (Respondents) which was of a similar nature, His Lordship held that as the Petitioner had not said that he was not aware of the rules of the Chamber, and as his petition rather indicated that he knew them, and as also he had not taken notice of any of the notices sent to him by the Registrar of the Chamber, namely, about the Court having been constituted and that in the event of his not submitting his case, the Court would proceed ex parte, there was no weight to be given to the ground urged by him that the Arbitrators had proceeded ex parte. His Lordship also held that inasmuch as the Petitioner had sought legal advice when he received such notices and yet did nothing, it was to be taken, having regard to the other facts, that he was content to allow the Arbitration to proceed ex parte, without protest. He had made no endeavour to present his case, nor had he expressed a desire to do so, and in those circumstances his objections that the names of the Arbitrators had not been disclosed, and that no time or place of meeting had been notified to him, were of no avail.

The award could not be assailed on those grounds, but inasmuch as the Arbitrators had allowed a larger sum against the Petitioner than that claimed by the Respondents in their difference bills, the Arbitrators had exceeded their authority. In a suit in Court the Plaintiff is not allowed a decree for a larger sum than his claim. It was urged on behalf of the Respondents that a plaint could be amended in Court, but there was no such procedure before Arbitrators. His Lordship held that Arbitrators had the same power of amendment and referred to In re Crichton (1910), 2 K. B. 738. The learned Judge said that it was reasonable to suppose, that the dispute about the rate was not that the claim made by the Respondents was too low, or that they should have asked for more. Therefore the award which gave a larger sum, was in excess of jurisdiction. The matter was thereupon referred to the Arbitrators for reconsideration in view of the findings of the Judge. In this case each party was directed to bear his own costs.

In the third matter, that of Jagathari Bepin Bihary Poddar (Petitioner) v. Moran & Co. (Respondents) there was also a similar application. The facts were different from those in the other cases. The original contract between the parties was for delivery of 1,000 bales of a certain specified class of jute within November 1913, 300 out of which were delivered and accepted, but 700 bales delivered on the 27th November were, however, rejected by the buyers as of inferior quality. The buyers had in the meantime made an advance for the jute contracted for. Some time after that, namely, on the 5th of January 1914, the sellers proposed to deliver a fresh lot, which they agreed to take back, if not approved by the buyers. This offer was accepted with the further term that a person named by the buyers was to inspect the jute as to its quality. Disputes thereafter arose about taking back the old lot of jute which had been delivered in November, and also the fresh lot, the sellers alleging that the two lots had been mixed up and were rendered incapable of identification. The buyers demanded the return of the advance made by them and the sellers required return of the lots delivered. The sellers were the first to ask the buyers to refer the matter to the Chamber, who apparently then demurred, but finally the buyers asked for the Arbitration of the Chamber. The sellers protested and said that they were willing to go to Arbitration, if the Chamber first decided the question whether it was practicable to identify the second lot. Considerable correspondence ensued and finally the Registrar of the Chamber asked the sellers to state their case in full "pending decision of the point raised,"—referring to the preliminary question raised by the sellers as to whether the second lot was capable of identification.

The sellers then stated their case in detail under protest and they heard nothing further until the award was made, which they challenged on the following amongst other grounds:—

(1) That there was a new contract on the 5th of January, which was not covered by the Arbitration clause in the original contract.

(2) That they were not aware of the rules of the Chamber and were not bound by them. That they did not even get a copy of the rules when they applied for it, as the Registrar said that he was functus officio after the award had been made.

(3) That the rules were in various respects ultra vires, against public policy and the elementary principles of justice, inasmuch as amongst other things, the parties had no right to know the names of the Arbitrators, or to attend their sittings; some of the rules also took away the statutory rights of the parties and were said to be to that extent bad.

(4) That the Arbitrators had used an affidavit which they asked the buyers to put in. This was done without notice to the sellers, and without giving them an opportunity to test its truth or state their case on oath against the allegations therein contained.

His Lordship held that the contract of the 5th of January was a new contract after the old contract had expired, and that the buyers had a complete cause of action against the sellers thereunder which they could at once enforce. The new contract therefore could not be treated as part of the original contract. It was in every sense a fresh contract and created new rights and liabilities. His Lordship, however, held that inasmuch as the sellers had asked for an Arbitration and submitted a case before the Arbitrators, they were bound to the extent that they had submitted to them. This submission was in the first instance expressly limited to the preliminary point raised by them, and inasmuch as the Arbitrators had gone beyond, and made their award without notice, it was outside the scope of their authority.

The preliminary point raised by the sellers was of considerable importance from their point of view, and in deciding that point, the Arbitrators had without the knowledge of the sellers used an affidavit and no opportunity was given by them to the Petitioners to meet it. This amounted to legal misconduct and was by itself enough to render the award invalid, even if it were conceded that the whole matter was properly before the Arbitrators It was urged that under the rules of the Chamber, no ground other than that of fraud or collusion was available to set aside an award, but His Lordship held that it was necessary to show that the parties had so agreed. The Arbitration clause did not say that it was to be under the rules of the Chamber. In this case the Petitioners denied that they knew the rules. There was nothing to show that they knew them. It was perhaps open to the parties to agree that certain things were not to be treated by them as misconduct, but such agreement must be shown.

The submission in this case was silent about the matter. The Arbitration Act showed that the provisions of its schedule were to be operative, unless a different intention was expressed in the submission. "Expressed" does not mean "implied." It had been held in Green and Bedford, Williamson & Co. (63, L. T. R. 97, 325) amongst other cases that if the parties to a submission were to be deprived of any legal right they might have, the submission must plainly say so. The Arbitration Act provided a procedure, and the contract to refer to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce could be fully given effect to, without any special procedure of their own. It was open to the parties to agree to a different procedure, if it did not violate the law and the elementary principles of justice, but such agreement had to be proved. It could not be implied. Reference was also made to the London Stock Exchange case of Perry v. Barnett (15 Q. B. D. 397) & [1912] A. C. 1 & 9 T. L. R. 697.

His Lordship declined to discuss any thing in connection with the rules, not immediately relating to the case before him, as he thought it extremely undesirable to do so. The duty of the Court was merely to decide upon the questions before it, and only such of them as disposed of the matter before it. When it had done that, its duty ended. It should not be betrayed into entering into a general discussion of the nature or character of the rules attacked which might embarrass the Chamber in the discharge of an onerous public duty which was being so well done by them. As it seemed to the Court that the disputes were upon the fresh contract, and the use of the affidavit illegal, it was not a fit case for remission to the Arbitrators, and the award was set aside with costs.

It is clear from the Judgments that what was held was that the parties would have been bound, generally speaking, if the Arbitration clause referred to the rules, that the form of the clause was defective, and that the proper form was that in the cases above referred to. That to take away legal rights such as are given to the parties under sec. 14 of the Arbitration Act, an agreement to that effect between them has to be shown. That the Arbitration Act provided a procedure. If that was to be departed from, it must be shown that it was so agreed. We do not think that the Judgments go beyond the above.

We may point out that under sec. 7 of the Arbitration Act a reference to an Arbitrator or Arbitrators to be appointed by the President or Registrar of the Chamber of Commerce would be quite valid If the form of the Arbitration clause took that into account, vexatious questions of lists, or the disclosure of names in them would not arise. We have seen that the substance of the rules is printed in some forms of contracts. It is a commendable practice, which obviously prevents trouble.

Arbitrations serve a very useful purpose and Judges invariably try their best to uphold them, but as Lord Selborne said in Privy Council, the Court would hesitate to hold that Arbitrators could disregard all law and be arbitrary in their dealings with parties.

The Government of Bengal and Juvenile Offenders.

The Resolution of the Bengal Government on the Report on the Administration of the Jail Department in the Bengal Presidency for the year 1913, which appears in the current Calcutta Gazette, possesses special interest by reason of its references to the new measures adopted by Government concerning juvenile offenders. So far as Jail administration is concerned, special juvenile wards have been opened in Calcutta and some of the larger District Jails, and a depôt for the reception of young female offenders has been opened in the Midnapore Central Jail, whilst at Alipore a special ward has been opened for the accommodation of juvenile offenders undergoing trial. The Resolution also foreshadows the institution of a House of Detention for Juvenile Offenders in Calcutta and a Juvenile Offenders' Court to be located in a part thereof and to be presided over by selected Honorary Magistrates. In another column will be found Government Notifications published in the same Gazette for the establishment of the House of Detention and the Juveniles' Court.

The reference in the Resolution to Juvenile Offenders is in the following terms :—

A very satisfactory feature of the year's work is the continued attention that is being devoted to the problem of juvenile criminality. The "Star Class" system in force in the Juvenile Jail at Alipore which was describ d in the last year's report, continues to give good results · the boys receive elementary education and instruction in some trade to enable them to obtain employment on their release A gratifying advance has been made by the opening of a special ward in the Juvenile Jail for the accommodation of juvenile offenders undergoing trial. Progress is not confined to Calcutta, as all Central Jails and some of the larger District Jails are provided with special juvenile wards ; while a depôt for the reception of young female offenders has been opened in the Midnapore Central Jail. The Inspector-General remarks that boys are and can be improved by the care and discipline of Juvenile Jails ; but that, to ensure real good, such effort requires to be supplemented by an agency like the Borstal Committe or "After Care" Association, which will take charge of the boys and find suitable employment for them. The Governor in Council is in hearty agreement with the Inspector-General on this subject. The effort to increase the reformative character of the treatment of juvenile criminals by means of probation and supervision and tne Borstal system of confinement in a special institution have been the most successful features of prison reform in other countries ; and His Excellency in Council awaits with interest the forthcoming report of the Juvenile Offenders' Committee. Comprehensive efforts, it is hoped, may yet be made to extend and systematize the methods of dealing with the young offender. Meanwhile an institution in charge of a Superintendent will shortly be opened in Calcutta, to be used as a House of Detention for Juvenile Offenders. A number of ladies and gentlemen will be appointed visitors, and in the building will be located a Juvenile Offenders Court composed of selected Honorary Magistrates.

Juvenile Offenders' Court.

With regard to the constitution of the Juvenile Court, we think the proposal to place selected Honorary Magistrates in charge of this Court has much to commend it. It need hardly be said, however, that the success of the experiment will depend ultimately upon the individuals selected. In Calcutta, Government need have no difficulty in picking out the kind of men best fitted to discharge the semi-paternal functions of a Juvenile Court Judge. If the experiment proves successful, as we have no doubt it will, its extension to the Mufassal would only be a question of time.

Convicted and Under-trial Prisoners.

The Resolution notes that "the daily average strength of convicted prisoners in confinement" "has risen from 10,091 to 10,611," comparing the figures with those to which they had fallen as the result of the release of prisoners on the occasion of the celebration of the Imperial Durbar at Delhi on 12th December 1911. The number of prisoners in jail at the close of the year increased by 769, the increase being shared by both convicts and under-trial prisoners. As to these latter the daily average for the year was 1,452 as against 1,214 in the previous year—a difference which cannot, of course, be attributed to the Durbar and which can be accounted for only on the supposition that the provisions of law authorising the release of under-trial prisoners have not been sufficiently availed of by the trying Courts. "The average period of detention of under-trial prisoners before the Courts," the Resolution proceeds, "was on the whole slightly less than in 1912 : bu it was excessive at Midnapore and in Sessions cases at Krishnagar, Khulna and Mymensingh." All these certainly point to the necessity of greater care on the part of Magistrates and Judges in disposing of bail applications.

THE LAW OF PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION AND ITS INDIRECT EFFECT ON HINDU LAW.

What we endeavoured to show in our previous article (18 C. W. N, No. 22, p. cxxvi) as regards the distinction between legal and equitable estates in India, was that it is no longer a moot point : it is a well established fact.

In the recent case of Bank of Bombay v. Ambalal Sarabhai [(1900) I. L. R. 24 Bom., 350], Their Lordships of the Bombay High Court have recognized the distinction and have given effect to it in very clear terms and most unmistakably. In that case, certain shares of the Bank of Bombay stood in the name of one Sarabhai, after whose death his minor son applied to the Bank to have those shares transferred to his name as the sole surviving coparcener. The question was whether such shares could be transferred without letters of administration. It was held, that regard being had to the provisions of sec. 23 of the Probate and Administration Act, and inasmuch as "the legal title to the shares did not survive, though the beneficial interest did," letters of administration were necessary in support of the representative title of the Applicant, Ambalal. Here, therefore, we have two kinds of interest, the legal and the beneficial, the former passing to and vesting in the legal representative (executor or administrator), and the latter devolving upon the survivor. These two kinds of interest are separate and distinct, and they appertain to the same subject-matter or property. In arriving at the above conclusion, Their Lordships had no discretion to exercise. They were bound to recognize the distinction and give effect to it. For, in pursuance of what the Legislature have, from time to time, enacted in the Companies Act, almost every company in its articles of association has a provision to the effect that "The executors or administrators of a deceased sole holder of a share shall be the only persons recognized by the company as having any title to the share," and this being so, in conducting its business the company cannot but enforce this provision, and in administering the law the Judges are bound to give effect to it. Thus it is clear that the introduction of legal and equitable estates as distinct and separate interests, in the transactions of this country, is a growing necessity—a necessity which was created by the Legislature long before the Probate, and Administration Act came into being (see Act XIX of 1857, Act X of 1866, Act VI of 1882 and Act VII of 1913).

It may be supposed that the necessity created by the Legislature having reference to purely personal property, the creation or introduction of legal and equitable estates is also referrable only to the same, so that landed interests are free from the effect and operation of the rule laid down in the above-mentioned case of the Bank of Bombay. But that cannot be the case. Under sec. 4 of the Probate and Administration Act, all the property of the deceased person, whether moveable or immoveable, real or personal, vests in the executor or administrator. But such property also vests in the heir and devisee or legatee of the deceased; and these vestings take place simultaneously and immediately on the death of the testator or intestate both according to English as well as the Hindu law. So far as the English law is concerned, we have it, on the authority Mr. Joshua Williams, that "the heir still succeeds (under Land Transfer Act, 1897) immediately upon his ancestor's death to the beneficial interest in the lands held by the ancestor in fee simple: but at law the estate of the deceased vests at once in his executors, if he should have left a Will appointing executors" (Williams' Real Property, 20th Ed. p. 85). And where the deceased dies intestate, or testate, but without appointing executors, his estates "vest in his administrator so soon as appointed" (Ibid). As regards Hindu law, it is a well established rule, that immediately on the death of a person all his properties moveable or immoveable devolve upon and vest in his heir. Now, what do these vestings indicate and how are they distinguishable? The vesting in the heir is not the same as the vesting in the executor or administrator. They cannot be the same. The vesting in the executor or administrator is entirely a foreign matter. The very introduction of this vesting, or what is the same thing, the very promulgation of the law of Probate and Administration, has brought in its train numerous technicalities of English law whereof those involved in the distinction between law and equity or legal and equitable estates, seem to the be most prominent. According to English law, as seen above, the deceased's estate vests in the executor or administrator at law, so that the estate of an executor or administrator is a legal estate as distinguished from an equitable or beneficial estate or interest which vests in the heir. And as the law of Probate and Administration is English law, pure and simple, it is natural that these vestings in India should be governed by that law; and as a matter of fact they are being governed by it, there being no other law.

That the property of a deceased Hindu should vest in his executor or administrator and at the same time also in his heir and devisee or legatee is an undesirable fact. What the vesting in the executor or administrator means and how it operates—what rights and privileges he derives from such vesting and what are his powers, duties and liabilities thereunder—are laid down in detail in the Probate and Administration Act. But there is nothing in that Act or elsewhere to show what the vesting in the heir or legatee results in. It is noteworthy, however, that the Madras High Court has very lately thrown a good deal of light on this point. In Ramanuja Ammal v. Sawmi Pillai (22 Mad. L. J. 228), their Lordships of that Court said:—"An heir or a legatee may not be entitled to possession of what he inherits or is bequeathed to him except in the proper course of administration, but that does not mean that he acquires no interest till then."

Thus it appears that though the vestings are simultaneous and take place immediately on the death of the deceased, they are not of the same character, nor do they lead to the same result. As seen above, the vesting in the executor is at law and the title derived thereform is legal, and that in the heir or legatee is in equity giving rise to what is called beneficial or equitable title. In other words, the estate of the deceased vests in the executor in possession and in the heir or legatee in interest, with the result that, as held in Ramanuja v. Sawmi Pillai, the heir or legatee becomes entitled "to what he inherits or is bequeathed to him" only in due course of administration. That is to say, the title of the executor is complete and perfect, but that of the legatee inchoate only, to be completed and perfected by the assent of the executor. The title derived by the heir is of a more precarious nature than that of the legatee or the devisee, for he comes last of all in the course of administration—after all the debts and legacies have been paid. In the result, therefore, it comes to this that the title of the executor as a representative is superior to all, that of the heir or legatee being of a subordinate nature although they are beneficiaries.

The conclusions that appear to flow from the foregoing are the following :—

(1) That the law by virtue of which the property of a deceased Hindu vest's in executors or administrators and in consequence of which they become the only representatives of the deceased person, to the exclusion of his lawful heir (according to Hindu Law), materially modifies the Hindu Law of succession and inheritance.

(2) That the introduction of the said law is equivalent to the introduction of the English Law of personalty, either in its entirety or at least in its leading principles.

(3) That the introduction of the doctrine of representation as distinguished from or rather opposed to succession, which is the essential feature of the law of Probate and Administration and its only object, must in its ultimate consequences, be to a great extent subversive of the Hindu Law notions of succession.

(4) That if the "great object of the law" (which, as formulated by the Law Commissioners appointed in England) is "ultimately to introduce one uniform system applicable to all classes," be fulfilled, it must tend to destroy the rigid exclusiveness of the Brahmin laws which are still supreme.

(5) That, without doubt, the Probate and Administration Act, or more properly, the Indian Succession Act, has been effecting a silent revolution of incalculable magnitude affecting directly only its law of property, but indirectly its social, religious and political conditions as well.

MAJUMDAR.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Indian Penal Code, sec. 498.—Fact and legality of marriage, proof of.

EMPEROR v. NAZIR KHAN, I. L. R. 36 All. 1.

The fact and the legality of the marriage are material elements in a case under sec. 498, I. P. C. They must be proved as strictly as any other material facts and not in any particular way.

Ryves, J. in the course of his judgment observed "my attention has been called to the following rulings : Emperor v. Pitambur Singh, I. L. R. 5 Cal. 566. In that case Garth, C J. in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench said that "the fact of the marriage must be strictly proved in the regular way." That ruling was followed by this Court in Empress of India v. Kallu, I. L. R. 5 All. 233 in which the evidence to prove the marriage was set out and held to be sufficient. The next case referred to was Queen-Empress v. Santok Singh, All. W. R. 1898 p 186. In that case also the whole of the evidence with reference to the marriage is set out and there too it was held to be sufficient The next case cited was Queen-Empress v. Dal Singh, I. L. R. 20 All. 166. There a Division Bench of this Court held that "the Court should require some better evidence of the marriages than the mere statement of the complainant and the woman"

What I think was meant in all these cases is that as the fact and the legality of the marriage are material elements in a case under sec 498, they must be proved as strictly as any other material facts, as for instance, the enticing away of a woman with the intention mentioned in the section. I do not think rulings lay down that the fact of the marriage can be proved only in some particular way. . . . . As pointed out in Queen-Empress v Subbarayan, I. L. R. 9 Mad. 9, "even a marriage in England may be proved by any person who was actually present and saw the ceremony performed ; it is not necessary to prove its registration or the licence or publication of the bans.

Correspondence.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY OF CALCUTTA.

A largely attended meeting of the members of the Society presided over by the Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Kesteven, Solicitor to the Government of India, the President of the Society, was held at the Society's Library in the High Court on Saturday the 23rd May 1914.

Mr. F. M. Leslie, the Honorary Secretary of the Society, addressing the President said, "Mr. President, before we commence the business of this meeting, which is to elect a representative of the Society on the Governing Body of University Law College, it is my pleasing duty to ask you to present the Robert Belchambers Gold Medal to the successful candidate for the same at the last final examination for the admission of Attorneys. I need not now say much about the origin of this medal. It is unnecessary for me to say more than that the medal is intended to encourage the study of law amongst articled clerks and to commemorate one whom we will never forget. Babu Jitendra Nath Dutta has won the medal on this occasion and has to his credit the splendid performance of having obtained 675 marks out of a possible maximum of 720. Speaking as one of the Examiners I am free to say that his paper was the best that I examined and that this opinion was shared by the other Examiners is vouched for by the marks he obtained. I hope that his present success is an indication of his future success in life I now ask you to present the Robert Belchambers Gold Medal to Babu Jitendra Nath Dutta.

The President in handing the medal to Babu Jitendra Nath Dutta congratulated him upon his success and wished him on behalf of the Society a continuation of good things in life.

The meeting then proceeded to elect a representative of the Incorporated Law Society on the Governing Body of University Law College and Mr. M. N. Chatterjee, M. A., B. L., a member of the Committee of the Society was unanimously elected to that honour.

The Chairman then addressing the meeting said there was another matter which was not strictly the business of the meeting, but one which he was glad to be able to mention. It had been suggested by Babu G. C. Gunder that we should express to His Excellency the Chancellor of the Calcutta University our gratitude at his having appointed a member of our Profession, a member of our Society, to be the first Non-official Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University, and if the meeting approved of it, he would place before them a Resolution which had been handed to him and which was to this effect: "That this meeting desires to place on record its deep sense of gratitude to His Excellency the Chancellor of the University of Calcutta at the honour done to the Society by the appointment of one of its valued members to be the first Non-official Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University and the Honorary Secretary be directed to forward a copy of this Resolution to the Private Secretary of His Excellency."

The Resolution was carried by acclamation.

With a vote of thanks to the chair the meeting closed.

THE EDITOR,
Calcutta Weekly Notes

DEAR SIR,

I thank you for publishing in your last issue a copy of the Registrar's letter to me with reference to the Peremptory Cause Lists and the Transfer of Cases from one list to another. The Hon'ble the Chief Justice was kind enough to grant the Committee of the Incorporated Law Society a personal interview with reference to the proposals contained in that letter.

I have now the pleasure to send you a copy of a letter received from the Registrar placing on record the result of that interview which I trust you will kindly publish in the next issue of Calcutta Weekly Notes. I feel sure that the Profession generally will do all that can be done to justify the assurance given to the Chief Justice and mentioned in the enclosed letter.

Yours faithfully,
F. M. LESLIE,

FROM

MAURICE REMFRY, ESQ.,
Offg. Registrar, High Court, Calcutta, Original Jurisdiction,

TO

F. M. LESLIE ESQ.,
Honorary Secretary, Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta.

Before:
The Hon'ble Sir Lawrance Hugh Jenkins, K. C. I. E., Chief Justice of Bengal.

SIR,

I am directed to place on record the result of the interview which the members of your Committee had with His Lordship the Chief Justice in regard to the number of cases to appear on the Peremptory Cause Lists. Having regard to your representation the Chief Justice was pleased to direct that for the present the Peremptory List before each Judge on the Original Side should not consist of more than 15 cases, but that when the rules as to the Prospective Lists get into full working order the number of cases for the Peremptory List before each Judge shall be reduced to 12.

The proposal that all cases appearing on the Peremptory List shall be liable to compulsory transfer to the Peremptory List of another Judge will be dropped in view of your assurance that members of your profession will do all in their power to facilitate the transfer, whenever possible, of cases from one Judge's Peremptory List to that of another Judge whose own list has been finished.

As it appeared from the remarks of a member of your deputation that a doubt exists as to whether cases now on the Remanent List can be transferred to the Prospective Lists under the new Rules, it will greatly facilitate the working of these lists if you could convey to your members the information that cases can be and are being so transferred.

I have the honour to be,
SIR,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) MAURICE REMFRY,
Offg. Registrar.

*Moveable property—Transfer in fraud of creditors—Transfer for consideration—*Bonâ fides, need of—Principle of Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 53—Validity, if maintainable as to part.

Held (by the Madras High Court)—That a deed is void against creditors when the debtor is in a state of insolvency or when the effect of the deed is to leave the debtor without the means of paying his present debts. If this is the condition of the debtor or the consequence of his act, it is not sufficient to render a deed valid that it should have been made upon good consideration. It must be shewn to have been taken bonâ fide. Such a deed being wholly invalid cannot be supported as to a part and set aside as to the rest:

Held (by the Privy Council)—That the decision of the High Court, setting aside the two assignments in question in the appeal as having been made in fraud of creditors, was correct.

These were Appeals from a judgment of the Madras High Court which is reported in I. L. R. 30 Mad. p. 6.

The facts of the case shortly are as follows :—

A sum of Rs. 14,000 was held in deposit by the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Kumbukonam to the credit of Sami Aiyar as decree-holder in Original Suit No. 12 of 1899. Sami Aiyar was indebted to various persons and some of them obtained decrees against him for various sums. On 20th March 1900, Sami Aiyar assigned the decree in Original suit No. 12 of 1899 to Annamalai Chetty, who with himself and one Chidambaram Chetti were all paramours of a dancing girl, Balamani, and on friendly terms with each other. Annamalai was one of Sami Aiyar's decree-holders to the extent of Rs 4,390, and he discharged that decree as also some decrees obtained by other decree-holders, but with regard to about Rs. 7,000 (nearly a half of the consideration money stated in the assignment deed) the Courts in India concurrently found that that sum was never paid, but was in fact kept for the benefit of the assignor or of persons in whom he was interested and who were not his creditors. The major portion, about Rs. 6,000, was alleged to have been paid to Balamani and Rs. 1,000 to Chidambaram Chetti, the other paramour of Balamani in discharge of debts stated to have been due to them, but both the Courts in India were of opinion that neither Balamani nor Chidambaram were Sami Aiyar's creditors.

The Appellant claiming through Annamalai Chetti applied on the basis of the assignment deed to be brought on the record as transferee decree holder in place of Sami Aiyar under secs. 232 and 250, C. P. C, but on objection by various parties who had attached the decree in Original Suit No. 12 of 1899, his petition was dismissed. The Appellant then brought Original Suit No. 2 of 1902 to establish his claim as assignee of the decree. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the Appellant should have appealed against the order dismissing his petition under secs. 232 and 250, C. P. C.

Two separate Appeals were preferred to the High Court against the orders passed respectively in the execution proceeding and in the Original suit. The High Court (Subrahmania Aiyar and Benson, JJ.) dismissed both Appeals by one judgment in the course of which they observed :—

"Having regard to the fact that at this time Sami Aiyar, Annamalai and Chidambaram Chetti were all paramours of the dancing girl Balamani and on friendly terms with each other, we cannot doubt that the arrangement was, to the extent we have stated, a device intended to defeat Sami Aiyar's other creditors.

"In this view, the next question for decision is whether the assignment to Annamalai is valid as against the Respondents.

"The property sought to be assigned, not being immoveable property, sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act has no direct application, and we must decide the question by a reference to general principles of justice, equity and good conscience. As observed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Corlett v. Radcliffe (1), 'Each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and in all the question is one of fact, whether the transaction was bonâ fide, or was a contrivance to defraud creditors.' It may, however, be stated, generally that a deed is void against creditors when the debtor is in a state of insolvency, or when the effect of the deed is to leave the debtor without the means of paying his present debts. If this is the condition of the debtor, or the consequence of his act, it is not sufficient to render a deed valid that it should be made upon good consideration ; for as it is said in Twyne's case (2), 'a good consideration does not suffice if it be not also bonâ fide.' This statement of the law is sufficient to support the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge, that the assignment was invalid. As however, Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar, on behalf of the Appellant, strongly contended that the last paragraph of sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, as interpreted by this Court in Ramasamia Pillai v. Adinarayana Pillai (3), warrants a different view being taken, we will briefly deal with his contention. In effect his contention is that wherever there is any real consideration, however small, for the transfer, the question of intention is immaterial and the transaction must be held to be one entered into in good faith and therefore not invalid as against creditors either under the Statute of 13 Elizabeth, C. 5 or under sec. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, even though it was in fact intended to delay or defeat creditors and had the intended effect. This contention is, we think, on the face of it unsustainable for the simple reason that under both enactments good faith as well as consideration is made, in terms, an essential condition of the validity of the transfer. This has been pointed out again and again both in the decisions of the Courts and by the text-writers referred to by Mr. Sivasami Aiyar in his reply for the Respondents. "As regards the passage at page 466 of the case Ramasamia Pillai v. Adinarayana Pillai (3) the Judges appear to have merely intended to repeat the language of Thesiger L. J, in Ex parte Games (8), which again refers to Allen v. Bonnett (9). In neither of these two cases was the statement intended to give an exhaustive explana ion of the term bonâ fide in connection wi'h such transactions. In both the Judges were dealing with mortgages, and what they said was that, where a mortgage was granted for a sum really due, the transaction could not be impeached except upon the ground that the transaction, though in form a mortgage, was in truth, a trust in favour of the debtor, and thus a mere cloak to secure an advantage to him. In effect, they were referring to the condition of things which was dealt with by Lord Coke in Twyne's case (2) when he said thus: 'If a man be indebted to five several persons in the several sums of £20, and hath goods of the value of £20, and makes a gift of all his goods to one of them in satisfaction of his debt, but there is a trust between them that the donee shall deal favourably with him in regard of his poor estate, either to permit the donor or some other person for him or for his benefit, to use or have possession of them, and is contented that he shall pay him his debt when he is able; this shall not be called bonâ fide within the said proviso, for the proviso saith on a good consideration and bonâ fide, so a good considera ion doth not suffice if it be not also bonâ fide.'

"It is scarcely necessary to add that there is nothing in the Sta'ute of Elizabe h or in sec. 53, Transfer of Property Act, to prevent a creditor giving a preference, provided nothing more is done by the transaction either with reference to the transferor or transferee so as to injuriously affect the creditors of the former.

"Another argument of Mr. Krishnasami Aiyar for the Appellant was that to the extent of payments made by Annamalai on behalf Sami Aiyar's creditors, the assignment should be held good, and the Appellant should be allowed to execute the decree as if he were a joint creditor with Sami Aiyar. We cannot accede to this argument. The transaction being entirely invalid as against the creditors, we cannot allow it to be treated as partly valid. It is open to the Appellant to protect himself by discharging the claims of Sami Aiyar's other creditors, at whose instance the transaction is voidable."

Hence these Appeals, which were heard ex parte.

Mr. L DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Brown for the Appellant submitted that the assignments were not fraudulent and that the assignee took the assignment in good faith without notice of any fraudulent intention. In any view, it should have been held that the Appellant was entitled as assignee to the decretal money in Court less aggregate sum which was not payable in discharge of debts due by Sami Aiyar.

CHIDAMBARAM CHETTIAR v. SRINIVASA SASTRIAL.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the two decisions appealed against are correct; that the High Court acted rightly in setting aside the two assignments, the one to Annamalai and the other to Chidambaram, and that no valid proceedings can therefore be based on either of those assignments. The question whether any of the parties can establish rights based, not on the assignments, but on other grounds, such as the actual payment of debts, is a point which was, in their Lordships' opinion, not before the Courts below, and is not before their Lordships and on that point therefore they pronounce no opinion.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that these Appeals should be dismissed.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Executory devise—Time of distribution, death of testator if—Event happening after testator's death, gift over of to take effect on—Principles of interpretation.

Where a Hindu by a Will, not governed by the Hindu Wills Act, purported to give his properties in equal shares to two of his sons named, with a proviso that "should either of these two sons die without leaving any male issue, the survivor is to take the whole of the property appertaining to the share of the deceased son who may leave no male issue, after undertaking to defray the expenses in connection with the maintenance of his widow and the maintenance and marriage of his minor daughters:"

Held—That the words clearly contemplated survivorship whenever it should occur—whether before the testator's death or after—and that on the death, without leaving male issue, of one of the two sons both of whom survived the testator, the share bequeathed to him passed to the surviving son, subject to the obligations specified.

It has for many years been a settled principle that words of this class being in general terms must receive their full and not a restricted meaning, though there may be older cases warranting a suggestion that the terms employed in this Will should be limited to death occurring before the death of the testator himself.

There is nothing specifically either English or Indian in the idea that a Will of a testator must be construed on that principle which would enable Courts of law most fully to give effect to the intention expressed by his words. It may be that if the words he employs are voces signatæ they must be so accepted, whatever the suspicion may be as to the testator having had that particular view of his own language. But in ordinary circumstances ordinary words must bear their ordinary construction, and the whole Will, i.e., the whole of the words employed by the testator must be looked at together so as to determine his whole intention. Furthermore, it is not on this principle legitimate to take words which have a general meaning and subject them to limitations which the words do not necessarily imply.

The period of distribution to which an executory devise will be referred, will be the period of the death of the first taker, unless there are other circumstances and directions in the Will which are inconsistent with that supposition.

O'MAHONEY v. BURDETT (1) followed.

This was an appeal relating to the construction of a Will which was in the following terms :—

1. I had an eldest son named Surajlal who died at Rajkot about twenty years ago. One son of his (i.e.) my grandson named Dhirajlal aged about 20 years is alive this day.. After I got my son Surajlal educated &c and married at a cost of hundreds of rupees and after he was made clever he was got employed in the Engineering Department at Rajkot by the recommendation of one of my kind friends (viz. Revd. Mr. Wilson. My said son Surajlal acquired much wealth in the said (service and at the time of his death he left (behind him) property worth about eighty thousand Rupees. When I went to Rajkot to see) my son Surajlal at the time of his illness (of which) he (ultimately) died I found that Parsan the wife (? widow) of my said son Surajlal acted under the advice of two (or) four bad characters and consequently the said Parsan said to me "What concern have we with you? We are separate (from you) and therefore I am the guardian of my son." She began to act in such and other very impertinent ways Really speaking my son Surajlal was joint with us, but as I was in a good condition I did not take even a single pice from my (said) son Surajlal With a view to satisfy and convince me my son Surajlal used openly to write to me in (his) letters which he wrote to me as follows for the purpose of showing that he was joint with me:—"(Dear) father the whole of whatever you have got and whatever I have got belongs to all of us three brothers" But after the death of my son Surajlal when Surajlal's widow Parsan prevented me from touching, the property of my son Surajlal by alleging separation (from me) a dispute arose between me and Surajlal's widow Parsan. We appointed arbitrators for (the purpose of) settling the said dispute. I had produced as evidence before the said arbitrators letters in the handwriting of my (son) Surajlal for establishing joint (family) The said letters were stolen away from there. I had proved before the said arbitrators by evidence other than the said letters that when a son named Dhirajlal was born to my son Surajlal we being first at Karamsad the said son Dhirajlal was sent to Karamsad at my place for offering obeisance when I have got two (or) four ornaments made for the said boy Dhirajlal who is my grandson. We both the parties had appointed (a) Rajeshri Nagindas Vijbhukhandas Kaji, (Rao Saheb) Gopalji Surbhai Educational Inspector and Navalrambhai Head Master of the Training College—these three gentlemen—arbitrators for settling the dispute between my son Surajlal's widow Bai Parsan and myself. Two gentlemen out of them decided against me after my said evidentiary letters were stolen that my deceased son Surajlal was separate from me whereas one gentleman decided in my favour that though the letters were stolen away joint (family) had already been proved therefrom. Thus majority being on the side of Bai Parsan, Bai Parsan the widow of my deceased son Surajlal appropriated the property and effects, that is, estate of the value of about Rupees eighty thousand which my son Surajlal had at the time of his death As the said Bai Parsan acted under the advice of bad persons she has wasted some portion of the said property. Still this day she has got property of the value of Rupees forty thousand at the least After the death of my son Surajlal the said Bai Parsan lived for some years at Bassein with her son Dhirajlal and then they have gone (? went) to reside at Surat where they have been (residing) up to this day. In accordance with the desire of my son Surajlal if his widow Parsan had remained joint with me even after his death and had handed over to me the whole of the property of my son Surajlal I would have joined (? added) the whole of that (property) to my property and preserved the same and would have given equal rights therein to each of my three sons in the dispositions which I would have made (to come in force) after my death At that time I would have given the right of my son Surajlal to the said Surajlal's son and my grandson Dhirajlal. But taking into consideration all the circumstances (viz.) that the widow of my deceased son Surajlal has appropriated the whole of her husband's property as stated) above and that in addition thereto she and her son Dhirajlal both of them are quarrelling with and acting impertinently towards me up to now I have decided not to give even a single pie out of my property to my deceased son Surajlal or to my deceased son Surajlal's son Dhirajlal and (? or) to the said Surajlal's widow Parsan that is to say I have excluded (disinherited) my son Surajlal his widow Parsan and his son Dhirajlal and I have not kept (? given) them any right whatever in my self acquired property nor do I keep (? give) any hereafter. Should my deceased son Surajlal's widow or son Dhirajlal or both of them file any suit &c of any nature whatever against my property or against my heirs and executors for any reason whatever the same shall be duly null and void by virtue of this will.

2 I appoint my two sons named Shambhuprasad and Chunilal who are alive executors, heirs and owners of the whole of my property.

3 The immoveable property which I possess is very little that is as to the two houses which belong to me, the particulars thereof are as folows

(1 One house situated in Ranchhoddas Vakil's Street in Vadifalia in the City of Surat in the sub-district of Surat, District Surat, measuring about 196 square yards in length and breadth and bearing Tiko E. No. 4 is as described in Sanad No. 195 in the Survey Register. To the east thereof there is the street passage, to the west a lane, to the north building bearing Survey No. 196 and to the south there is the house of Thakorbhai Chunibhai Chakavala. Therein my last bid (for the same) was for Rs. 6,875 The same having been sanctioned, the said Court passed an order to sell the house of the above description to me, and the sale certificate (in respect thereof, dated the 23rd of August 1892, which I accordingly got is extant with me, and the said house is in my possession under the said sale certificate

(2) One house situated on the road leading from Kelapith to Lindachowk in Rahia Soni's Chakla (street) in the City of Surat, sub-district Surat District Surat (measuring) about 76 square yards in length and breadth, bearing Tiko E No. 26 is as described in Sanad No. 32 in the Survey Register, to the east thereof there is the house of the sons of Fakirchand Jivan, to the west there is the house of Ganesh Dayaram, to the north there is the main road and to the south there is the passage of the lane. Therein my last bid was for Rs. 1,100 The same having been sanctioned the said Court passed an order to sell the house of the above description to me and the certificate of sale, dated the 10th of February 1896 which I accordingly got is extant with me. The said house has come in my possession under the said certificate of sale

4. As to the two houses of the description mentioned in the above third paragraph and as to whatever immoveable property other than the said two houses which I possess my two sons named Shambhuprased and Chunilal are to duly divide and take a moiety in equal shares of the whole of the said immoveable property after my life-time (? death. I have not kept (given any) right with regard to my immoveable properties to any person whatever other than my said two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal

5 I myself and Chunilal Balmukanddas with me both (of us) having contributed Rs 3,099-8-0 each, have on the 27th day of April 1889 kept in mortgage three pieces of the below mentioned lands for Rs. 6,199 in all from Mohandasji Guru Maharaj Gopaldasji the managing owner of the Gadi of the Acharya Maharaj (Spiritual Preceptor, of the Pranami Religion.

(1) One plot of land (bearing) Survey No. 14 (measuring) acres 5 gunthas 14, situated at Moje Tunki, a village of the Chorasi Taluka.

In the said mortgage deed I have caused the name of my younger son Chunilal to be entered as mortgagee in my stead along with (that of) Chunilal Balmukanddas. The same is (caused to be) entered with the object that I have given my right to the extent of Rs 3,099-8 annas in the said mortgage deed as a gift to my younger son Chunilal. I have not even kept (? reserved) my right thereto. Consequently my younger son Chunilal has already become entitled to the s id claim of Rs. 3,099-8 annas No other person shall have (any) right or claim therein, and the right of recovering the said dues belongs to my younger son Chunilal along with Chunilal Balmukanddas.

6 As to some of my dues advanced on the security of property kept in mortgage, situated in the Gaikwadi villages of Gijrin, Dhamrod, Mahnej, and Nandav and in the village of Kosam within British limits, and as to whatever other (sums) may be due to me on personal security, my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal are to recover all the said dues together, and as to the expenses which may be incurred in recovering the same, my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal are to bear ? pay) the same in equal shares. These two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal are also to duly divide and take in equal shares whatever (amount) may be realized, and any other person) shall have no right or claim with regard thereto.

7. As to the moveable property which I possessed, I have during my life-time divided the same between my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal according to my wishes and have made over the same in their possession. But as to gold and silver ornaments which I possess, I have entrusted the said ornaments to my wife Bai Jadav with particulars as to how the same are to be divided between and given to my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal. Consequently my said wife Jadav is to divide the said ornaments between and give (the same) to my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal agreeably to my directions, whenever she may like. At that time neither of my said two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal shall raise any dispute or objection whatever against by wife Bai Jadav.

8 As to the property which may not be mentioned in this my last will, that is, as to such of my property as I may not have disposed of by my will, both of my sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal are to divide the whole of my said property (between them) and take (the same) in equal shares.

9. I have divided between and given to my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal the whole of my property as mentioned above. But should either of these two sons die without having had (leaving) any male issue, the survivor of the said two sons is duly to take the whole of the property appertaining to the share of the deceased son who may have (' leave) no male issue (behind him) after undertaking (to defray) the expenses in connection with the maintenance of his widow and the maintenance and marriage of his minor daughters. But under these circumstances the heirs of my deceased son Surajlal shall not get any right whatever.

10. Lastly I state my views briefly as follow.—My eldest son Surajlal is dead. The said Surajlal's son named Dhirajlal and widow Bai Parsan these two persons are alive as heirs to my son Surajlal I do not mean to give them anything whatever out of my property, nor has any direction been given in this my will for giving (any thing to them). The reasons thereof I have stated above in detail, and I state again that I have got self-acquired properties, which I have absolute authority to bequeath to anyone I may like. * Both of my two other sons named Shambhuprasad and Chunilal are alive. Though they live jointly with me, I have not taken even a single pice appertaining to the earnings of the said two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal. I kept both these sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal with me, educated, trained, and got them married at my expense, and I myself have been defraying and do (still) defray all expenses relating to them I have no (other) heirs except the said two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal, and I have no affection for any one else than my said two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal. Consequently I have, of my free will divided the whole of my property between, and given (the same to my said two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal as mentioned above, and have given directions for (the same) being divided and given (to them). As to that having regard to the ways and manners and conduct of both my said sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal I have, of my free will, given some more benefit out of my property to my younger son Chunilal. My elder son Shambhuprasad should not, therefore, become sorry or disappointed in any way, but should act and behave peacefully and harmoniously with his younger brother Chunilal, and it is my advice that no quarrel or dispute about anything should be allowed to arise."

The testator died on 4th July 1901, leaving his two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal surviving him. Shambhuprasad died on 2nd January 1903, leaving a widow (the Defendant in this suit) and a daughter. The surviving son Chunilal instituted the present suit for construction of the Will, for declaration of his rights and injunction.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the Plaintiff's claim. He held that the property was self-acquired. He further held that the provisions of the 9th clause of the Will under which the sons took only life estates liable to be defeated by the death of either of them without male issue, were valid and operated upon the whole estate. But he held that the Plaintiff was only entitled to the declaration prayed in respect of so much of the property left by the deceased Shambhuprasad as could be identified as having come to his share at the partition. Both parties appealed against the said decree to the District Court of Surat, and on the 31st July 1908, the said Court delivered judgment dismissing the appeal of the Defendant and modifying the decree of the first Court in the Plaintiff's favour. The Defendant's appeal was allowed by the High Court.

Sir Basil Scott, C. J. and Batchelor, J. in the course of their judgment said as follows:—

"Now that (i.e., cl. 9) appears to us to be a provision for the event of the distribution as provided by the previous clauses of the Will being impossible in consequence of the death without male issue, of one of the devisees. The period of distribution contemplated by the testator is clearly the period of his death, and under these circumstances the event which may interfere with that distribution and give rise to the necessity for other arrangements must be an event occurring prior to his death. This conclusion is strengthened by the last words of the clause which provide that in the event mentioned in the clause the heirs of his deceased son Surajlal should not get any right whatever. They were not to get any right under the preceding clauses of the Will, but if any portion of the testator's property were undisposed of by lapse in consequence of the death of one of his legatees, the heirs of his deceased son would be entitled to succeed by inheritance, if they were not excluded by the express terms of the Will. This is the conclusion which we have arrived at from a discussion of the terms of this clause apart from authority, English or Indian.

"It is, however, some satisfaction to find that the conclusion is in accordance with the rule adopted in England expressed by Lord Hatherley in O'Mahoney v. Burdett (1), where he says 'where the Court has found upon the face of the Will a positive direction to pay over the personalty to the legatee, or to make a distribution among several legatees at a given time, the period of distribution being fixed at which, as it appears from the face of the Will, the whole estate was intended to be entirely disposed of and divided, and to pass from the hands of the executors, the Courts have laid hold of that circumstance to say, 'We hold this defeasance to be before that period of distribution arrives,' holding it to be an unreasonable construction of the testator's Will to say that he directed on the one hand that the money shall be absolutely paid and divided and distributed, and put into the hands of those who, having it in their hands, will of course spend it without any further trust, and on the other hand that a subsequent event, namely, a certain person's dying childless after that distribution has taken place, should divest the property, that is to say, make it necessary for the executor to take steps to get back again, and re-call that money which he has paid in order to hand it over to those who would take under the executory devise.'

"We reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the Plaintiff's suit with costs throughout."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C, and Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Appellant submitted that under cl. 9 of the Will the Appellant was entitled to Shambhuprasad's estate. The words "died without having had any male issue" ought to be construed in their natural, ordinary and grammatical meaning. They meant dying at any time, whether before or after the testator's death. The testator was an old man and was paralyzed and infirm. It was unreasonable to suppose that he was contemplating the death of one of his sons in his lifetime. There were no rules of construction applicable to the case. The Indian Succession Act, the Hindu Wills Act and the Probate and Administration Act did not apply. The literal meaning of the words ought not to be refused, unless the words in the Will clearly shewed otherwise. The testator had in his mind events which would occur after his death.

The Appellant was entitled to sue for a declaration of title only under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, because he was already in possession of the property in dispute. We know of no other prope of the testator except what is specified in the plaint. Reliance was placed on the following authorities:—The Queen v. Joykissen Mookerjee (4), Gurusami Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal (5), Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dassi (6), Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (7). The case of O'Mahoney v. Burdett (1) does not apply to the facts of this case. Edwards v. Edwards (2) did not lay down any new rule of construction. There were several indications in the Will which shewed that English principles of construction were inapplicable. It was repugnant to the ideas of the Hindus to give an absolute estate to daughters, whereby it would pass into another family. The testator expected the surviving brother to maintain the widow and perform the marriages of the daughters.

Mr. Lowndes for the Respondent submitted that the principle of sec. 111 of the Indian Succession Act ought to be applied. The Hindu Wills Act adopted that section and it was applicable to the Presidency town of Bombay. The Mofussil in the Bombay Presidency was sufficiently civilized and there was no reason for refusing to extend the principle of sec. 111 to the Mofussil. Edwards v. Edwards (2) was good law in India. The testator intended Sambhuprasad to take an absolute interest. In Bombay Presidency daughters of Hindus took absolute interest. They are a favoured class, and there was no reason for the argument that the testator intended to keep the property in his own family. The presumption was in favour of early vesting, O'Mahoney v. Burdett (1). The provisions of the Will shew that it was an absolute gift which could not be cut down. Reliance was placed on Tripurari Pal v. Jagat Tarini Dasi (8). The vernacular word translated as 'owner' was probably 'malik' which meant absolute owner; Musammat Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (9). In any case the testator had made a complete gift and division of the moveables during his lifetime. He made an entry in his books to that effect before making the Will.

Mr. DeGruyther in reply.—There was no distinction in India between moveable and immoveable property for purposes of devise. English rules of construction do not apply to Hindu Wills. Reference was made to Hunooman Persand Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (10), Mukhun Lal v. Imtiazood Dowlah (11), Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 573. Further, in India an absolute gift and a subsequent defeasance thereof was recognised. Bhoobun Mohini Debya v. Hurrish Chander Chowdhry (12), Kristoromoney v. Norendro Krishna (13), Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (14). O'Mahoney v. Burdett (1) relates to cases of executors in whom the estate vests and does not apply to India where trustees are rarely appointed. The Will applied to the whole estate including the moveables as well. Both the Courts below had found that the moveables had not been actually handed over by the testator to the legatees.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, dated the 20th July 1910, reversing a decree of the Court of the District Judge, Surat, dated the 27th August 1908, which had affirmed with modifications a decree of the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge, Surat, dated the 4th February 1907.

The only question for determination in the Appeal relates to the construction of a Will, dated the 20th August 1899, made by a Hindu named Parvatishankar Durgashankar. He was a resident of Surat in the Bombay Presidency; and it may be at once stated that it was admitted by both parties at their Lordships' Bar that the Hindu Wills Act, Chap. 21 of the year 1870, did not apply to this case, which falls to be determined not by the law operative within the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal or the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Courts at Madras and Bombay. It may well be that the sections of that Act upon interpretation would yield the same result as has been arrived at in the present case. But no decision on that topic is given: and the case is treated as one applying in the Mofussil, and therefore to be dealt with on ordinary legal principles. It must also be stated that the various terms employed in the particular will are special, and that no general rule can be said to be precisely applicable in its construction except that the Court must make its best endeavour to extract the intention of the testator.

Parvatishankar, the testator, died on the 4th July 1901. He left surviving him two sons, Shambhuprasad (who died on the 2nd January 1903, leaving a widow, the Respondent in this Appeal, and a daughter) and Chunilal, the Appellant. A third son of Parvatishankar, Surajlal, had predeceased his father, but had left one son. Surajlal had separated from his father many years previous to his death; the other sons were in family with him.

The Will was executed about two years before the testator's death and it purports to dispose of the whole of his property. By cl. 2 he appointed his two sons executors, heirs and owners of the whole. In various other clauses details as to the immoveable property are given, and directions that his sons are to divide and take in equal shares the whole of it with certain exceptions. In cl. 7 there is a declaration as follows:—

"As to the moveable property which I possessed, I have during my lifetime divided the same between my two sons, Shambhuprasad and Chunilal, according to my wishes and have made over the same in their possession."

A certain enumeration with directions is also given as to gold and silver ornaments in his possession. By cl. 8 the testator gives each of his said two sons a half of his estate not specifically disposed of by his Will.

It is clear up to this point in the Will that the one predominant desire of the testator was that his two sons should have his property between them.

It was in the course of the case, however, found in fact that he had not accomplished, or completely accomplished this desire. And the Will accordingly falls to be appealed to as the governing instrument in regard to the distribution.

The question of survivorship as between these two sons was not dealt with until cl. 9 of the Will was reached, and it is in the following terms:—

"I have divided between and given to my two sons Shambhuprasad and Chunilal the whole of my property as mentioned above. But should either of these two sons die without having had (leaving) any male issue, the survivor of the said two sons is duly to take the whole of the property appertaining to the share of the deceased son who may have (leave) no male issue (behind him) after undertaking (to defray) the expenses in connection with the maintenance of his widow and the maintenance and marriage of his minor daughters. But under these circumstances the heirs of my deceased son Surajlal shall not get any right whatever."

Various issues were raised in the case, including whether the estate in question was self-acquired. This was answered in the affirmative, and that answer is not now disputed. As stated, the one question remaining in the case has reference to the construction of cl. 9 above quoted. The learned Judges of the High Court of Bombay have held that—

"The period of distribution contemplated by the testator is clearly the period of his death, and under these circumstances the event which may interfere with that distribution and give rise to the necessity for other arrangements must be an event occurring prior to his death."

As already mentioned, Shambhuprasad survived the testator. And the result of the judgment is that one-half of the property now to be disposed of is held to have vested in him a morte testatoris and that the whole provision of cl. 9 with reference to survivorship falls, in the events which have occurred, to the ground. The effect of the learned Judges' decree is that the clause must be read as if the survivorship there provided for was limited to survivorship as at the testator's death.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this judgment cannot be maintained. There is nothing specifically either English or Indian in the idea that the Will of a testator must be construed on that principle which would enable Courts of Law most fully to give effect to the intention expressed by his words. It may be that if the words he employs are voces signatae they must be so accepted, whatever the suspicion may be as to the testator having had that particular view of his own language. But in ordinary circumstances ordinary words must bear their ordinary construction, and the whole Will, that is, the whole of the words employed by the testator, must be looked at together so as to determine his whole intention. Furthermore, it is not on this principle legitimate to take words which have a general meaning and subject them to limitations which the words do not necessarily imply. It may be true that there is a body of older cases which would warrant a suggestion that the term employed in this Will, namely, "should either of these two sons die without having had (leaving) any male issue" should be limited to such death occurring before the death of the testator himself, but the Will does not say that, and it has for many years been a settled principle that words of this class, being in general terms, must receive their full, and not a restricted, meaning.

The leading authority on the subject is, of course, O'Mahoney v. Burdett (1) and two sentences of Lord Hatherley's opinion may be here repeated. He refers to the duty of the Courts always to consider carefully the whole Will.

"and, having regard to all the various clauses contained in it, to see what is the full and complete and perfect intention of the testator."

(1) L R. 7 H. L. 388 (1874).

He corrects the case of Edwards v. Edwards (2) and makes the statement of the principle run thus:

"that the period to which the executory devise will be referred will be the period of the death of the first taker, unless there are other circumstances and directions in the Will which are inconsistent with that supposition."

If it did not appear presumptuous to say so, one might comment on the case of O'Mahoney v. Burdett (1) as one which emerged through a thicket of technical decisions to a ground of plain and preeminent good sense. It was also, of course, fortified by authority, and notably by the case of Farthing v. Allen (3), the fullest report of which was given by Mr. Jarman in his work on "Wills." (6th Ed., p 2160)

But so far from the language employed in the present Will leaving any serious ambiguity as to the intention of the testator, their Lordships are of the opposite opinion. In their view the words clearly point to survivorship whenever it should occur. When Shambhuprasad, having, with his brother Chunilal, survived his father, died, leaving a widow and a daughter, the language employed to cover such a situation seems exact and clear.

"Should either of these two sons," it says, "die without having had (leaving) any male issue, the survivor . . . is duly to take the whole of the property appertaining to the share of the deceased son who may have (leave) no male issue."

And, as if this were not sufficient, the Will proceeds to lay upon the surviving brother a duty in the event of that survivorship in the following language:

"after undertaking (to defray) the expenses in connection with the maintenance of his widow and the maintenance and marriage of his minor daughters."

It seems to their Lordships that it would be a strained construction of a Will in that form (which manifestly contemplates death occurring at any time—with the receipt of property by way of survivorship, on the one hand, and the duties to be laid upon the survivor at any time, on the other hand) to say that the whole of these provisions fall to the ground, although Shambhuprasad had in point of fact left no male issue, because he did not die in that situation before the testator himself. The testator, in their Lordships' opinion, had clearly in view a much wider and more general provision, and they think that the events which have in fact occurred, viz., the survival of the testator by his two sons and the death of one of these sons leaving a widow and daughters but no male issue are events to which the will has operative application. They accordingly do not doubt that Chunilal, the surviving son, is, as such survivor, entitled to the estate conveyed by this clause, and that the correlative obligation resting upon him comes into play.

Their Lordships desire to put on record an admission made by Counsel for the Appellant to the effect that he had no knowledge of any property of the deceased testator in possession of the Respondent, Shambhuprasad's widow, and that, if the Respondent came into possession of such property under arrangements made in the lifetime of her husband with his brother the Appellant, the present Judgment would not be used to disturb such an arrangement.

Their Lordships do not feel themselves able to give effect to the argument presented under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act or to interfere with the judgment of the District Judge on this question of procedure.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be allowed, and that the cause be remitted to the High Court in order that, upon provision being made and security being given to its satisfaction for the maintenance of the Respondent and for the maintenance and marriage expenses of the minor daughter, a declaration and injunction be given in terms of the Plaint. In view of the special difficulties in the construction of the Will, the Appellant will pay to the Respondent all costs incurred by her before this Board and in the Courts below.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

CHAUDHURI, J. 1913, 14, July. } In the matter of MUSSTT. HURUNNESSA BIBEE, an infant.

Guardianship—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Mahomedan infant—Mahomedan Law—Maternal uncle if a proper guardian—Sister's husband, if qualified—Prohibited degrees of relationship—Adverse interest.

Under the Mahomedan Law no male has a right to the custody of a female child, unless he is a Mahram, that is, one who stands to her within the prohibited degrees of relationship and cannot under any circumstances marry her.

A maternal uncle may be appointed as a guardian to a Mahomedan minor girl.

When the girl was married to a person below her station in life, the Court ordered a governess to be appointed to stay with her until puberty, the husband not to have access to her meanwhile, so that the girl might have liberty to repudiate the marriage if she liked just on the attainment of puberty.

An application was made by one Golam Kadir for the appointment of himself as the guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act of Hurunnessa Bibee, a Mahomedan infant of considerable means. Golam Kadir is the husband of her sister. As against him another application was made by the infant's maternal uncle for such appointment. Her step-father (mother's second husband) also offered to be appointed guardian, but did not put himself forward as an applicant.

Mr. B. C. Mitter (with him Dr. A. Suhrawardy) for the applicant, materna uncle.

Mr. A. Rasul for the step-father.

Mr. C. R. Das (with him Mr. Akbari) for Golam Kadir. The arguments are noticed in the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CHAUDHURI, J.—These are two applications for the guardianship of the person and property of a Mahomedan infant of the name of Hurunnessa Bibee. I shall first deal with the application of Golam Kadir, the husband of the minor's sister.

The Guardians and Wards Act provides that in appointing the guardian of a Mahomedan, no appointment shall be made inconsistent with the Mahomedan Law. The point for me to decide is whether the appointment of Golam Kadir, the husband of the infant's sister, would be consistent with the Mahomedan Law. I am clearly of opinion that it would not. The Rt. Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali, in his Mahomedan Law, Vol. II, p. 239 (3rd Ed.) says, "No male has a right to the custody of a female child, unless he is a Mahram, that is, stands to her within the prohibited degrees of relationship and cannot under any circumstances marry her."

It is contended on behalf of Golam Kadir that there is no authority for the statement "cannot under any circumstances marry her" in the passage I have quoted. In this connection I was referred to the case of Aizunnessa Khatoon v. Karimunnessa Khatoon (1), in which a question arose whether under the Mahomedan Law marriage with the wife's sister, who was legally married, was void or not. It was held that the children of such marriage were illegitimate and could not inherit. In dealing with the question then before the Court, their Lordships referred to the passage I have quoted, but I do not find any authority or sanction for the contention that the words, "cannot, under any circumstances marry her" have been wrongly introduced by the learned author.

Wilson's Mahomedan Law, p. 205, sec. 108 (2nd Ed.) was also referred to and Mr. Rahim's book on Mahomedan Law and Mr. Tyabji's, but they throw no light on the point.

Now it is conceded that the mother of a Mahomedan infant girl loses her right of guardianship by marrying a stranger. In the case of Yakub Sheikh v. Nafrujai Bibee (2) it is stated, as seems to be the correct law, that the mother is not disqualified, if she marries one related to the minor within the prohibited degrees. It would be very curious that if the mother were disqualified by marrying a stranger, that a sister would not be thus disqualified, and that a stranger marrying her would be qualified for appointment as guardian. Learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the maternal uncle has placed certain original texts before me with translations, which were circulated among the parties to test their correctness. The texts and translations have not been challenged.

I.

The woman entitled to the custody of a child loses her right by marriage with a person not within the prohibited degrees to it, i.e., the minor. (Durr-al-Mukhtar, Vol. II, p. 656, ed. Cairo.)

II.

"By marriage with a person not within the prohibited degrees to it" —i.e, whether the marriage is consummated or not. The author [of the Durr-al-Mukhtar] should have said, "a person not within the prohibited degrees* on the ground of consanguinity. For, one within the prohibited degrees on the ground of fosterage is like a stranger as regards her loss thereby [marriage] of the right to the custody of the minor." (Radd-al-Mukhtar, Vol. II, p. 656, ed Cairo.)

III.

"With a person not within the prohibited degrees":—i e., on the ground of consanguinity. So if he is one within the prohibited degrees not on the ground of blood-relationship (e g., a foster paternal uncle), or a relation on the ground of consanguinity but within the prohibited degrees on the ground of fosterage (e.g., the child's uncle's son on the ground of consanguinity, but its uncle by fosterage), he is like a stranger. (Radd-al-Mukhtar, Vol II, p. 651, ed. Cairo.)

IV.

Then if there be no agnates, [the guardianship] belongs to uterine relations. So it [the child] should be handed over to the uterine brother, then to his son, then to uterine paternal uncle then to full maternal uncle and then to uterine maternal uncle. (Radd-al-Mukhtar, Vol. II, p. 656, ed. Cairo.)

V.

A minor girl should not be handed over to an agnate not within the prohibited degrees (e. g, an emancipated slave; the son of a paternal uncle), so long as there is a non agnate within the prohibited degrees like the maternal uncle. She should rather be handed over to the maternal uncle to guard against mischief. (Inayah, Vol. IV p. 187, ed. Cairo).

VI.

If she [woman entitled to guardianship] dies or marries, then the full sister; then if she [full sister] dies or marries, then the uterine sister. . . . . . . The right to guardianship which belongs to these women is lost by marriage when they marry a stranger. But if they marry a blood-relation of the child standing to it within the prohibited degrees, e. g., its grand-mother [mother's mother] marries its grandfather [father's father] or if the mother marries the paternal uncle of the child, then, the right to guardianship is not lost. Thus it is laid down in the Fatawa Qadi Khan (Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol. I, p. 728-729, ed. Cal.).

VII

When the minor girl has no agnate, she should be handed over to the uterine brother; then to his son, then to uterine paternal uncle, then to full maternal uncle, then to consanguine maternal uncle, then to uterine maternal uncle. (Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol I, p. 729, ed Cal)

These texts supply clear authority for the proposition that a brother-in-law not within the prohibited degrees is not entitled to be appointed guardian. That being so, I hold that the brother-in-law Golam Kadir is not entitled to be appointed guardian specially in the presence of a person who is competent under the Mahomedan Law, viz, the maternal uncle Syed Mahomed Yakub who is the other applicant.

The step-father also appeared and stated through his counsel that though he considered he had no right and was not in Court for the purpose of asserting any right in himself, yet he submitted that if the Court so desired, he was willing to be appointed. The maternal uncle has been examined and cross-examined before me. There were certain charges made against him in the affidavit of the step-father and both the step-father and brother-in-law were allowed to cross-examine him in order to help the Court to consider whether he was eligible or not. I do not think that any of the charges made against the maternal uncle has been substantiated. The only ground for alleging that he is a man of dissolute habits is that some years ago he went to a questionable quarter of the town, and heard some music with his brother-in-law in the house of a woman of bad repute. Nothing else is alleged against him. It is also strenuously contended that inasmuch as he instituted certain proceedings in the Police Court challenging the marriage of Khaja Golam Kadir, and because he subsequently withdrew from the prosecution and consented to Golam Kadir being appointed guardian of the person of his wife, stating that he was convinced that they had been legally married, showed that he was a person in whom the Court could not place any confidence, that he had by his conduct shown that he was disqualified from acting as the guardian of the infant. It was said that he had extorted Rs 2,500 to give his consent as above and that he might utilise this occasion also for extorting some money from the young man, the son of a tailor, to whom the infant had been married. It appears that Syed Mahomed Yakub was promised payment of his costs in the Police Court and of the High Court in respect of the criminal proceedings, when the matter was amicably settled. He was not paid the amount, but that subsequently His Lordship Mr. Justice Imam who arbitrated for the parties in certain matters took evidence, allowed him Rs. 2,500 out of Rs. 3,500 which had been promised to be paid by Khaja Golam Kadir. His Lordship allowed Rs. 1,000 thereout to be paid to the wife. Even if the facts were as alleged by the other side, I could hardly have held that this man was disqualified. He is now living with his wife who is 18½ years old; a girl of that age is competent in this country to look after her own household. Mr. Rasul on behalf of the step-father urged that it was necessary in the interest of the minor that she should repudiate her marriage with the tailor's son on attaining puberty, as it was a marriage below her station in life and altogether undesirable. It is said that the repudiation must be at the exact moment of time that she attains puberty, and that some female ought to be present at that time, competent to ascertain that critical moment. Therefore some woman, preferably a female relative, ought to be placed near her so that at that very moment she might repudiate the marriage if so inclined, otherwise according to the Mahomedan Law the present marriage would become valid. The applicant's wife, I think, is quite capable of discharging this function. The applicant says, he disapproves of the marriage, and there is no reason to suppose that he will prevent the repudiation. It has been suggested that he is on friendly terms with this tailor's son. He denies it, and I have no reason to disbelieve his statement. I, however, think that having regard to the bitter feeling between the parties and the manner in which this matter and cognate matters are being fought out, some provision should be made for providing a governess, if possible, for the infant and that the guardian whom I intend to appoint—the maternal uncle, i.e., the applicant Syed Mahomed Yakub—should be put on terms.

Mr. Rasul states that there is a Mahomedan lady of position who is keeping a school and that if an application be made to her, she may be in a position to help the guardian of the infant in finding a governess for her. It appears that Babu Panna Lal Dey, the Attorney for the applicant, went and visited this lady and a letter from her has been placed before me that she can recommend a lady of the name of Hamedunnessa Khatun as governess for the infant. It is stated that she will be able to stay with the girl at her house except from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M., when she has to attend the Pardanashin Madrassa, as teacher and that she is able to get this governess on a pay of Rs. 15 a month with free board and lodging. The applicant through his counsel undertakes to appoint her, or failing her, a proper person who would be able to remain with this girl and assist her with her studies and live with her as a companion. The property of this infant yields an income of about Rs. 150 a month; she can well afford to pay for a suitable governess. I also make it a condition that the applicant will at all convenient times allow the female relatives of the infant to visit her and also such male relatives as the custom of the country and the custom of the family may allow, that he will offer no difficulties in the way of their communicating with her, or coming to see her. I appoint him guardian of the person and property of the infant on the above conditions. The guardian will have to give proper security to the satisfaction of the Court.

It was said that in respect of certain properties belonging to the infant's paternal estate, the applicant's interest was adverse. The applicant explained that certain properties were acquired by the father of the minor in the applicant's name and that thereafter he made a deed of gift of these properties to him. The matter has been adjudicated upon in the administration proceedings, and I do not think that his interest in these properties is such as to disqualify him from being the guardian of the property of the infant upon his furnishing proper security. The Court has ample jurisdiction, should sufficient ground be made out to change the guardian, when necessary in the interests of the infant. For the present, I see no reason to disallow the application.

Mr. B. C. Mitter.—I am entitled to my costs.

CHAUDHURI, J.—Yes, out of the estate.

Mr. B. C. Mitter.—The brother-in-law should pay the costs.

CHAUDHURI, J.—The costs of the applicant Syed Mahomed Yakub of this application will be paid out of the estate of the infant on taxation. The costs of the applicant in meeting the application of the brother-in-law will be paid by the brother-in-law, such costs to be taxed as costs of an application. His own application for guardianship will be treated as a hearing and will be assessed as such. The guardian will allow the minor to go and see her sister, should she so desire. If on any occasion the sister desires to stay with her elder sister for a day or so, such permission will be granted. The guardian also undertakes not to allow Abu Syed, the tailor's son, to come to the house or to communicate with the girl until she attains puberty.

Mr. Akbari.—She will be allowed to go and see her step-father.

Mr. B. C. Mitter—Objects.

CHAUDHURI, J.—No, only her sister. I will not make any special order about visits to the step-father. I feel sure that the guardian will not raise objections to any visit that the girl may intend to pay to her relatives.

IN THE MATTER OF MUSSTT. HURUNNESSA BIBEE.

The letter produced by Babu Panna Lal Dey about the governess will be kept on the file and the texts incorporated as part of this judgment.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), secs 107, 116—Oral lease for a year, with delivery of possession—Renewal every year by annual oral leases—Leases if valid—Non-delivery of possession—Holding over.

Where a lessee, to whom possession of the demised land was delivered under an oral lease for one year, continued to hold the land under successive oral leases each of one year's duration:

Held—That even if these later leases be invalid on the ground of non-delivery of possession [Sibendrapada v. Secretary of State (1)], there was a holding over by the lessee with the lessor's assent, within the meaning of sec. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act.

A series of successive leases each for one year is quite different from a lease from year to year.

These were appeals preferred on the 12th of April 1911, against the decrees of J. C. Twidell, Esq., District Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 21st of December 1910, reversing the decrees of Babu Digambar Lal, Munsif of Jamui, dated the 30th July 1910.

The Appellants who were Plaintiffs in the suits for rent out of which these appeals arose were proprietors of a 14 as. share in the mouzas in which the tenant's lands were situate and claimed to be the lessees of the remaining 2 as. share under annual oral thika leases commencing from 1313 onwards. This 2 as. share formed part of a waqf property of which Nawab Nisar Ali was the mutwali. The tenants Defendants took various pleas in defence on the merits and also challenged the title of the Plaintiffs to this two annas share. The Munsif overruled the Defendants' pleas concerning the merits, but held that the oral leases of the 2 as. share for the years in suit not having been accompanied by delivery of possession passed no title to the Plaintiffs in that share. He disallowed the claim of the Plaintiffs to a proportionate share of rent, and passed a decree in their favour for 14 as. of the amount claimed.

On appeal the District Judge agreed with the Munsif in holding that the Plaintiffs' title to the said 2 as. share was not established, and as it did not appear that the Plaintiffs ever collected a 14 as. share of the rent separately, he was of opinion that the whole suit should fail.

Hence these Second Appeals.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—These appeals arise out of suits for rent. The Plaintiffs claim to be the landlords of the whole property. With regard to 2 annas of it they say that they are thikadars under one Nisar Ali Khan who leased it to them for the year 1316, which is the year in suit, by a verbal agreement and that "previous to this also, temporary settlements for one year all along used to be obtained from the mutwali under a verbal agreement." The words "all along" mean, we are informed, the period from the year 1313. The Munsif found that a thika lease of these two annas had been given to the Plaintiffs for the year 1316. But he held that it was invalid, because it was not accompanied by delivery of possession and that there was no delivery of possession, because the Plaintiffs had been in possession of this interest of two annas from a long time before. The Plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge on the ground that the finding of the Munsif that the lease was invalid was incorrect. The learned District Judge agreed with the Munsif on the strength of the decision in Sibendrapada v. Secretary of State (1). It was held in that case that sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act must be construed strictly and that it could not be presumed that there was any delivery of property when the vendee had been in possession of it for a long time before the date of the sale. It has been argued before us that that was a decision under sec. 54 and has therefore no application to the present case which come under sec. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. But in my opinion there is no real or substantial difference between the terms of the two sections and if the view taken in that decision is right, it must be held that the oral lease of the two annas in 1316 was not accompanied by delivery of possession and was, therefore, invalid. This is not the view which was taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Kannan v. Krishnan (2), and I feel some difficulty in agreeing with the view of the learned Judges of the practical consequences of so strict a construction of the section. It does not appear to me, however, that this decision need be discussed further, because accepting it as a correct statement of the law, the Plaintiffs would still, in my opinion, be entitled to succeed. For if this lease of the two annas is invalid, I do not see how the Defendants can escape the effect of sec. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section provides that if a lessee remains in possession after the determination of the lease, with the lessor's assent, the lease is deemed to be renewed from year to year. This section has of course no application when the lessee is holding under a subsisting lease; but when the existing lease goes out, then the lessee, if he remains in possession with the assent of the lessor, is entitled to be regarded as a lessee from year to year under the section.

It has been argued that really this was all along a lease from year to year, that, therefore, it could be made only by a registered instrument and that sec. 116 would have no application. This, however, is not the case. It is stated in the plaint and appears to be found by the Courts below, that temporary settlements for one year each have all along been given.

(1) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 207 (1907).

(2) I. L. R. 13 Mad. 324 (1890).

MITARJIT MAHTON v. SHEIKH LEAKUT HOSAIN.

The result of these successive leases may be very similar to the ultimate effect of a lease from year to year for the whole period, but a series of successive leases is evidently quite different from a lease from year to year. Successive leases for one year each are terminable without notice, but a lease from year to year is only terminable by six months' notice. It seems perfectly clear that in 1313 a valid lease was given to the Plaintiff by an oral lease for one year, accompanied by delivery of possession. Since then if the subsequent leases are invalid, the Plaintiffs must be regarded as entitled to the benefits of sec. 116. In this view of the case, they are entitled to the whole of the rent, and the other question raised by the District Judge does not arise, namely, whether a landlord who sues for the whole rent and fails to prove that he is the 16 annas landlord is entitled to succeed in part. All the other points have been found by both the Courts below in favour of the Plaintiffs.

The result is that the appeals and the suits must be decreed with costs throughout.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree. I think that upon the facts found, sec. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act is a complete answer to the defence.

Appeal allowed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—The questions involved in these Appeals relate to the apportionment of the compensation money awarded under the Land Acquisition Act, in respect of certain lands acquired under that Act. The claimants No. 1 represent the zemindary interest, while the claimants No. 2 represent the putni and mokurari interests in the land acquired.

By a petition filed in the Court below, the rival claimants agreed that if the Court found the mokurari (referred to in the proceedings as thika) had not become merged in the putni, the claimants No. 1 will pay claimants No. 2 Rs. 4,000 out of the total compensation which they will receive in full settlement of their entire claim as mokurraridar, but if the Court found that the mokurari had become merged in the putni, the claimants No. 2 will receive from the claimants No. 1 only Rs. 1,000 in settlement of the claim.

The first question therefore is whether the mokurari merged in the putni. It appears that on the 29th July 1855, the zemindars granted a mokurari lease in respect of 2,000 bighas of lands at a rent of Rs. 6,000 to one Nobin Chandra Ghose who got the tenure specially registered under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. Subsequently the zemindars granted a putni lease of the entire zemindary to certain persons called the Dutts and these Dutts on the 15th February 1865 purchased the mokurari interest from Nobin Chandra Ghose, so that both the putni and the mokurari interests came into the hands of the Dutt family in 1865. The Dutts however appear to have dealt with the two interests separately. Some of them mortgaged their shares both in the putni and the mokurari to one Kristo Kishore Ghose, who purchased the shares at a sale held on the 8th April 1868 by the Official Assignee. After the death of Kristo Kishore his widow Barnomoyee Dasi (the predecessor of the claimants No. 2) brought a suit for recovery of possession of the shares so purchased, and obtained a decree for possession of a 4 annas share of the putni and the mokurari, respectively. The putni mahal was subsequently sold under Reg. VIII of 1819 and was purchased by Barnomoyee on the 13th May 1880. This sale of the putni however did not affect the mokurari, because as already stated, the mokurari was specially registered under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. Barnomoyee therefore became the owner of the entire putni, and of a 4 annas share of the mokurari in 1880. She purchased the remaining shares in the mokurari in 1886, so that the entire putni and the entire mokurari came into the hands of Barnomoyee in 1886 and eventually passed into the hands of the claimants No. 2 by partition with their co-sharers. It has been found that the mokurari and the putni interests have been kept separate all along The finding has not been challenged and could not be challenged on the evidence.

Now, the question is whether under these circumstances, the mokurari merged in the putni interest, and the question will have to be considered (i) apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and (ii) with reference to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

The authorities on the question, how far the doctrine of merger, apart from statutory enactment on the point, is applicable to lands in the Mofussil in this country, do not seem to be uniform. In the case of Woomesh Chander Goopto v. Rajnarain Roy (1), Sir Barnes Peacock C. J. said, "My own impression is that the doctrine of merger does not apply to lands in the Mofussil in this country. "I believe it is the practice in this country for zemindars to purchase and keep on foot putni talooks without the necessity of adopting the practice which is followed in England of purchasing such talooks in the name of a trustee to prevent the merger of them. If the doctrine of merger applies, a zemindar could not purchase and hold a putni tenure in Khas possession." The other learned Judges (Loch and L. V. Jackson, JJ) concurred with the Chief Justice, but the question was not decided in that case. The same view was taken in Thomas Savi v. Punchanon Ray (2). In Prosunno Nath Ray v. Jagat Chunder Pundit (3). however, where the putnidar of a village which formed a portion of a zemindary purchased the zemindary right in that village, and from the date of his purchase did dot pay rent as putnidar, it was held by Markby and Prinsep, JJ. that he could not set up his title as putnidar against his co-sharer zemindars in a suit brought by them for contribution. In the later case of Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhury (4) Pigot and Banerjee, JJ. said, "no authority has been shown to us for holding that the doctrine of merger applies to such cases as this in India, that is, that a putni interest must merge in the zemindari interest, if they came into the same hands, and we do not think that we should for the first time as far as we are aware apply the doctrine to such a case." So that in 1891 it was taken to be settled law that the doctrine of merger did not apply to the case of a putni interest coming into the same hands as the zemindary interest. The case of Prosunno Nath Ray v. Jagat Chunder Pundit (3) does not appear to have been cited before them, but the decision in that case apparently proceeded upon the ground that the putnidar, after his purchase of the zemindary did not treat the putni as a subsisting tenure.

In a subsequent case, Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (5), the learned Judges (Geidt and Ormond, JJ) relying upon a passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Kishen Dutt Ram v. Mamtaj Ali Khan (6) held that a mokurari interest merged in a superior shikmi interest. The passage relied upon runs as follows:—"Again what followed on the purchases? Had they been made by or on behalf of a talookdar holding under an absolute title, as distinguished from a mortgage title, the tenures would as a matter of course have merged in the talook." But the decision of the Privy Council proceeded upon the respective rights of the mortgagor and the mortgagee with reference to accessions to mortgaged property. And apart from that, the tenures which were dealt with in that case were certain birt tenures which had been purchased by the mortgagee in possession of a talook taking advantage of his position as mortgagee, and who did not take any steps to keep them alive as distinct sub-tenures for his own benefit. In describing the nature of the tenures, their Lordships pointed out that "they were sometimes resumable, and when resumed, would fall into the parent estate." The tenures therefore were in their nature entirely different from a putni or a mokurari tenure which is not resumable. That the tenures were treated as different from putni or mokurari tenures will be apparent from the following passage in which their Lordships observed:—"It may well be that when the estate mortgaged is a zemindari in Lower Bengal, out of which a putni tenure has been granted, or one within the ambit of which there is an ancient mokurari istemrari tenure, a mortgagee of the zemindari, though in possession, might purchase with his own funds and keep alive for his own benefit that putni or mokurari. In such cases the mortgagee can hardly be said to have derived from his mortgagor any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase, which would not be possessed by a stranger, and may therefore be held entitled equally with a stranger, to make it for his own benefit. In such cases also the putni, if the putnidar failed to fulfil his obligations, would not be resumable by the zemindar, and the zemindari would always have been subject to the mokurari." We do not think, we are pressed by the decision in Surja Narain Mandal's case (5), and that for several reasons, first, because the tenures to which the observations of the Privy Council were applicable were in their nature wholly different from a mokurari tenure, secondly, the mokurari does not appear to have been kept alive as a distinct sub-tenure, and, lastly, the decision might have been based solely, and was in fact ultimately based upon the ground that the mokurari interest was an accession to the mortgaged property under sec. 70 of the Transfer of Property Act, and apart from any question of merger. Surja Narain Mandal's case (5) was followed in the recent case of Ulfat Hossain v. Gayani Dass (7), by Stephen and Vincent, JJ. and the same observations (except the last) apply to that case also. In the present case the mokurari has all along been treated as a distinct sub tenure, and we are accordingly of opinion that apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act there was no merger.

The next question is whether the provisions of sec. 111, cl. (d) of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable to the present case.

It has been contended on behalf of the Respondents that sec. 111, cl. (d) is inapplicable, because Barnomoyee Dasi acquired a 4 annas share of the mokurari before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and the remaining 12 annas share after the passing of the Act, and that the entire mokurari therefore did not vest in her at the same time. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. A person may acquire the superior and the subordinate interests piecemeal at different times, but if ultimately the entire interests of the lessor and the lessee are vested in the same person at any point of time, we think there is a merger of the two interests at that particular point of time, in any case to which the provisions of sec. 111, cl. (d) are applicable. We do not agree with the Court below in holding that the mokurari lease was a lease for agricultural purposes within the meaning of sec. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act. A putni lease was held in the case of Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosonno Chowdhury (8) not to be a lease for agricultural purposes. The mokurari in the present case is described as a talook, and was registered as a talook under Act XI of 1859, and having regard to the evidence and circumstances bearing on the point we are of opinion that it was not a lease for agricultural purposes. But the mokurari was created before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and the question therefore arises, whether the provisions of sec. 2, cl. (c) prevent the operation of sec. 111, cl. (d) of that Act. Sec. 2, cl. (c) enacts "nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of any such right or liability."

In the case of Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosonno Chowdhury (8), the putni interest was created after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and it was held by Maclean, C. J. and Banerjee, J. that the putni interest was determined on a purchase of the same by the zemindar even at a sale held in execution of a decree. With reference to the case of Jibanti Nath Khan v. Gokool Chunder Chowdhury (4) where it was held that there was no merger of the putni in the zemindari, Banerjee, J. observed that the case was decided without any reference to the Transfer of Property Act, and was a case to which the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were inapplicable by reason of cl. (c) of sec. 2 of that Act, the putni lease in that case having been granted, and the putni having been created before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation.

A contrary view, however, has been taken by Stephen and Vincent, JJ. in the case of Ulfat Hossain v. Gayani Dass (7). The learned Judges were of opinion that sec. 2, cl. (c) did not prevent the operation of sec. 111, cl. (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, although the mokurari was created before the Transfer of Property Act came into operation.

The learned Judges observed that were it not for paragraph (d) of sec. 2, they should be inclined to hold that the section only saved the effect of the repeals that it enacts in the cases specified, and that the word 'herein' meant 'in this section' and not 'in this Act,' but did not decide the point. We do not agree with this view of the section, but it is unnecessary to discuss the matter as there was no decision upon the point in that case. The learned Judges then observed as follows :—"The right or liability which the Respondent desires to set up is the right of the original mokuraridar Waliuddin to hold his mokurari unaffected by sec. 111 (d) of the Act, if the mokurari and the parent estate both came into his hands, and this right, he contends, must be passed on to Rai Radha Kissen the purchaser of the mokurari. This is, in our opinion, an incorrect view. The right in this case to which cl. (e) must apply, if it applies at all, is the right of Radha Kissen to the same effect, and it was constituted by his legal relation to the Defendants in the mortgage suit at the time of the mortgage sale which took place after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. We hold therefore that there is nothing to prevent sec. 111 (d) of the Act from applying and that a merger has taken place."

With great respect for the learned Judges we are unable to agree in this view. A legal relation might have been constituted at the time of the mortgage sale which took place after the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, but it cannot be denied that a legal relation was constituted when the mokurari was created before the passing of the Act. And if the right of the mokuraridar was to hold the mokurari unaffected by sec. 111, cl. (d) of the Act, on the mokurari and the parent estate coming into his hands (as we think it was), such right by reason of the express provisions of sec. 2, cl. (c) could not be affected by any of the provisions of the Act, and the subsequent legal relation constituted after the passing of the Act could not affect the right arising out of the legal relation constituted before the Act. If the view taken in Alfat Hossain's case (7) be correct, every lease created before the passing of the Act would be governed by the provisions of the Act, irrespective of the rights arising out of the legal relation constituted before the Act. We are unable to construe sec. 2, cl. (c) in this manner, and are of opinion that the view, taken by Banerjee, J in the case of Promotho Nath Mitter v. Kali Prosonno Chowdhury (8) of the effect of the Act upon a lease created before the passing of the Act, is correct. Had the decision in Ulfat Hossain's case (7) been based upon the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, it might have been necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench, but the learned Judges in that case held that there was a merger apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. It is unnecessary therefore to refer the question to a Full Bench. We are of opinion that there was no merger of the mokurari in the putni apart from the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, because the mokurari was kept alive as a separate sub-tenure from the putni, and the provisions of the Act did not apply, as the mokurari was created before the passing of the Act.

(8) I. L. R. 28 Cal. 744 (1901).

HIRENDRA NATH DUTT v. HARI MOHAN GHOSH.

It is unnecessary to consider whether, having regard to the fact that the mokurari was treated as a subsisting sub-tenure, there could be a merger even if the provisions of the Act were applicable.

The next question is whether the claimants No. 1 are entitled to any portion of the compensation awarded for the trees. The trees are part of the putni talook and we are of opinion that the Court below is right in holding that the claimants No. 1 are not entitled to any portion of the compensation awarded for the trees.

We also agree with the Court below in holding that the claimants No. 1 are not entitled to share in the amounts awarded to the tenants in cases No. 810, 815 and 817, to which claimants No. 2 became entitled by purchasing the rights of the tenants, after the award had been made in their favour. The amounts were awarded to the tenants, and the claimants No. 2 are entitled to the same not as putnidars, but by virtue of their purchase from the tenants.

The last question is what is the amount of the remission which the claimants No. 2 are entitled to get in the putni rent on account of the lands acquired. The Court below has held that they are entitled to get a proportionate abatement on the principles laid down in the cases referred to in its judgment. But these principles cannot apply where, as in the present case, there is an agreement between the zemindar and the putnidar on the point. The agreement contained in the putni kabuliat as translated in the paper-book runs as follows :—"Neither I nor my successors will ever get any remission in rent on the score of inundation, drought, fallow, failure of crops, construction of culverts and embankments, and diluvion of lands by rivers, etc., but if you obtain from Government any remission in revenue on account of lands acquired by it for construction of culverts, embankments and roads, a proportionate amount of remission will be obtained by me from you in respect of the rent payable to you on account of this putni."

The words "a proportionate" do not occur in the original, and the concluding portion literally translated runs as follows :—"but if you obtain remission (lit. the amount of remission or the extent of the remission which may be obtained by you) in the sudder jama from the Government in respect of lands taken up for culverts, embankments or roads, I also shall get from you reduction of jama on account of all the said remissions in the jama of this putni." The language is ambiguous, but it appears to us upon a proper construction of the agreement as a whole that the putnidar is to get the same amount of remission which the zemindar would get in the Government revenue, and this is the construction which the parties themselves placed upon the agreement in a previous suit. It appears that in a suit for rent brought by the zemindars against Barnomoyee Dasi (the predecessor of claimants No. 2) so far back as 1894, she claimed remission in the putni rent for the same amount which the zemindar was entitled to get remission of in the Government revenue on account of certain lands acquired for the construction of the Budge-Budge Railway in 1888, and the Court granted remission accordingly. The lands in the present case were not acquired for construction of "culverts, embankments or roads," but we agree with the learned Judge in holding that these words are merely illustrative and not exhaustive. We are accordingly of opinion that the claimants No. 2 are entitled to an abatement in the putni rent only for Rs. 310, i.e., the amount which the zemindar will get abatement of in the Government revenue. To this extent the decree of the Court below will be varied, and in all other respects the appeals will be dismissed. In the circumstances, we make no order as to costs.

Judgment,

MOHESH CHANDRA KOONDOO and others, Defendants, Petitioners,
v.
AMAR CH. KOONDOO, Plaintiff, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II para. 20, cl. (2)—Private award, application to file—Forum of institution and appeal, if depends on value of award or value of matter in dispute—Change of law.

When an award has been made on a reference to arbitrators without the intervention of the Court, the amount of the award and not that originally in dispute between the parties determines the forum in which an application to file the award is to be made and the Court to which appeal shall lie from the order passed on the application.

NARSINGH DAS v. AJODHYA PROSAD SUKUL (1) not followed in view of the change in the law.

This was a Rule granted on the 17th of November 1913, against the order of Mr. P. E. Cammiade, District Judge of Backergunj, dated the 24th of September 1913.

By that order the District Judge returned for presentation to the High Court an appeal preferred against an order of the Subordinate Judge directing an award passed by an arbitrator on a reference made by the parties without the Court's intervention to be filed.

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 203 (1903).

The material portion of the order of the District Judge was as follows :—

"The Respondents have raised a further objection to the effect that as the subject matter of the award exceeded Rs. 5,000, no appeal lies to this Court. It would appear from the statement filed before the arbitrators that the Respondents claimed from the Appellant far more than Rs. 5,000, as the items in which specific sums have been named carrry their claim to over Rs. 10,000. In support of their contention, the Respondents refer to Narsingh Das v. Ajodhya Prosad Sukul (1) and Subraya Prabhu v Manju Nath Bhakta (2). Both these cases, which relate to the filing of an award made at an arbitration without intervention of Court, bear out the contention of the Respondents that in cases of this nature, the value of the entire matter referred to arbitration and not the amount awarded to any party decides the forum of the suit, and from this it follows that it also decides the forum of the appeal. The Appellant refers me to the case of Gulab Khan v. Abdul Wahab Khan (3), and to the Full Bench Decision in the case of Ijjatulla Bhuiyah v. Chandra Mohan Banerjee (4), which relate to claims for mesne profits where the amount to be decreed is left to be ascertained by the Court. There are material differences between the two classes of cases, which have been pointed out in Narsingh Das's (1) case, and it is impossible to follow in a case like the present the principles laid down by their Lordships in the cases cited by the Appellants.

"It is accordingly ordered that the memorandum of appeal be returned to the Appellant for presentation before the High Court."

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose for the Petitioners.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chackrabartty and Gunada Charan Sen for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CARNDUFF J.—The Petitioner, Mohesh Chandra Kundu, claimed Rs. 6,000 odd as the balance due to him on various transactions in respect of the purchase and sale of jute from the Opposite Party, Nandakumar Kundu. The opposite party, on the other hand, claimed that there was a balance of Rs. 5,000 odd due to him on the transactions. The dispute was referred to an arbitrator without the intervention of the Court, and the arbitrator eventually awarded Rs. 2, 005 as due to the Opposite Party from the Petitioner. The Opposite Party then applied to the Subordinate Judge at Barisal under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure to have the award filed in Court. The Subordinate Judge allowed the application. The petitioner thereupon appealed against this order under sec. 104, sub-sec. (1), clause (f) of the Code to the District Judge, who held by an order passed on the 24th September last, that the appeal lay to the High Court. Accordingly the memorandum of appeal was returned and was presented to this Court as soon as it re-opened after the long vacation. It was then out of time and the Petitioner obtained from us the present Rule, by which the Opposite Party was called upon to show cause why the time for filing the Appeal in this Court should not be extended, or, in the alternative, why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside and the Appeal remanded to him for re-hearing.

Two questions thus arise, namely, first whether the District Judge was right, and, secondly, if so, whether the time for appealing to this Court should be extended under sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

As regards the first point, sec. 21, sub-section (1) clause (a) of the Bengal, Agra, and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887 provides that an Appeal from a decree or order of a Subordinate Judge shall lie to the District Judge where the value of the original suit in which, or in any proceeding out of which, the decree or order was made, did not exceed five thousand rupees.

Para. 20, cl. (2) of the Second Schedule to the Code provides that an application for filing an award shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the Applicant as Plaintiff and the other parties as Defendants, and para. 21 provides that where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award which is not impeachable except on certain grounds has been made thereon, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according thereto.

The position, then, seems, to be this: By reason of his application to have the award in his favour filed in Court the Opposite Party is to be regarded as a Plaintiff suing the Petitioner in the Court applied to for the amount of the award, that is, for Rs. 2,005. That Court had nothing whatever to do with the merits of the case or the subject-matter of the original dispute, but had merely to decide, with reference to the provisions I have just quoted, whether there had been an arbitration and an award. Had it found that there had not been such an arbitration or award, the parties would, I presume, have been relegated to the position which they occupied before the reference to arbitration and would have had to begin again de novo. But, as the matter stands, it seems to me that the value of what may be called the suit was simply Rs. 2,005. In this view, the District Judge was wrong and he ought to have tried the appeal. An argument has been founded on the language of para. 20 of the Second Schedule to the Code, under which the forum is made to depend in the first instance on the "subject-matter of the award." It is contended that, as was held in Narsingh Das v. Ajodhya Prosad Sukul (1) under the corresponding provisions of sec. 525 of the Code of 1882, that what is meant is the dispute referred to arbitration. But I am inclined to think that there is a difference between the words "the matter to which the award relates", which were employed in the old Code, and the phrase "the subject-matter of the award", which is used in the new. And, having regard to the change of language, to what an award is, and to the context, I am of opinion that the Legislature in 1908 must have intended to make the value depend on the thing awarded rather than on the matter originally in dispute. As I have already pointed out, the Court asked to file the award has nothing to do with the merits of the original dispute, and, that being so, I fail to see any reason for making the forum depend on the value of the whole dispute.

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 203 (1903).

In the result, I would make this Rule absolute, set aside the order of the District Judge, dated the 24th September 1913, and direct that the appeal be heard by him. I would make the costs of this hearing costs in the cause, and assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Let the records of both the Rule and the Appeal be sent down at once.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree though with some hesitation as to the true meaning of the expression "subject-matter of the award", which occurs in r. 20 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code.

Rule made absolute.

The Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903), sec. 10, sub-secs. (1) and (2), secs. 15, 18—Order extraditing accused—Treaty between British and Nepal Governments—Non-compliance with statutory provision—Jurisdiction of High Court to revise extradition order.

from the law, but is in fact without jurisdiction not being sanctioned by it, it must be assumed that the Magistrate acted in his general jurisdiction, and as such his order is revisable by the High Court and liable to be set aside at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it.

EMPEROR v. HUSSAINALLY NIAZALLY (1) & IN THE MATTER OF AHADYER (2) followed.

This was a reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., from R. L. Ross, Esq., Sessions Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 21st of May 1913, recommending revision by the High Court of the order of Mr. A. Slater, Subdivisional Magistrate of Madhubani, dated the 26th of April 1913, directing the surrender of the accused to the Nepal authorities to meet the charge pending against them.

The facts will appear from the Letter of Reference which is set out below.

"On a certain day in Bhadra 1966 (1909 A. D.) one Peary Goar was assaulted by six persons, among whom were the Petitioners Gulli Sahu and Gobind Sahu, by order of the Zemindar Jia Lal in village Malini in Nepal. Seven days after the assault Peary Goar died. The complaint, a copy of which has been sent from Nepal is dated 26th Jaith 1967, and was made by Musammat Bhagwatia, the widow of Peary Goar. On 29th January 1912, the Sub-Inspector of Phulpras Police-station in the District of Darbhanga, sent an enquiry slip to the Lieutenant of Hanumannagar in Nepal, through the Subdivisional Magistrate of Madhubani, enquiring whether one Gulli Sahu was wanted in the case of the murder of a Goala. On 22nd February 1912, the Lieutenant of Hanumannagar replied that Gulli Sahu was an accused in that case and asked for his arrest promising to send proof of criminality and nationality according to the Treaty. On 9th March 1912, a warrant of arrest was issued. On 12th November 1912, Gulli Sahu surrendered to the Subdivisional Magistrate of Madhubani and was released on bail. On 12th January 1913, the Lieutenant of Hanumannagar sent the evidence of criminality and nationality and also requested the arrest of Gobind Sahu. The Subdivisional Magistrate of Madhubani after examining the witnesses for the prosecution and for the defence has found that 'the accused have committed an offence and are fugitives from justice and should therefore be surrendered to meet the charge.'

"Even if it be assumed that the nationality of the Petitioners is Nepalese, as to which there is a conflict of evidence, and if it also be assumed that Peary Goar died in consequence of the assault, as to which there is, on the one hand, in the absence of medical evidence, no direct proof, while there is a good deal of evidence to the effect that he died from natural causes, the widow of the deceased being one of the witnesses who deposes to this effect, still there is no proof and no finding that an extradition offence has been committed. The evidence is that the deceased was assaulted with kicks and blows from the fist, that he became unconscious, that his wife and nephew came and gave him water to drink, that he revived and was taken home, and that he died 7 days later.

"The case is by virtue of the provisions of sec. 18 of the Indian Extradition Act of 1903 (XV of 1903), governed by the Treaties in force between the British Government and the Government of Nepal. The extradition offences under the Treaties are specified in Art. 4 of the Treaty of 10th February 1855 (Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. II, p. 118, Ed. of 1909), and in the Treaties of 23rd July 1866, (ib. p. 121) and of 24th June 1881 (ib. p. 122). The only possible heads of crime to which the act of the Petitioners could be referred are those specified in Art. 4 of the first mentioned Treaty as (1) murder and (2) maiming. There is no evidence of any intention to cause death or of any knowledge that the assault must in all probability cause death. The case is not a case of murder under the law of British India. The Petitioners might, if the evidence was believed, possibly be convicted of causing grievous hurt, although it seems doubtful whether there is evidence of anything more than simple hurt. But even grievous hurt is not equivalent to maiming which is a special form of hurt. 'To maim is to injure any part of a man's body which may render him in fighting less able to defend himself or annoy his enemy.' (Archbold, 23rd Ed., p. 842, citing 1 Hawkin's Pleas of the Crown, c. 55, s. 1). It is true that under the Indian Extradition Act any form of hurt is an extradition offence: but the terms in the Treaty must be taken as they stand, and must be construed in their strict technical sense.

"The Magistrate has not considered it necessary to submit any explanation."

Messrs. Jackson and K. N. Chaudhuri (with Babu Rajendra Prosad) for the Accused.

Mr. S. Ahmed for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., recommending for revision an order passed by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Madhubani, directing the surrender of two alleged fugitive offenders, viz., Gulli Sahu and Gobind Sahu to the Nepal authorities.

In Bhador 1966 (1909) Gulli Sahu and Gobind Sahu with 4 other persons are said to have assaulted one Peary Goar under the orders of a zemindar, one Jia Lal, in village Malini within the territory of Nepal. Seven days after the assault Peary Goar is alleged to have died. His widow Musammat Bhagwatia laid a complaint before the Nepal authorities on 26th Jeth 1967. Two out of the 4 other persons were tried in Nepal and convicted. One of the two was sentenced to be hanged and the other sentenced to transportation for life. On the 29th January 1912, the Sub-Inspector of Phulpras Police-station, within the Subdivision of Madhubani, sent an enquiry slip through the Subdivisional officer to the Lieutenant of Hanumannagar in Nepal, enquiring if one Gulli Sahu was wanted by the authorities of Nepal in the case of the murder of a Goala. The Lieutenant whose official position corresponds to that of a Sub. divisional officer in British India replied on the 22nd February 1912 that Gulli Sahu was accused in that case and asked for his arrest promising to send proof of criminality and nationality. On the 9th March 1912, the Subdivisional Magistrate of Madhubani issued a warrant of arrest against Gulli Sahu who, on surrendering before the Magistrate on 18th November 1912, was released on bail by that Magistrate. On the 12th January 1913 the Lieutenant of Hanumannagar sent the evidence of criminality and nationality to the Subdivisional Magistrate and requested that Gobind Sahu should also be arrested. On 3rd March 1913 Gobind Sahu was arrested and released on bail. After examining witnesses for the prosecution and the defence, the Subdivisional Magistrate by his judgment, dated the 20th April 1913, directed the surrender of the accused Gulli Sahu and Gobind Sahu to the Nepal authorities. The Magistrate concludes his judgment thus :—"The accused, I hold, have committed an offence and are fugitives from justice and should therefore be surrendered to meet the charge."

The learned Judge in making this reference to us points out—(1) that there is a conflict of evidence as to the nationality of the accused, (2) that while there is no direct proof that Peary Goar died in consequence of the assault, there is a good deal of evidence that he died of natural causes, the evidence of the widow being to that effect, (3) that there is neither proof nor finding that an extradition offence has been committed, and (4) that the evidence if believed, at best makes out a case of grievous, if not of simple, hurt only. The learned Judge further points out that although under the Indian Extradition Act any form of hurt is an extradition offence, this case, by virtue of sec. 18 of the Act is governed by the Treaties between the British Government and the Government of Nepal, and does not disclose any offence for which an extradition order can be passed.

The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer on behalf of the Crown urges that regard being had to the provisions of sec. 15 of the Indian Extradition Act, it is the Government of India or the Local Government alone and not the High Court that have the power to discharge the person for whose arrest warrant has been issued under the Act. In this connection it is necessary to examine the provision of the law under which the Magistrate has purported to act. It is frankly admitted on behalf of the Crown that sec. 7 of the Act is not the Magistrate's authority for his proceedings, but it is urged that his action is covered by the provisions of sec. 10 of the Act. The portions of that section material to this case are contained in sub-secs. (1) and (2) that run thus :—

"(1) If it appears to any Magistrate of the first class or any Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in this behalf that a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction is accused or suspected of having committed an offence in any State not being a Foreign State and that such person may lawfully be surrendered to such State or that a warrant may be issued for his arrest under sec. 7, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, issue a warrant for the arrest of such person on such information or complaint and on such evidence as would, in his opinion, justify the issue of a warrant, if the offence had been committed within the local limits of his jurisdiction."

"(2) The Magistrate shall forthwith report the issue of a warrant under this section, if the offence appears or is alleged to have been committed in the territories of a State for which there is a Political Agent, to such Political Agent and in other cases to the Local Government."

Bearing the above provisions of the law in mind the order of the Magistrate is open to attack on several grounds. Firstly, he issued the warrant, at least in the case of Gulli Sahu, on mere information without any evidence. Secondly, he has not reported the issue of the warrants to the Political Agent, there being one in Nepal. Thirdly, he has made an enquiry into the case without a warrant or warrants issued by the Political Agent in or for the Nepal State. Fourthly, he has ordered the surrender of the accused on

NOTES.

High Court Notice.

The High Court, Appellate Side, will be closed on Monday the 22nd June 1914, being the day fixed by the Government of India for the celebration of the Birthday of the King Emperor.

HIGH COURT, APPELLATE SIDE. The 1st June 1914.	H. M VEITCH, Offg. Registrar.

Ranimoni Dasi v. Radha Prosad Mullick.

We are pleased to find that their Lordships of the Privy Council have affirmed the decision of the High Court on appeal in the case of Ranimoni Dasi v. Radha Prosad Mullick (15 C. W. N. 113). The decision of the Privy Council is reported at p. 873 of this issue. The trial Judge, Fletcher, J., felt bound by the interpretation placed on the Will by the Judicial Committee on a previous occasion [Ranimoni Dasi v Radha Prosad Mullick (L R. 35 I. A. 118: s c 12 C W. N. 729)] and in fact the terms of the Order in Council were so unequivocally against the contention of the party who has in the present instance succeeded before the Judicial Committee, that his Lordship expressed himself to the effect that his application ought never to have been brought in the Court, and he dismissed it with costs to all parties. The Appellate Court reversed that decision, but on the question of costs directed that the costs of all parties in the Court of first instance and of the Appeal should come out of the estate. The Privy Council too in affirming this judgment of the Appeal Court directed that the costs of all parties as between solicitor and client should come out of the estate.

Transferee of Occupancy-holding.

On Tuesday last, the 2nd June 1914, a Full Bench of the High Court, consisting of his Lordship the Chief Justice and Stephen, Woodroffe, Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ., delivered judgment disposing of some very disputed points bearing on the position of a purchaser of the whole or a portion of an occupancy holding The tendency of later decisions has been, on the whole, more favourable to the purchaser than earlier ones, but this, in their Lordships' view, is due to economic causes. "The life of the law," the judgment goes on to add, in the words of a well-known jurist, "is not logic, but experience."

The judgment does not discuss in detail the arguments addressed to the Court, but sums up their Lordships' considered opinion as follows :—

First, that the transfer of the whole or a part of an occupancy-holding is operative against the raiyat

(a) where it is made voluntarily, or

(b) where it is made involuntarily and the raiyat having knowledge thereof fails or omits to have the sale set aside.

A sale, their Lordships explain, is made involuntarily when it is in execution of a money-decree, but not of a decree, founded on a mortgage or charge voluntarily made

Secondly, such a transfer would be operative against the landlord in all cases in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. Where the transfer is a sale of a whole holding, the landlord in the absence of his consent is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding, but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or

(b) a relinquishment of the holding, or

(c) a repudiation of tenancy.

Whether there has been a relinquishment or repudiation or not, depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case.

Finally, as against all other persons except the landlord and the raiyat, the transfer is operative where it would be operative against the raiyat. In this view, it was held that a transferee of a portion of an occupancy-holding sold in execution of a rent decree obtained against the raiyat is his representative within the meaning of sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is a person whose immoveable property has been sold.

The above formulation of the law, from its form, appears to be intended for acceptance by the Legislature, should it be so inclined. But it does not cover the whole ground. At the close of the judgment, his Lordship the Chief Justice was understood to say that questions not covered by this judgment arising in other cases not yet heard and depending on the decision of the Full Bench may be brought before his Lordship by the Vakils concerned, by application. It is sincerely to be hoped that the course adopted will help the Court in arriving at a real settlement of the divergencies of judicial opinion which centre round the position of the transferee of an occupancy-holding.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Folkstone Corporation v. Brockman. Before LORDS LOREBURN, KINNEAR, DUNEDIN AND ATKINSON. 6th February 1914.

Dedication of a road as a public highway—User.

This appeal raised the question as to whether a certain road had been effectually dedicated to to the public as a highway for foot-passengers.

The Justices held that the maker of the road did not intend to dedicate it as a public highway.

The Court of Appeal reversed that decision, and in support of it, it was urged that the user of the road by the public created a presumptio juris in favour of dedication. Their Lordships allowed the appeal, and in the course of his judgment, Lord Kinnear said as follows :—

The nature of user, and consequently the weight to be given to it varied indefinitely in different cases, and whether it would import a presumption of grant or dedication must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case.

After referring to Mann v. Brodie (10 App. Cas. 378) and Poole v. Huskisson (11 M. and W., 830), his Lordship said that the points to be noted in those decisions were, first, that the thing to be proved was intention to dedicate, and, secondly, that while public user might be evidence tending to instruct dedication, it would be good for that purpose only when it was exercised under such conditions as to imply the assertion of a right, within the knowledge and with the acquiescence of the owner of the fee. Lord Justice Buckley had failed to advert to the critical fact with which the Justices introduced their conclusions—namely, that it was not the intention of Lord Radnor to dedicate the road as a public highway.

In conclusion, he said that on the question of dedication he was of opinion that the decision of the Justices was final and conclusive as a decision of fact; that the Court below had no authority to inquire whether in fact it was right or wrong; and that no ground had been brought forward for setting it aside as contrary to law.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD AND SHARFUDDIN, JJ. No. 1987 OF 1913. KERAMUDDIN SARKAR, Petitioner v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 23rd January 1914.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 110, 112, 117—Procedure to be followed as in warrant cases—Opportunity to produce defence evidence.

This was a Rule against an order of Mr. S. C. Ghatak, Subdivisional Magistrate of Thakurgaon, dated the 5th of November 1913, directing under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., the Petitioner to execute a bond in Rs. 500 with two sureties of Rs. 500 each, to be of good behaviour for one year, appeal from which order was dismissed by Mr. J. A. Ezechiel, District Magistrate of Dinajpur, on 8th of December 1913.

Their Lordships delivered the following judgment in this case :—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Dinajpur to show cause why the order under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., passed against the the Petitioner should not be set aside, firstly, on ground that the provisions of sec. 112 have not been complied with, inasmuch as the substance of the information received from the police has not been recorded and the accused person had no notice thereof; and secondly, that the case is triable as a warrant case and the accused had a right to have the witnesses properly cross-examined and to have processes issued on any witnesses he desired to call in defence. The Rule could have been stated more shortly by saying that it had not been heard firstly with reference to the provisions of sec. 112 and secondly with reference to the provisions of sec. 117.

As regards the alleged breach of the provisions of sec. 112, the learned Magistrate points out in his explanation that he has followed the letter of secs. 112 and 113. There was a proceeding drawn up. The person in respect of whom it was drawn was present in Court, and it was read over to him and the substance explained to him. But the conditions in which he was present in Court are rather different to what is the ordinary practice. He was only present in Court, because he had been brought there by a policeman after being locked up all night. He therefore certainly had no opportunity of producing his defence witnesses; and even if, we were inclined to discharge the Rule as regards sec. 112, the disregard of the provisions of sec. 117 is quite fatal to the case. That section provides that in proceedings under sec. 110 the procedure for warrant cases shall as far as possible be adopted, and that means, as it obviously must mean, that a person who has such a serious charge alleged against him must have time to bring his witnesses and have their evidence recorded. In the present case it appears that the accused had no opportunity of choosing and producing his own evidence or having them produced by summons. He had no chance of choosing his own legal adviser, the learned Magistrate having come out from the station accompanied by a single muktear, who, as it happened, was able to appear on behalf of the accused, although of course he knew nothing about his case. The only witnesses he could have examined were the bystanders who happened to have gathered round the cutchery out of curiosity, and it cannot be said that those were the witnesses whom he voluntarily chose in his defence.

The proceedings clearly show that the man had not anything like a fair trial, and the order under sec. 110 must therefore be set aside, and if it is necessary to take further proceedings, those proceedings must be taken with due regard to the spirit as well as to the letter of the law.

The Petitioner will be discharged from the security bond.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE, and MULLICK, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1636 OF 1912. HALDHAR JHA, Defendant, Appellant v. SYED SHAH MAHAMAD ASHRAF ALAM, Plaintiff, Respondent. Heard 22nd April. Judgment, 27th April 1914.

Enhancement—Lease for term—Enhancement conditioned on non-performance of certain act—Breach of covenant—Waiver during continuance of lease—Enhanced rent, if payable after expiry of lease.

This was a suit for rent based on a kabuliyat. The suit was decreed by the Courts below. The kabuliyat on which the suit was based expired and it was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the tenant held over under the kabuliyat and was bound by its terms. The kabuliyat was for the years 1304 to 1312. Mangoes were to be planted in the first year of the lease and were to be made ready for bearing at the end of 5 years, that is to say, at the end of 1308. If the tenant failed to carry out these conditions, he was liable for rent at the rate of Rs. 10 per bigha. It was found that the tenant did not plant any trees. The Plaintiff however had previously sued for rent at the rate of Rs. 3 a bigha for the years 1309 to 1312.

Held, that the case came under the Tenancy Act.

Under the Tenancy Act enhancement of the rent of raiyats, whether occupancy raiyats or non-occupancy raiyats, is greatly restricted. These restrictions constitute a valuable protection for the tenants, and the Courts should always be very careful to prevent landlords from evading these restrictions by inducing improvident tenants to take lands at lower rents with a stipulation for future enhancement.

Held also, that as the Plaintiff sued for rent at Rs. 3 for 1309 to 1312, he could not after the expiration of the kabuliyat obtain any higher rate which he had waived during the term itself. The tenant held over under the same terms as in the years 1309 to 1312.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MULLICK, J. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 2889 AND 3347 OF 1911. SRI NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. CHULHAI KHAN AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. Heard, 17th April. Judgment, 28th April 1914.

Suit, maintainability of—Road-cess return—Non-entry of land in possession of tenant, effect of—Cess Act, sec. 20.

The suits were for recovery of arrears of rent. The Defendants held batai lands under the Plaintiffs. The defence inter alia was that as the Plaintiffs did not enter the holdings in the Road-cess return, they could not claim any rent. Both Courts dismissed the suits, holding that it was the Plaintiff's duty, when filing in 1898 the cess-return concerning that portion of his estate, which related to the land in suit, to mention in the return that the lands in suit were in possession of the tenant Defendants.

Held, that sec. 20 of the Cess Act was no bar to the maintainability of the suit; sec. 20 does not enact that if a proprietor, whether by mistake or otherwise, enter a piece of land in the wrong part of his return, he thereby loses his right to claim rent.

The object of the Cess Act is that no land within the estate shall escape assessment. It is immaterial for the purpose of the Collector, whether the land is entered as in possession of the tenant or in the khas possession of the zemindar.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MULLICK, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 939 OF 1912. BIDHUMUKHI CHOWDHURANI, Plaintiff, Appellant v. ASMATULLA and others, Defendants, Respondents. Heard, 15th April. Judgment, 28th April 1914.

Protected interest—Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 160 (g)—Seputni.

One Lachmipat, the owner of a putni taluk, granted a dar-putni to Manulla. This dar-putni vested in equal shares in three persons named Bhairab, Nil Chand and Jaga Mohon. Nil Ch[illegible] died, and his estate passed into the possession of Bhairab as executor. Jaga Mohon gave a seputni settlement of his one-third share in the dar-putni to Bhairab, acting both on behalf of himself and as executor of the estate of Nil Chand. The Plaintiff had, by a purchase at a sale for arrears of rent, become sixteen annas proprietor of the dar-putni. He stated that he had by notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act annulled the encumbrance created by the seputni and that therefore the Defendants who were tenants upon the land were liable to pay the whole rent [illegible] him. The lower Appellate Court dismissed t[illegible] suit.

On appeal to the High Court, it was contende[d] that the seputni was not a protected interest withi[n] the meaning of sec. 160 (g) of the Bengal Tena[ncy] Act. A general permission to grant a seputn[i] though in writing, was not sufficient and tha[t] what was required was a special permission i[n] each case.

The patta by which the dar-putni was creat[ed] expressly stated that the dar-putnidar might gra[nt] seputni settlements.

Held, all that sec. 160 (g) of the Bengal T[en]ancy Act requires is that the permission of t[he] proprietor should be express, and that it should [be] in writing. As these requirements were fulfill[ed] in this case, the seputni was therefore a protect[ed] interest within the meaning of the Act.

A general authority, such as was contained [in] the dar-putni patta under consideration, [is] sufficient to protect the seputni.

Semble, the scope of sec. 160 (g) is identi[cal] with that of sec. 11 of the Putni Regulation.

a procedure not known to the Extradition Act.

It is true that sec. 15 of the Act ousts the jurisdiction of this Court to enquire into the propriety of a warrant issued under Chap. III, but where the order of the Magistrate is sought to be justified under an authority supposed to be derived from the law, but is in fact without jurisdiction, not being sanctioned by it, we cannot but assume that the Magistrate has acted in his general jurisdiction and as such his order is revisable by this Court and liable to be set aside at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it.

In the view we have taken of the law in this case, we are supported by similar views expressed by learned Judges of the Bombay High Court and the Punjab Chief Court, respectively, in the cases Emperor v. Hussainally Niazally (1) and In the matter of Akadyer (2).

Before concluding this judgment we desire to quote the following passage from the judgment of the Privy Council delivered by the Lord Justice Mellish in Attorney-General for the Colony of Hong-kong v. Kwok a-Sing (3) which Magistrates dealing with such cases may profitably bear in mind :

" Suppose that a subject of China kills an Englishman within English territory or on board an English ship, under circumstances which according to English law might amount to manslaughter only, could it possibly be right for the English Government to surrender such a person to the Chinese Government to be tried according to Chinese law to which the distinction between murder and manslaughter may be wholly unknown ? "

We accept the reference of the learned Judge made to us for the reasons indicated in this order and we direct that the accused be discharged.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
30, March.

RANIMONI DASI and anr., Appellants,
v.
RADHAPRASAD MULLICK and ors., Respondents.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Construction put on terms of Will with reference to events that had then happened, if binding on happening of a fresh event—Gift to daughters in equal shares and each share to each daughter's sons on her death—Gift to class, some of whom not in existence at testator's death—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), sec. 3.

A testator who died in 1875 directed his executors (in certain events which happened) to make over and divide the whole of his estate "unto and between" his two daughters "in equal shares to whom and their respective sons" "he gave, devised and bequeathed the same, but should either of his said daughters die without leaving any male issue surviving, but leaving the other daughter her surviving, then and in such case the surviving daughter and her sons shall be entitled to the share of the deceased daughter, or in case of the death of either daughter leaving sons, the share of such daughter was to be paid to such her son or sons, share and share alike." R, one of the daughters, being childless adopted a son J in 1900. P, the other daughter, had several sons born in the testator's lifetime and several others born subsequently. In 1904, when both R and P were alive, the question whether under the Will they were each entitled absolutely to a moiety of the estate having been raised at the suit of R, the Privy Council on 14th May 1908 held that in the events that had happened, R and P were entitled to the estate "in equal shares for life with benefit of survivorship between themselves." P died in 1909 and in 1910 one of her sons who were born in the testator's lifetime applied for a further construction of the Will in the events that had happened, making his brothers and J parties. The High Court (on appeal) held that the fresh event that had happened (i.e., P's dying leaving sons) took the case outside the purview of the Order in Council which in the events which had then happened was concerned only with the question, viz, what interest the daughters took under the Will; that the intention of the testator was that the sons of a daughter were to succeed to her moiety on her death; but that in view of the rule of Hindu Law that no person not in existence at the testator's death can take, under his Will and the proviso in sec. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, only those sons of P who were then in existence would succeed to P's moiety under the Will (the gift to grandchildren, though a gift to a class of persons some of whom could not take under the above rule of Hindu Law, not being for that reason defeated as regards those born in the testator's lifetime). R and J having appealed to His Majesty in Council:

Held—That the judgment of the High Court was correct and based on correct reasoning.

RADHA PRASAD MULLICK v. RANIMONI DASI (2) affirmed.

The appeal was dismissed subject to a direction that the decision was not to prejudice the position of J, if and when the question of his right to take under the Will should come before a Court for decision.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the High Court at Calcutta in its Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 1st August, 1910, on an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the said High Court in its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction, dated the 4th March, 1910.

The only questions for determination on this Appeal arose on the construction of the Will of one Hari Das Dutt, deceased, and of the Judgment and Decree of the Judicial Committee in Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dasi (1).

The facts relating to the litigation are shortly as follows :—The said Hari Das Dutt, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, died on the 30th October, 1875, leaving a Will executed on the day of his death and leaving the following members of his family him surviving, viz :—Surnomoni Dasi, his widow, the Appellant Ranimoni Dasi and Premmoni Dasi, since deceased, his daughters, Radha Prosad Mullick, since deceased, the Respondent Kasi Prosad Mullick and Jyoti Prosad Mullick, since deceased, his grandsons by his daughter Premmoni Dasi. Ranimoni Dasi was married to Rama Kant Sen and was childless.

Hari Das Dutt appointed the said Surnomoni Dasi, his father Madhusudan

Dutt, and his uncle Dwarkanath Dutt Executrix aud Executors of his Will and gave them directions and authority to adopt a son to him. On the 20th December, 1875, Surnomoni Dasi and Dwarkanath Dutt took out Probate of the said Will from the said High Court.

Under the powers contained in the Will, Surnomoni, on the 9th August, 1876, adopted the said Jyoti Prosad Mullick, son of Premmoni Dasi, as a son to Hari Das Dutt, but he died intestate and unmarried, on the 9th January, 1881. On the 9th February, 1881, Surnomoni then adopted one Amrito Lall Dutt as a son who on the 1st August, 1894, instituted a suit against Surnomoni and others for the construction of the Will of Hari Dass Dutt, and for administration of his estate. The said suit terminated in the decision of the Judicial Committee, dated the 2nd May 1900, by which it was held that the power of adoption contained in the said Will was invalid and incapable of execution under the Hindu Law, and the suit was accordingly dismissed. On the 2nd November, 1900, Ranimoni with her husband, Rama Kant Sen, adopted the second appellant Jugul Kissore Sen as their son.

Surnomoni died on the 14th August, 1904. On the 19th December 1904, Ranimoni Dasi instituted the present suit in the High Court at Calcutta against Premmoni Dasi, her sons Radha Prosad Mullick, the Respondent Kasi Prosad Mullick and the Respondents Peary Lall Mullick and Behary Lall Mullick, both of whom had been born after the death of the said Hari Das Dutt and the Respondent Jugul Kissore Sen, for the construction of the said Will, and the administration of the estate of the testator, and she claimed inter alia, that in the events which had happened, there being no adopted son, she and the said Premmoni were each entitled under the said Will absolutely to a moiety of the said estate. The said suit was defended and written statements were filed on behalf of the respective Defendants, (1) Peary Lall Mullick and Behari Lall Mullick; (2) Radha Prosad Mullick and Kasi Prosad Mullick; (3) Premmoni Dasi and (4) Jugul Kissore Sen.

The Clause in the Will upon which construction was sought was as follows :—

"But in case none of such adopted sons survive my said wife or in case of either surviving my said wife and dying under the said age without leaving a son or sons, I desire and direct my Executors after the death of my said wife or the death of such son after her, but under the age of 18 years without leaving a son or sons, to make over and divide the whole of my estate, both real and personal, unto and between my daughters in equal shares to whom and their respective sons, I give, devise and bequeath the same, but should either of my said daughters die without leaving any male issue surviving, but leaving my other daughter her surviving, then and in such case the surviving daughter and her sons shall be entitled to the share of the deceased daughter, or in case of the death of either daughter leaving sons, the share of such daughter is to be paid to such her son or sons share and share alike."

On the 31st July, 1905, Judgment was delivered and it was held that the said Plaintiff and Premmoni Dasi were each entitled under the said Will to a moiety to the said estate absolutely. No opinion was expressed on the question as to whether the gift was defeasible in the event of a daughter dying without leaving male issue, it being held to be unnecessary to do so unless and until the event took place. A Decree was made containing the above declaration of title and directing enquiries, partition, and other relief and ordering that the costs of all parties should be paid out of the estate.

On the 12th September, 1905, the said Radha Prosad Mullick and the Respondent Kasi Prosad Mullick, and on the 14th September, 1905, the Respondents Peary Lall Mullick and Bahari Lall Mullick filed Appeals respectively to the said High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction against the said Judgment and Decree. On the 23rd April, 1906, the said High Court delivered Judgment and made a Decree affirming the Judgment and Decree of the Lower Court on the question of construction, but varying it by omitting certain enquiries directed thereby, and the order for partition on the ground that such enquiries and partition could not take place inasmuch as the representatives of the estate of Surnomoni Dasi, against whom the said enquiries were directed, and of the said testator were not parties to the suit. It was held that it was premature to decide whether the gift to the daughters was defeasible in the event of either daughter dying without male issue and that that question should be left open until it had been ascertained what the events were. Liberty was granted to any of the parties to apply as they might be advised and, as to a partition of the properties, if and when the necessary parties were before the Court. The costs of all parties were directed to be paid out of the estate.

The said Radha Prosad Mullick and the Respondent Kasi Prosad Mullick appealed from the said Judgment and Decree to His Majesty in Council, and on the 14th May, 1908, this Board delivered Judgment in the said Appeal; Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dasi (1). It was held that on the true construction of the said Will the Plaintiff and Premmoni Dasi, the daughters, were entitled to the testator's estate for life in equal shares with benefit of survivorship between themselves. The said Decree of the High Court, dated the 23rd April, 1906, was varied by substituting for the words contained therein "are each absolutely entitled to a moiety or half part of the estate of the testator including the additions and accretions thereto" the words "are in the events that have happened entitled to the estate of the testator including the additions and accretions thereto in equal shares for life and with benefit of survivorship between themselves." In other respects the said Decree of the High Court was affirmed and costs of the Appellants and Respondents were ordered to be paid out of the estate.

On the 25th August, 1908, an Order was made in the said Suit on the application of the Plaintiff Ranimoni Dasi, adding as parties Defendants to the said Suit, N. S. Watkins, the Administrator pendente lite of the Estate of Hari Das Dutt deceased, with a copy of the Will annexed, and the Administrator-General of Bengal, the Executor of the Will of the said Surnomoni Dasi, it being further ordered that such addition of parties was made at the Plaintiff's risk, and without prejudice to the questions as to whether the Administrator-General was a necessary party, and whether there could be a partition in this Suit.

RANIMONI DASI v. RADHAPRASAD MULLICK.

On the 8th May, 1909, the said Premmoni Dasi died, leaving the said Radha Prosad Mullick and the Respondents Kasi Prosad Mullick, Peary Lall Mullick and Behary Lall Mullick her sons, her surviving. On the 10th December, 1909, an Order was made directing an entry as to the death to be recorded in this suit.

On the 17th February, 1910, the said Radha Prosad Mullick, under the liberty to apply contained in the Decree of the High Court, dated 23rd April, 1906, instituted the present proceeding by presenting a Petition to the High Court, praying, inter alia, that this suit may be further proceeded with in order that the issues and questions therein remaining undetermined may be determined and disposed of by a further Decree or otherwise; that to this end the suit may be set down for further hearing; that all necessary and proper orders and directions may be made and given for the purposes aforesaid, and that the rights of parties to and in the moiety of the estate of the said Hari Das Dutt, the income of which was payable to the said Premmoni during her life, may be determined in this suit.

On the 4th March, 1910, the High Court (Fletcher, J.) delivered Judgment and made an Order dismissing the said application with costs. It was held that the question raised by the application was concluded by the judgment and decree of the Judicial Committee, dated the 14th May, 1908, on the ground that it had decided that the said daughters Ranimoni and Premmoni had a life estate with benefit of survivorship between themselves, and that even though the said Premmoni had died leaving sons, under the terms of the said judgment and decree, her interest in the moiety passed to the Plaintiff Ranimoni for life.

On the 14th April, 1910, the said Radha Prosad Mullick appealed to the said High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction against the said Judgment and Decree. On the 1st August, 1910, the said High Court (Sir L. Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J. delivered judgment) reversed the said Judgment and Decree of the Lower Court and decreed the said Appeal

In the course of his Judgment the learned Chief Justice (Woodroffe, J., concurring) said as follows :—

"First then I turn to the order in Council and there I find it declared that the daughters 'are in the events that have happened entitled to the estate of the said testator * * * in equal shares for life and with benefit of survivorship between themselves.' It may be that these words, standing alone, and isolated from the surrounding circumstances, have the force that has been ascribed to them by the learned Judge, but to appreciate their real meaning regard must be had to the facts to which they relate and to the opinion on which they were founded. Now it is stated by Their Lordships almost at the outset of their opinion that the only question raised on the Appeal was as to the nature of the estate which in the events which had happened, the testator's daughters took under the terms of the Will. And at this point it is important to bear in mind what those events were, and also that the High Court had determined that the daughters each took a half share in the testator's estate absolutely, but expressed the view that it would be premature to decide whether that gift was defeasible in the event of either daughter dying without male issue, and they expressly left the question open until it was ascertained what the events were. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, while dissenting from the view that the daughters took absolute interests, went on to describe the utmost interest that they did and could take in the events which up to that time had happened as between themselves and apart from any subsequent disturbing event.

"As I read the opinion and Order in Council, there was no intention to decide the rights of sons in reference to a subsequent event which might or might not happen, and this would accord with what I understand to be the practice in ordinary cases. But now a fresh event has happened, for Premmoni has died leaving sons, and this as it seems to me takes the case outside the purview of the Order in Council so that the effect of the Will under the altered circumstances has to be considered.

"Now the Will contemplates two events and the provision applicable in the event that has happened is in these terms: 'In the case of the death of either daughter leaving sons the share of such daughter is to be paid to such her son or sons share and share alike,' and in connection with this provision the opening words of the gift have to be borne in mind. Though this part of the clause has not been specifically construed by their Lordships of the Privy Council they have indicated their view as to what the testator meant, and have stated that according to the true construction of the Will the intention of the testator was to create in favour of his daughters an estate for life with a remainder over to their sons. It seems probable that the word remainder was not used with the special significance that attaches to it in English real property law, but borrowed from the language of the Court [see Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dasi (3)] to emphasize the contrast between the view taken by the High Court and the Privy Council. Accepting then this as the intention of the testator, is there any legal obstacle in its way? Now it has to be borne in mind that after the testator's death two sons were born to Premmoni, the Defendants Peary Lall and Behari Lall and that of her sons living at the testator's death Jyoti Prosad predeceased her.

"The gift is to a class and the first point to be decided is one of construction: who come within the class? Having regard to the date of the Will it is regulated as to its interpretation by the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, and the incorporated provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865.

"The method of incorporation has been the subject of judicial comment and even animadversion, but the canon of construction to be applied has been thus defined by Lord Esher in the case in Re: Wood's Estate (4):—'If a subsequent Act brings into itself by reference some of the clauses of a former Act, the legal effect of that, as has often been held, is to write those sections into the new Act, just as if they had been actually written in it with the pen, or printed in it, and, the moment you have those clauses in the later Act, you have no occasion to refer to the former Act at all.' This then is the rule by which the Court is to be guided.

"Sec. 85 of the Succession Act provides that "where a bequest is made to a class of persons under a general description only, no one to whom the words of the description are not in their ordinary sense applicable shall take the legacy.'

"By sec. 98 it is provided that 'where a bequest is made simply to a described class of persons, the thing bequeathed shall go only to such as shall be alive at the testator's death.'

"These two sections are in Chapter XI and they deal with the construction of Wills—Chapter XII however is concerned with a different topic 'void bequests" and by section 100 it is provided :—

'Where a bequest is made to a person not in existence at the time of the testator's death, subject to a prior bequest contained in the Will, the later bequest shall be void, unless it comprises the whole of the remaining interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed.'

"Sec. 101 formulates the rule against perpetuity with which we have nothing to do, while sec 102 provides that 'if a bequest is made to a class of persons, with regard to some of whom it is inoperative by reason of the rules contained in the two last preceding sections or either of them, such bequest shall be wholly void.'

"Sec. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, is by way of a proviso to the portions of the Succession Act incorporated by sec. 2 and it is thereby provided that nothing in the Act contained shall authorise any Hindu, Jaina, Sikh or Buddhist to create in property any interest which he could not have created before the first day of September, 1870. Whether this provision has regard only to the nature of the interest or extends also to the capacity of the person in whose favour the interest is expressed to be created has been a matter of considerable discussion. If the narrower view be adopted, nothing in the shape of repugnancy would arise on the construction of the Act, but this cannot be said of the wider view; indeed its adoption involves to an appreciable extent the nullifying of that which has been incorporated. But to discuss the respective merits of these rival constructions would profit nothing, for the point is covered by authority binding on us and going as far back as 1882 when it was decided by the Court of Appeal reversing the Judgment of Wilson, J., as he then was, that the proviso I have read controls both the quantity and quality of the interest created and in their natural and ordinary meaning include the capacity of a donee to take; Alinga Monjori Dabee v. Sonamoni Dabee (5) Pontifex, J, in Cally Nath Naugh Chowdhury v. Chunder Nath Naugh Chowdhury (6) expressed an opinion to the same effect.

"Accepting then, as I must, this as the true meaning of sec. 3, I will now consider what its effect is in the circumstances of this case".

"The gift is to the son or sons of Premmoni share and share alike, but their possession of it is deferred until a time later than the death of the testator by reason of the prior bequest to their mother, so that under sec. 98 the property at their mother's death would go to such of the sons as should be then alive and to the representatives of any of the sons who had died since the death of the testator. According to this the property would go in five equal shares to Radhaprosad, Kasi Prasad, Peary Lall, Behary Lall and the representatives of Jyoti Prosad. But this result must be controlled by the proviso in sec. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act and the rule of Hindu Law that a bequest to a person not in existence at the time of the testator's death is void so that the saving provision in sec. 100 cannot be applied.

"The result then is that Peary Lall and Behary Lall cannot take. What then is the effect of this?

"On behalf of Ranimoni it is contended that as some of the class cannot take, the whole gift is void and in support of this Leake v. Robinson (7) has been cited. But this contention proceeds on a misapplication of this case and a misconception of the true nature of a gift to a class.

"In Leake v. Robinson (7) the gift to the class failed, because the class could not be ascertained within the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities. The gift here in no way offends that rule: its only fault is that the class of legatees includes some who were not in existence at the date of the testator's death and were thus under a personal incapacity: and the difference is obvious. In a gift to a class the testator looks to the body as a whole rather than to the members constituting that body [Kingsbury v. Walter (8)] and the class is in a sense personified. But if that class cannot be ascertained until a time beyond that permitted by the rule against perpetuity there is no class to which the gift can legally be made. But if as here the fault is, not that the class cannot be ascertained within the period permitted by law, but that certain members of the class are incapable of taking, different considerations apply. Now according to sec. 98 sons living at the death of the testator would take and the provision in favour of the representatives of deceased sons shows that the sons would take vested interests. Apart from the rule against gifts to unborn persons the class thus taking would be liable to enlargement with a corresponding divestment of vested shares.

"But where that rule applies there can be no divestment, for a vested interest cannot be divested by a person incapable of taking.

"The incapacity therefore of some members of the class does not invalidate the gift under the Succession Act which in this respect seems to be in harmony with the current of English authority on this point, e.g., Dawset v. Sweet (9), Young v. Davies (10), Shaw v. McMahon (11) and Fell v. Biddlph (12).

"This view of sec. 98 and its effect is borne out by the general scheme of the Succession Act; Chap. XII is headed 'Of void bequests,' and it indicates the grounds on which a gift to a class is void: they are limited to those set forth in secs. 100 and 101. But the gift here certainly does not offend the rule against perpetuity contained in sec. 101: the only question is whether it comes within sec. 100. I do not think it does: but for the rule of Hindu Law which forbids the gift to an unborn person this gift in reversion to sons would be good as it comprises the whole of the remaining interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed and the gift to the unborn sons would therefore have been valid.

"It is the rule of Hindu Law in combination with the interpretation that has been placed on sec. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act that avoids the gift, so that it cannot be said that the bequest to the class is inoperative with regard to some of that class by reason of the rule contained in sec. 100. And so the ground of avoidance on which the gift to Premmoni's sons as a class is open to attack is not one for which provision is made by the Act. The result then is that the gift to the class is good, but reading sec. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act in the sense that has been ascribed to it, the afterborn sons Peary Lall and Behary Lall cannot take so that those now entitled to participate are Radha Prosad, Kasi Prosad and the representatives of Jyoti Prosad and between them the property bequeathed will be divided in three equal shares.

"Having regard to all the circumstances, I think this is a case where the costs of all parties in the Court of first instance should come out of the estate and also the costs of the Appeal. There will be liberty to apply to the Judge sitting on the Original Side, if necessary, as to realizing the money necessary for raising these costs. The case will now go back to the Court of first instance."

The present Appeal to His Majesty in Council was preferred by Ranimoni Dasi and Jugal Kissore.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. K. Brown for the Appellants submitted that the moiety of the estate enjoyed by Premmoni Dasi for her life passed by survivorship to the first Appellant. The High Court erred in holding that no grandson of the testator born or adopted since 1875 could take under his Will. Jugal Kissore was joined in the suit, because it might be said that he, not having been in existence at the death of the testator, was not entitled to succeed to Ranimoni.

[The Court intimated that Jugal Kissore's interest was not to be considered in the case.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—Their Lordships have had an opportunity of considering the Judgment of the Court below on the question as to whether on the death of the younger daughter leaving male issue the estate passed over for life to the elder daughter, and they are of opinion that it is correct, and is based on correct reasons. They will therefore humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss this Appeal.

With regard to the contention of the Appellants that the Court was wrong in holding that no grandchildren of the testator born or adopted, after the death of the testator on 30th October 1875, could take under his Will, their Lordships will not advise His Majesty to make any order except that the present advice is not to prejudice the position of the second Appellant, if and when such question comes before a Court for decision.

The costs of all parties as between solicitor and client will come out of the estate.

L. P. APP. No. 9 OF 1913.

JENKINS, C. J. D. CHATTERJEE, J. 1914, 31 March.	GURU DAS DAS, Defendant, Appellant, v. KALI DAS CHANGA, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 85 (2)—Under-raiyat, sub-lease by—Permanent lease by under-raiyat if invalid—Application by analogy of statutory provision to cases outside it—Permanent lease described as one for nine years to meet objection of Registering Officer.

Sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to a permanent lease created by an under-raiyat in favour of a sub-lessee: nor can the provisions of that section be applied to such a case by analogy.

RAM CHUNDER DUTT v. JUGHES CHUNDER DUTT (1) referred to.

The leases in this case were held to be permanent leases.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 24th of February 1913 against a decree of Beachcroft, J., dated the 24th of January 1913, in Second Appeal No. 2954 of 1911, which had been preferred against a decree of G. N. Ray, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Noakhali, dated the 3rd of July 1911, reversing a decree of Maulvi Mahomed Ibrahim Hossein, Munsif, Lakhipur, dated the 30th of January 1911.

The Plaintiff who sued the Defendant in ejectment was an under-raiyat, the Defendant being the successor in interest of lessees under the Plaintiff. The Defendant pleaded that his lease conferred on him a permanent, heritable and transferable interest.

The Munsif decreed the suit; the District Judge on appeal reversed that decision holding that the tenancy of the Defendant was a permanent one. Two kabuliyats respectively of 1890 and 1900 were put in by the Plaintiff. In the former no period was mentioned, but there was a clause that the lessee might transfer by gift or sale and enjoy possession putra-poutradikrame. Another clause forbade cutting of trees and digging of tanks. Below the body of the deed was a sentence apparently added after the document was completed but before its registration to the effect that the lease was for 9 years. The District Judge was of opinion that this last clause was not operative having been entered obviously to meet the objection of the Registering Officer in view of sec. 85 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The later kabuliyat of 1900 opened with a clause to the effect that the sub-lease was for a period of 9 years only, and it appeared that a clause giving power to transfer by gift and sale and enjoy possession generation after generation had been struck out before registration. The District Judge held that this kabuliyat was executed, because the parties were under a wrong impression as to their rights.

BEACHCROFT, J., before whom the Second Appeal came on for hearing reversed the decision of the District Judge, holding that the sub-lease did not create a permanent tenancy, but one only for 9 years, and that even if it did in terms purport to create a permanent tenancy, it would be invalid under sec. 85 (2), and that in either event, this suit brought at the end of the term of 9 years should succeed and the Plaintiff should recover possession.

The Defendant preferred this Appeal under the Letters Patent.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghose for the Appellant :—The Plaintiff-Respondent is a dar-osat raiyat or a sub-tenant in the first degree and the Defendant-Appellant is nim-dar-osat raiyat or sub-tenant in the second degree. The Appellant holds the disputed land under two leases. The Lower Appellate Court held that the leases conferred on the Appellant a permanent right, that the clauses to the effect that they were for 9 years were put in to satisfy the Registrar who might otherwise have refused to register the leases and that the provisions of sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act could be pleaded by the landlord and not by the raiyat himself.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE :—Sec. 85 refers to leases by raiyats and not by under-raiyats. Here both the parties are under-raiyats.]

Babu Jogendra Nath Mukerjee for the Respondent :—The principle underlying sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act should be applied to sub-leases granted by under-raiyats. The Legislature meant to lay down rules for all grades of sub-infeudations under this section, otherwise there would be this anomaly that while a raiyat would not be able to create leases for terms exceeding 9 years, under-raiyats would be competent to do so.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Referred to the observations of the Judicial Committee in Ram Chunder v. Jughes Chunder (1).]

Moreover, there were express clauses to the effect that the leases were for 9 years. The express provision could not be defeated by the intention of the parties as gathered from the circumstances.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This Appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment.

(1) 19 W. R. 353 (1873).

The Munsif passed a decree in the Plaintiff's favour. That was overruled by the Lower Appellate Court. But the decision of the Lower Appellate Court has in turn been reversed by the judgment of this Court, and it is from that judgment that this Letters Patent Appeal is preferred.

The Judge of the Lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that as between the parties to this litigation the Plaintiff had created a permanent tenancy in favour of the Defendant, Appellant before us. The documents are susceptible of that meaning and we see no reason for disturbing the learned Judge's conclusion.

An argument was addressed to us suggesting that sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had some bearing on the case. It is manifest from the terms of that section that it does not directly apply as between the parties to this suit.

Then it has been suggested that by analogy the section applies. To that I will make answer in the words of the Privy Council in Ram Chunder Dutt v. Jughes Chunder Dutt (1) that arguments from analogy may arise where a principle of law is involved; but where the Courts are dealing with the positive enactments of a statute, reasons founded upon analogies are scarcely applicable.

The conclusion therefore to which I come is that the judgment of Mr. Justice Beachcroft must be set aside and that of the Lower Appellate Court restored; and the Appellant must receive from the Respondent his costs of both Appeals in the High Court.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 344 OF 1911.

FLETCHER, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1914,
24, March,

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI, Claimant No. 1, Appellant,
v.
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Opposite Party, Respondent.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), sec. 23—Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), sec. 557, cls. (c) and (d)—Bustee land, acquisition of—Mode of valuation—Future use of land if can be considered in ascertaining value—Evidence as to under-tenants and rents paid by them, if relevant to determine market-value—Evidence as to sales of lands other than bustee lands in the neighbourhood, if admissible—Cl. (c), sec. 557, meaning and effect of—Cl. (d), presumption under, nature of.

A piece of bustee land was acquired at the expense of the Corporation of Calcutta and the Special Land Acquisition Judge on a reference under sec. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act refused to admit evidence relating to the under-tenants and the rents paid by them and disallowed questions put to a valuer with regard to sales of other lands in the neighbourhood which were not bustee lands:

Held—That cl. (c) of sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act which amends the Land Acquisition Act means that when a land is compulsorily acquired, any use to which the land may be put in future, should not be taken into consideration in determining its value, but the valuation shall be determined according to the market-value then existing of the land or building in the position that the matters then were. That this clause precludes evidence being given of the purposes to which bustee lands can be put in future and the Land Acquisition Judge rightly refused to admit evidence relating to the under-tenants and the rents paid by them, such matter being not relevant for the purpose of ascertaining the market-value as defined by sub-sec. (c) of sec. 557.

That the Judge was right in disallowing the questions put to the witness with regard to sales of other lands in the neighbourhood which were not bustee lands, although in ordinary cases under sec. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act such evidence would have been admissible.

That the presumption under cl. (d) of sec. 557 is a rebuttable presumption and it is only until the contrary is shown that the Court is entitled to presume that twenty-five times the annual value of the property as entered in the Assessment book is the value of the property within the meaning of sub-sec. (c).

This was an Appeal preferred on the 31st of August 1911 against the decree of Arthur Goodeve, Esq., Special Land Acquisition Judge of 24-Parganas, dated the 8th of May 1911.

A piece of land measuring 6 bighas 7 cottahs, 11 chittaks and 20 square feet, forming part of a bustee known as the Halsi Bagan Bustee, was acquired by the Special Land Acquisition Collector under the orders of the Local Government on behalf of the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta for the purpose of making a road for the main sewer of the fringe drainage area. The Collector awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 700 per cottah for an area of 3 bighas, 12 cottahs, 6 chittaks, 30 square feet, forming the front portion of the land in question to a depth of 60 feet and at a rate of Rs. 450 per cottah for an area of 2 bighas, 15 cottahs, 4 chittaks, 35 square feet, forming the back portion of the land. He also awarded Rs. 2,308-15-6 for certain huts on the land. There was a reference to the Special Land Acquisition Judge of 24-Parganas under sec. 18 of Act I of 1894 by the Collector at the instance of two of the claimants, Nos. 1 and 2.

Before the Judge one Mohadeb Sadhukhan, a house-owner of Halsi Bagan was examined as a witness for the claimant No. 1 and questions relating to the under-tenants and the rents paid by them for land and structures thereupon were put to him, but disallowed by the Court as will appear from the material portion of the deposition of this witness set out below.

"I hold 15 cotthas of land under the Maharaja of Cossimbazar on the west side of the Ultadingi Junction Road. It is a little way distant from the road. I reach the Ultadingi Junction Road by going over other land of the Maharaja. Halsi Bagan Bustee belonged to Rani Sornamoyi of Cossimbazar. The present owner is Maharaja Manindra Chandra Nandi. I paid Rs. 29-10-6 to the Maharaja with rates and taxes. I have got under-tenants.

Q.—How many under-tenants?

(Question disallowed as being irrelevant.)

Q.—How much do they pay to you? (Question disallowed as being irrelevant.)

I have got my account-books here.

Can you say from your account-books how much rent they pay you?

(Question disallowed as being irrelevant.)

(Note.—The Court disallows all questions relating to the under-tenants and the rents paid by them for land and structures thereupon.)

Another witness examined before the Judge on behalf of the claimant No. 1 was Krishna Chandra Banerji, a Civil Engineer and Surveyor, who had been a Superintending Engineer in the Public Works Department before he retired from Government service; certain questions put to this witness were disallowed by the Court. The nature of the questions will appear from the portion of the deposition of this witness set out below.

Q.—Do you think that the land in suit would be valued on a rent basis? (Question disallowed as being vague.)

I consider myself competent to give an opinion as to the value of land in this Court.

I would go upon sales and other things, not upon rentals in this case.

Q.—Why would you not go upon rental?

A.—From my experience of bustee lands in Calcutta, I find that rents are as a rule very low. If calculated on that basis, it would be much lower than the award given by the Collector. By it I mean the assessment.

Q.—What do you mean by rentals?

A.—By rental I mean rents paid by tenants to the landlord. I take the Maharaja claimant to be the landlord in this case.

Q.—Did you make any enquiries into the rentals realised by the under-tenants?

A.—Yes. I did.

Q.—What did you find? (Question disallowed as the result of the enquiries is not evidence.)

Q.—With reference to sales in the neighbourhood, what sort of plots would in your opinion be most useful in assisting the Court to determine the market-value of the lands in suit? (Question disallowed, as this is a matter for argument from the evidence.)

The depth of the acquired land from the Ultadingi Junction Road along the Halsi Bagan Road is 60 feet on the south and is 145 feet on the north along the Nandan Bagan Lane.

The frontage along the Ultadingi Junction Road is 900 feet.

Q.—Would you as a surveyor draw any inference from these figures? (Question disallowed as being too vague.)

Would you indicate any practical working such as regards road frontage per cottah on which surveyors may act safely? (Question disallowed as being vague.)"

Large frontages increase the value of land. Of the two plots of land of the same size, the one with a larger frontage is of greater value.

Q.—How would you compare the sales marked in your map with the acquired land? (Question disallowed as being too general and vague.)

The Special Land Acquisition Judge upheld the Collector's award and the claimant No. 1 preferred an Appeal to the High Court.

Mr. Caspersz, Babus Jogesh Chundra Dey, Jyoti Proshad Sarbadhikary, Hemendra Nath Sen and Sarat Kumar Mitter for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Chandra Mitter for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an Appeal from a Judgment of the learned Special Land Acquisition Judge of 24-Parganas, dated the 8th May 1911. The land which has been acquired for a public purpose is a certain piece of bustee land situated in Halsi Bagan within the Original Jurisdiction of this Court, that is, within the limits of the Presidency town and the statutory powers under which the land been acquired are the Land Acquisition Act of 1894, as varied by sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, III (B. C.) of 1899. The point that has been argued before us in this Appeal turns solely upon the question whether the learned Judge of the Court below placed a right construction on the provisions of that section of the Calcutta Municipal Act and was right in excluding evidence as to sales of other properties in the neighbourhood which were not sales of bustee lands. The learned Counsel for the Appellant conceded that, unless he could satisfy us that the learned Special Land Acquisition Judge had erred in excluding that evidence, there was no evidence before us on which we ought or could award to the Appellant more than Rs. 590 a cottah which has been allowed by the Lower Court.

Now, sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act provides as follows :—"Any land or building which any Municipal authority authorised by this Act to acquire," that means one of the three Municipal authorities, namely, the Corporation, the General Committee and the Chairman who are the three Municipal authorities to carry into effect the Act, "may be acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894; and for that purpose the said Act shall be subject to the following amendments." We may here mention only one of the amendments which is necessary for our purpose, and that is (c) which provides: "the market value of the land or building shall be deemed for the purposes of clause first of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act to be the market value according to the disposition of the land or building at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under sec. 6 of the said Land Acquisition Act."

The clause is not very happily worded, but it is quite clear what it means, namely, that when a land is compulsorily acquired, any use to which the land may be put in future should not be taken into consideration in determining its value, but the valuation shall be determined according to the market value then existing of the land or building in the position that the matters then were. That seems to me quite clear on the terms of that sub-section and that was the view which was adopted by this Court in the case of Harish Chandra Neogy v. Secretary of State for India (1). The learned Judges in giving the judgment make the following remarks:—"Sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act precludes any valuation based on the most advantageous disposition of land, e.g., a valuation of bustee land on the supposition of its adaptability for use as building land to carry extensive structures which is the most advantageous use to which the land can be put in Calcutta." With these remarks, I entirely argee. It seems to me that sub-sec. (c) of sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act precludes evidence being given of the purposes to which bustee lands can be put in future. Then comes sub-sec. (d) of sec. 557. Sub-sec. (d) provides "the market value of the land or building shall, until the contrary is shown, be presumed, for the purposes of the said clause first of sub-sec. (1) of sec. 23" which means sec. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 "to be twenty-five times the annual value of the property, as entered in the Assessment-book prescribed by this Act." That of course is a rebuttable presumption, because the sub-section states that that presumption is to be made only until the contrary is shown and it is only until the contrary is shown that the Court is entitled to presume that twenty-five times the annual value of the property as entered in the Assessment-book is the value of the property within the meaning of sub-sec. (c). The only point in this case is, therefore, whether the learned Judge of the Court below rightly excluded the evidence, as appears, first of all, from page 141 of the printed paper-book relating to the under-tenants and the rents paid by them for land and structures thereupon. In my opinion, the learned Judge rightly refused to admit evidence relating to the under-tenants and the rents paid by them; and that matter is not relevant for the purpose of ascertaining the market value as defined by sub-sec. (c) of sec. 557. The other evidence which the learned Judge rejected was the questions put to a valuer with regard to sales of other lands in the neighbourhood which were not bustee lands. In ordinary cases, under sec. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, that evidence would have been admissible, but the case of Harish Chundra Neogy v. Secretary of State (1), to which I have already referred, shows quite clearly that, in the opinion of the learned Judges in that case such evidence is not admissible; and with that opinion I agree. It seems to me that the learned Judge was perfectly justified in refusing to allow these questions to be put to the witness Krishna Chandra Banerjee as appears from pages 143 and 144 of the paper-book before us. That being so, the learned Judge, in my opinion, proceeded on a correct basis to arrive at the value of this land as provided by sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act.

That being so, the present Appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 473 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. WOODROFFE, J. 1913, 13, March.

SURYA KANTA RAY CHOWDHURY, Defendant No 2, Appellant,

v.

FANI BHUSAN BANERJEE, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11—Res judicata—"Persons litigating under the same title"—Reversioner allowed to recover his moiety on proof of absence of legal necessity for sale by Hindu widow—Fresh suit on the other moiety falling in—Decision on the issue of legal necessity if res judicata.

Where the Plaintiff having sued the Defendant to recover possession as reversioners of a property alienated by a Hindu widow, obtained a decree in respect of a moiety of the property upon a finding that the sale was not for legal necessity, but the suit was dismissed as regards the other moiety on the ground that it had not passed to the Plaintiff, and afterwards this moiety too having passed to the Plaintiff, he again sued the Defendant for recovery of this moiety:

Held—That the decision in the previous suit that the sale was not for legal necessity was res judicata in the present suit, as the parties were litigating under the same title in both suits, viz., the Plaintiff as the owner of the reversion and the Defendant as purchaser from the widow.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 2nd of March 1911 against the decree of T. W. Richardson, Esq., District Judge Zilla 24-Parganas, dated the 14th of November 1910, affirming a decree of Babu Ashtosh Ghosh, Munsif at Basirhat, dated the 14th of April 1910.

The material facts as set out in the judgment of the District Judge were as follows:—

Mathura Nath died leaving a widow, Putimoni, who died in 1908, and as reversionary heirs the Plaintiff Respondent and his step-brother, Mani Mohan. The Appellant, a Defendant in the suit, purchased from Putimoni a property in which she had a widow's estate. In a previous suit instituted in 1902, during the course of which Plaintiff was a minor, represented by his mother and guardian, a claim was made on his behalf to the whole of the property on the basis that Mani Mohan had died before Putimoni. It appears that Mani Mohan had eloped with a woman and had not been heard of for a period of more than seven years before the date of the widow's death. It was contended that sec. 108 of the Evidence Act created the presumption that Moni Mohan was dead at that date. The suit was finally disposed of by the High Court on second appeal on the 31st January 1907. The litigation decided that the sale to the Appellant was not justified by legal necessity and the Plaintiff recovered a half share of the property. His claim to the remaining half share was disallowed on the ground that sec. 108 of the Evidence Act did not support the presumption sought to be rested upon it. In other words, the Plaintiff having failed to prove Mani Mohan's death was held not to be entitled to recover the half share which appertained to Mani Mohan, if Mani Mohan was alive. The present suit was instituted on the 15th July 1909. The Plaintiff's case now is that Mani Mohan having died in the year 1315, he is entitled as heir to recover Mani Mohan's share.

It was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the question of legal necessity for the sale having been determined adversely to the Defendant in the previous suit was res judicata in the present and that contention was upheld in both the lower Courts.

The Defendant thereupon preferred this Second Appeal.

Babus Nilmadhub Bose and Sarat Chandra Ghosh for the Appellant.

Babus Sarat Chandra Ray Chowdhury and Anilendra Nath Ray Chowdhury for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This Appeal arises out of a suit by one claiming to be entitled to a reversion, for recovery of possession of a moiety of a property, after setting aside an alienation purporting to have been made by the original owner's widow. Prior to the present suit, another had been instituted by the same Plaintiff against the same Defendant, for the purpose of recovering the property of which that now in suit forms a part. The issue was raised in that case as to whether there was legal necessity for the widow's alienation ; and it was held adversely to the present Defendant that there was no legal necessity for the purported alienation to him. But it was further held that the Plaintiff's suit must fail as to a moiety, because it was not shown that more than a moiety of the reversion had passed to him. The present suit was commenced in 1909 at a time when this moiety had passed to the Plaintiff so that he was in the position of a reversioner in regard to it, and in this suit he claims the moiety which he failed to recover in the former suit. He brings this suit against the same Defendant seeking to recover the moiety that was included in the former suit and impugns the same transaction as was successfully impugned in the former suit. In these circumstances, it has been contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the determination by the Court of the former suit as to the existence of the legal necessity concluded the matter. That view has been accepted by both the Courts.

It has been argued before us that the provisions of sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not cover the present case, for it is urged that it cannot be said that the parties are litigating under the same title. The learned vakils have not been able to bring to our notice any decision which defines with precision what the meaning is of the phrase "litigating under the same title." But in my opinion, these words cannot exclude the application of the rule of res judicata to the issue of legal necessity which has been raised. That issue was tried and determined between the present litigants in the former suit and in that suit as in this the Plaintiff has litigated as the owner of the reversion and the Defendant as the purchaser from the widow. This therefore is eminently a case where the doctrine of res judicata should apply.

We must, therefore, uphold the decree of the Lower Appellate Court and dismiss the Appeal with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

Judgment,	and ors., Plaintiffs,
9, March.	Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Pre-emption—Sale by kobala —Right if arises before or after registration—Mahomedan Law of sale or statute law superseding it applicable—Pre-emptor if loses right by rejecting previous offer—Waiver.

Where a kobala was executed by a Mahomedan in favour of a stranger, but possession was not delivered:

Held—That a co-sharer of the vendor who did not perform the necessary talabs until he became aware of its registration was entitled to maintain a suit for pre-emption, although he had previously come to know of the execution of the kobala.

Per CARNDUFF, J.—As under Mahomedan Law the right of pre-emption does not arise until after the cessation of the vendor's title, the point of time at which the right is to be taken to arise at the present day should be determined by the statutory law of sale which has superseded the Mahomedan law.
